Direction by Joseph Henabery.
Length, 5,870 feet.

The Story

When Mary Dawson, partner of Boston Blackie in high-class crime, learns that Franklin has double crossed her and is sending her father to prison for a crime of which he is innocent, she decides to get even. With Blackie she sails on the ship that is to bring back a huge sum of gold to Franklin. She wins the confidence of the purser and succeeds in getting a large share of the gold. She and Blackie rejoice over their victory but are informed that the purser has been involved and accused of the theft. Mary would not deliberately thrust her guilt upon him and so gives up the whole sum to free the innocent man. She and Blackie face married life cheerfully with $20.

Nine reels that seem no longer than six. That is the way Cecil B. DeMille's "Manslaughter" strikes you. It tells a gripping story based on a vital theme, and holds your attention. Added to this is the work of an excellent cast and a number of flashbacks to typical DeMille scenes of gorgeousness and splendor, showing a revel in ancient Rome.

There is tense drama in the situation of a district attorney sending to prison the woman he loves, then going to the dogs himself and later being regenerated by this same woman.—C. S. S.

"The Cub Reporter"

Richard Talmadge Offers Lively Entertainment in Phil Goldstone Production

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Richard Talmadge's latest escapade on the screen is quite as entertaining as his previous pictures. That, to anyone who has followed the energetic young star's achievements, is a more than fair recommendation. Similiar to his other successes, "The Cub Reporter" is a vehicle designed especially to support the star's acrobatic talents, along with a lively story that gets just far enough away from facts to be interesting.

For instance, when the cub reporter gives seventeen (or more) Chinamen the biggest fight of their wicked lives no one could be expected to believe it ever happened, but just the mere uncertainty as to what Talmadge will do next is thrilling. No cub reporter fighting for his job ever had more adventure and romance than the hero of this picture.

In the first part of the picture Talmadge takes a leap from the top of a moving street car into an automobile and from then on jumps from one danger to another. The Chinatown of "The Cub Reporter," is realistic and grim. The two crooks who steal the precious jewel, the eye of Buddha, are convincingly played by Edith Hallor and Lewis Mason and the picture has been splendidly directed by Jack Dillon.

It should be easy to sell this picture on the star's stunts. Many of them are new, and all are entertaining, as they are a consistent part of a thrilling story.

The Cast

Dick Harvey .....Richard Talmadge
Marian Rhodes .....Jean Calhoun
Harrison Rhodes .....E. B. Tilton
The Crooks...Lewis Mason and Ethel Hallor
Mandarin .....W. Hummel

Scenario by George Elwood Jenks.
Direction by Jack Dillon.
Length, 5,000 Feet.

The Story

Harvey, of the Morning Times, is called upon to do one daredevil stunt after another in his efforts to recover the Sacred Jewel of Buddha. He gets into a series of remarkable adventures. He dives head first through a skylight into the den of the Tong and gets away with the Jewel. Then he braves the underground passages of the Chinese underworld to rescue the girl stolen by the Tong and held as hostage for the return of the jewel. He proves too much for a whole squad of Chinamen and escapes with the beautiful girl.

Ince Produces Powerful Story for First National

Reviewed by Elmer H. Mayer

In "Skin Deep," the powerful story of a man's moral regeneration, and a woman's treachery, Thomas H. Ince has produced for First National a film that in its straightforward manner of story telling, stands alone in the field. It's an audience picture, if there ever was one. There is real drama and life throughout the six and a half reels, and plenty of moments of suspense. The action is smooth and padding has been forgotten in the makeup of this production. It is real life, and is a worthy successor to Ince's "Hail the Woman."

"Skin Deep" carries a lesson to the American people, who are quick to forget the boys who fought for them "over there." It also depicts on the screen, probably for the first time, an operation in plastic surgery, which science made great headway during the war, and was instrumental in re-making faces which were horribly shattered.

Milton Sills deserved to be starred. His work is always good, and in this instance his performance leaves nothing to be desired. His dual role is a difficult one, but he handles it to perfection. Florence Vidor is as sweet as ever in a small part. Marcia Manon as Sadie Doyle, Bud's unfaithful wife, deserves special mention, as does also Charles Clary as the District Attorney. The succession of thrills surrounding Bud Doyle's escape from prison would be hard to beat. Particularly effective is the one where the hero climbs a wall, jumps on a passing train, and then grabs a rope ladder hanging from an airplane in which some convicts are attempting to escape. The machine falls because of the added weight, lands in a treetop and the hero is knocked senseless and later found by a surgeon.

The Cast

Length, 6,500 Feet.

The Story

Heroic Bud Doyle, American doughboy, at home is a member of the underworld. After the war, when Bud is home again, his wife, with members of the McQuarg gang, frame a robbery on Bud. He is convicted and sentenced for five years to the penitentiary. After serving part of his time his wife visits him at the prison, tells him that the District Attorney has evil designs on her, and with the help of the gang aids him to escape so that he may kill the District Attorney; the gang hoping by this move that he will be given a life sentence in the "pen." thus getting him out of their way forever. The escape is effected, Bud is seriously injured in a fall from an aeroplane, and is found lying in a field by a surgeon, who later performs an operation in plastic surgery, and as a result Bud's face is remade. He later returns to his old haunts, where not even his wife recognizes him. He assists the District Attorney to round up the gang, catches them with $60,000 pilfered from the fund for disabled soldiers. Needless to say, Bud sends his wife to Reno, and goes back to the nurse who read to him when he was in the hospital recuperating from his operation.

"Big Stakes"

Spanish Color and American Action Give Life to East Coast Production With J. B. Warner.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

J. B. Warner is starred here in an offering that should be generally pleasing. It has plenty of atmosphere and color and starts out with a scene of brisk action that is indicative of everything that follows. It has black villainy set off by bright Spanish romance and an American sense of humor and with a popular star like J. B. Warner it should meet with success.

Because the production has been well shaded and done in rather dashing style the fact that the story is not startling nor profound will not make much difference. It is diverting and shows good showmanship. A Spanish dance is hinted at but not actually shown, the scenes showing the white riders add to the spectacular value and the game of the brincadore or Spanish jumping bean is another atmospheric touch. The sportsmanslike ending to the game brings the melodrama to a sudden end and shows an originality that is evident in a number of places.

J. B. Warner plays the Senor Americano with pleasing style and a sense of humor instead of swashbuckling the part. The performance of Wilamae Carson seems strained at times but on the whole the supporting cast is good.

The Cast

Adapted From the Story "High Stakes," by Earl Wayland Bowman.
Scenario by Howard Clark.
Direction Not Credited.
Length, 4,700 Feet.

The Story

Mercedes, daughter of a ranch owner on the Mexican border, is betrothed to El Capitan Montaya, but after meeting the handsome American cowboy Gregory, she is not sure that she loves the captain. Gregory and she are caught one evening at their rendezvous, and the captain plans revenge. He brings Mercedes and her lover to a remote place and threatens to turn a dangerous reptile loose on Gregory. The American appeals to the captain's gambling instinct by suggesting a game of the jumping bean, the loser to be placed at the mercy of the reptile. Gregory wins, but the captain's courage moves him and he decides to put it up to Mercedes as to whom she will have. Meantime Mary, the little waitress in the town cafe, has sent for Gregory's aid, as she has been imprisoned by the night riders. Mercedes chooses El Capitan, and Gregory's friendship for Mary promises him happiness.

"Youth Must Have Love"

Shirley Mason is Starred in Western Produced by Fox and Contributes Pictorially

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Less sentimental than the title indicates, this Fox offering is a melodramatic account of a frame-up and the hunt for an innocent man. There is apparently little reason for the title unless because it is suggestive of the type of subject which best sets off the star and while it has decided drawing powers it proves itself so inapt that it is subject to criticism.

The picture has an average amount of action and more than average suspense. Shirley Mason has a less dominant role than usual and is really more of a support of the leading man than she is the center of interest. She has several charming scenes in which she proves that her appeal is as certain as ever. Wallace MacDonald has the most important role and helps greatly to sustain the interest through parts of the story, where the plot is so familiar that there is little in the way of surprises.

While neither the story nor the performance is distinguished, the picture has a quota of entertainment, and by using discrimination in exploiting the star, as she appears in some of her most alluring costumes, it should attract attention.

The Cast

Della Marvin.....Shirley Mason
Earl Stannard.....Wallace McDonald
Frank Hibbard.....Landis Stevens
Austin Hibbard.....Wilson Hummel

Story and Scenario by Dorothy Yost.
Direction by Joseph Franz.
Length, 4,368 Feet.

The Story

Earl Stannard travels fifty miles from his father's ranch to get even with Austin Hibbard, who has cheated them in the shipment of cattle. He has a fight with Hibbard, who is knocked senseless, and while he goes to get water to revive him, Austin's nephew Frank appears and in a fight with his uncle shoots him. Frank persuades his companion, Marvin, to accuse Stannard of the murder. Marvin, however, is only half willing and aids Stannard in escaping because his daughter Della falls in love with Stannard. This leads to a feud between Frank and Marvin, the capture of Stannard, his escape and the final confession of truth from Marvin, which clears Stannard and convicts Frank.

"The Isle of Doubt"

Decidedly Entertaining Treatment of Wife-Taming Theme in Playgoer's Picture

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

It's the old lure of the theme of wife-taming that insures the entertainment value of "The Isle of Doubt." Splendid directing and a likable cast combine to make a story which is not entirely new in motive a decided success. Whether you take the subject-matter seriously or lightly is a question of individual reaction, but at any rate the production reveals an unmistable knowledge of what proves interesting on the screen.

Wyndham Standing, who disciplines with smiles and threats, is a character who will surely be popular. His performance of the modern cave man is almost perfect. Quite as appropriately cast is Dorothy MacKaill for the part of the girl who stays spoiled as long as she can, and then changes not because of fear, but because of love. Her nonchalant manner is charming and somewhat different. George Fawcett is another efficient member of the cast.

Several striking points of appeal are found, such as the Hawaiian ball, the cruise on the yacht and the desert isle drama, the last of which brings about some amusing situations. These features permit good exploitation, but the theme should be kept paramount.

The Cast

Dean Deland.....Wyndham Standing
Eleanor.....Dorothy Mackaill
Her Father.....George Fawcett
Her Mother.....Marie R. Burke

Story and Scenario by Derek Bram.

Length, 5,483 feet.

The Story

When Burton Warburton dies, leaving his wife and daughter almost penniless, Eleanor marries Dean Deland, a wealthy bachelor. She plans to make his life so miserable that he will divorce her for a large settlement and then she can marry Gerry Patten, a penniless idler.

Dean learns of the plot, gets Eleanor and Gerry on board his yacht, forcing Gerry to work in the hold. They land on a tropical island. Eleanor is angry and rebellious; Gerry sullen and vindictive. Eleanor is forced to cook or starve. Gerry displays himself in his true colors and Eleanor soon learns the real worth of the two men, but she remains cold and distant toward her husband until one day Gerry gets Dean's gun and shoots him. The cartridges were blank, but Eleanor's fright broke down the barriers of doubt between husband and wife.

Backgrounds eminently representative of what the title suggests, set off this average story in picturesque style. A good cast is a further reason why the familiar plot manages to hold the interest even though there is not much uncertainty as to the outcome.

Dustin Farnum's performance and personality is made the more striking by the presence of Walter MacGrail in an antagonistic role. The latter draws a graphic sketch of the man who is frail in body and soul. Irene Rich as the third angle of interest gives such spontaneous expression of her sincerity that she adds greatly to the picture's appeal. Frank Campeau, W. J. Ferguson and Charles French also deserve praise.

The scenes have a grandeur of height and are so well lighted that they are one of the biggest attractions. The story relates the adventures of a Westerner who has to see his sweetheart married to a cad, and afterward tries to save her from unhappiness by allowing the suspicion to rest on himself for a crime of which her husband is guilty. A thrilling rescue preventing a railroad accident, and later the mobbing of the Sheriff's headquarters are the biggest scenes, and these are well done.

Jerry Smallbones.....Frank Campeau
Peter Blunt.....W. J. Ferguson
Sheriff.....Charles French

Story by Ridgwell Cullum.
Scenario by Jack Strumwasser.
Direction by Bernard J. Durning.
Length, 4,735 Feet.

The Story

The friendship between Jim Thorpe and his cousin Ned comes to an end when Ned double-crosses Jim by taking his sweetheart. Eve Marsham. Jim goes to South America, and upon returning learns that Eve is not happy, as Ned is proving a spendthrift and gambler. He has secretly robbed the stage coach and Jim learns of this. Ned steals Jim's horse one day, and the sheriff's posse follow up the coach robbery and believe Jim is guilty when they see the horse. To save Eve from humiliation Jim hesitates in telling the truth, but is nearly mobbed by so doing. An outsider who knows of Ned's guilt intercedes, and after a fight with the culprit, shoots him. Ned confesses before his death, and Eve realizes that Jim is the man she loves.

"Hound of the Baskervilles"

F. B. O. Picturization of Sherlock Holmes' Story Seems Sure Winner

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

The true atmosphere of "The Hound of the Baskervilles" one of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's most famous Sherlock, Holmes' stories, is found in its picturization under the same title by Director Maurice Elvey, for Film Booking Offices of America. Here is a picture that should please hundreds of thousands of picture patrons who like the Sherlock Holmes' stories, and bring in good, hard cash of the realm to exhibitors.

The cast does excellent work, with, perhaps, Eille Norwood as the great detective, Hubert Willis as Dr. Watson, and Frederick Raynham as the butler, excelling. Elvey's direction shows in every scene, particularly those at night when the mysterious, fiery beast is roaming over the moors. The adaptation has been cleverly done, so as to preserve the mystery until the end and yet not leave the spectator bewildered by the transitions of the plot.

Put on by Samuel Rothafel in New York's Capitol Theatre, the picture engrossed the undivided attention of the audience. At times a spectator's cough made nearby people jump, so thoroughly absorbed in the picture were they. The scenes of deaths, that could have been made gruesome, are deftly handled, toning down the horror that a director less expert than Elvey might have created.

"The Hound of the Baskervilles" seems to be one of those pictures which, it can truly be said, will please every audience. Considering the exploitation value of the author's name, it certainly ought to draw the people into the theatre. And after they are inside, they will be glad they came.

The Cast

Sherlock Holmes.....Eille Norwood
Dr. Watson.....Hubert Willis
Sir Henry Baskerville.....Rex McDougal
Osborne.....Frederick Raynham
Dr. Mortimer.....Allen Jeayes
John Stapleton.....Lewis Gilbert
Beryl Stapleton.....Betty Campbell

From the Story by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle.
Directed by Maurice Elvey.
Length, About 4,900 Feet.

The Story

The story has to do with the sudden deaths of the heads of the Baskervilles, an old English family. Superstition has it that the baying of a fiery hound on the moors presages the deaths. When an American succeeds to the title, Sherlock Holmes is called on to solve the mystery and finds that a relative of the family, who would succeed to the title with the passing of the American, is guilty of the murders. He dies a horrible death in the quicksands of the moors after his hound has been shot. The American learns that the murderer's wife loves him and has saved his life.

"Timothy's Quest" is a showman's answer to the demand for the type of picture that a mother will recommend to her children. Not that the appeal is limited to the younger generation, for the story is so human and sincere that anyone of any age will appreciate it. American Releasing Corporation is the distributor. —M. K.

"Confidence"

Entertaining Treatment of New Theme in Universal Picture With Herbert Rawlinson.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

One of the most acceptable pictures which has starred Herbert Rawlinson is now being offered by Universal in "Confidence." This is chiefly because the story has such a good point. Anyone who is interested in the psychology of self-assurance as a business aid, and this would seem to include almost every class of patrons, will be entertained.

Not as propaganda but more as a side issue to the story, the idea that the imaginary possession of wealth gives a man the same confidence that the actual possession of it, is presented. Safe in the belief that he has found a fortune the timid hero suddenly gains so much self-confidence that everyone has faith in him whereas before he was considered something to be laughed at. As a matter of fact his hastily acquired wealth was stolen from him almost as soon as he found it. This, of course, he did not know.

The novelty of theme is only one of the several angles of interest. A number of important characters take part and will recall amusing types that are known to the average person. The drama is good and the climax is excellent. The comedy will be welcome and a picturesque touch is supplied in depicting the party at the Wiggins home. Fine directing and an intelligent cast are largely responsible for the picture's appeal.

The Cast

Length, 4,787 Feet.

The Story

Confidence in himself was the one quality which Bob Mortimer lacked. While on his way to Doleville, where he had to sell the leading manufacturer, Wiggins, or lose his job, his travellling bag was exchanged for another's. This he does not discover till sometime later, when he finds a lot of money in the bag. The town snoopers find it out and get him to back a big industrial investment. Meantime the owner of the money takes back the bag and gives Mortimer his own, but Mortimer, glorying in his new belief of wealth, is putting over a big deal. The village Romeo tries to upset everything, and it looks as if Mortimer's reputation were doomed, including particularly his standing with Wiggins's pretty daughter. But he has a chance to prove his integrity, and the owner of the mysterious money proves a good friend.

"Against the Law"

An Epco Foreign Picture That Is a Good Example of What Is Not Screen Entertainment

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

"Against the Law" is appropriately titled for it should be against the laws of the moving picture business to offer such a vehicle as this one. The effort at entertainment is sincere, but only in that respect is this film entitled to consideration. Insofar as the picture is concerned it is amateurish in acting, erratically staged and pitiably poorly directed.

To begin with, "Against the Law" is a foreign picture that is as foreign from the American idea of screen entertainment as the North Pole is from civilization. It is pathetic to see those players romping about here and there actually convinced that they are entertaining those who look on. Their make-up is about as realistic as that of some choristers this reviewer has seen in the cheaper type of Southern tab troupes.

The story is aimed at mystifying and in this respect it is successful, for the whole thing is a mystery to the spectator. It deals with international crooks. They commute about Europe, stepping about in record time. The titling is about as boring as the action itself.

"Against the Law" might be acceptable somewhere, but as legitimate screen entertainment it represents a vain struggle on the part of a serious director to cope with our mystery pictures. There is not a single player in the lengthy cast that is worthy of mention.

News and Reviews of Short Subjects and Serials

Universal Inaugurates Fall Schedule with Three New Series of Two-Reelers

Marking the beginning of what is claimed will prove an unusually fine series of two reelers, Universal announces "White and Yellow," the first of the Jack London Fish Patrol stories starring Roy Stewart which is released during the current week.

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, recognizes the value of short subjects, and that it is just as important for exhibitors to have high class one and two reelers as it is to have effective features and that the right kind of short subjects have big box-office pulling power. Therefore in planning the Autumn releases he instructed that extra attention be given to make one and two reelers that would hold their own with the best type of features, from the standpoint of casts, story and direction.

As a result the short subject production department has been reorganized and its scope broadened, new units added with new stars and directors. The first series under this new plan was "The Leather Pushers" which is already proving a big drawing card.

The Fish Patrol series is based on Jack London's stories of the stirring adventures of a fearless body of fishermen. Jack Mulhall is the star of this series with Louise Lorraine playing opposite and Eddie Kull is directing. These stories are widely known and have been translated into many foreign languages. There will be eight pictures, and the second release, dated October 9 is "The Channel Raiders."

In addition to this series, Universal is also making a "Lumberjack" series starring Roy Stewart. It is being produced in the lumber camps of the California mountains under the direction of Robert Hill and will deal with the thrilling adventures of these hardy men. The first released is scheduled for September 25 and is titled "Giants of the Open."

Universal has also re-edited a number of Harry Carey Westerns made several years ago, starting with "The Wrong Man" October 2. Three comedy companies are also busy, one headed by Neely Edwards making tramp comedies, a second starring Charles Malina and his trained bulls and a third starring Lewis Sargent who was prominent in "Huckleberry Finn." The Sargent series will be known as "Messenger Boy" comedies, written and directed by Scott Darling. The first of this series is "His First Job" released September 25.

Another Good Leo Maloney Two-Reeler on Attractive List of Pathe Films

Another of the Range Rider series of two-reel westerns starring Leo Maloney heads Pathe's schedule for week of October 1. It is titled "Deputized" and is a snappy story, full of thrills and action with plenty of hard fighting and fast riding. It is well up to the excellent standard set by the previous issues in this series.

The current Hal Roach comedy is "Face the Camera." It features Paul Parrott assisted by Jobyna Ralston and deals with the difficulties of a photographer who tries to take pictures of a bathing girl parade. Various laughable complications of course ending with the destruction of the wonderful film by fire.

Episode twelve of "The Timber Queen" serial shows Ruth Roland lured into the shack of a Chinese smuggler. This shack is on rollers and the episode ends with it moving rapidly toward the brink of a deep chasm.

Also on the program, is an Aesop Film Fable drawn by Cartoonist Paul Terry. It is "The Big Flood" and deals in a humorous manner with an ark full of animals and what happens to them when the flood comes.

"Pay Your Dues" is a reissued Harold Lloyd one-reeler in which he is assisted by Bebe Daniels and Snub Pollard. It concerns the initiation into a secret society, contains many laughs and clever situations and is one of the best of the Lloyd reissues.

Two regular issues of the Pathe News filled with live subjects and one issue of Topics of the Day are on the program, together with a Pathe Review which shows charming photographic silhouettes, colored views of Tunisia, a clever cartoon section and a good dog story.

Burr Engages Mary Anderson to Appear in His Series of All-Star Comedies

Mary Anderson has been engaged by C. C. Burr to appear in the series of twelve two-reel "All-Star Comedies" along with Raymond McKee and Charlie Murray. This makes three well-known players in this series, all of whom have been starred.

Miss Anderson has already begun work at Mr. Burr's Glendale studios under the direction of Gregory LaCava who was associated with Johnny Hines in the production of the Torchy comedies and "Sure-Fire Flint."

It is announced that this series will consist of high class comedies and will be issued triumvirate of stars and believes that in this one a month. Mr. Burr is proud of this series he has one of the best comedy producing casts ever assembled and is confident that the series will be a great success.

Dick Friel, long associated with Dub Fisher in the creation of the Mutt and Jeff cartoons has been engaged to furnish the fun-producing end of this series and Charles Gilson and Neil Sullivan will be the cameramen.

Mr. Burr is elated at securing Mary Anderson for this series and believes that with the other two stars, appearing in snappy comedies with good stories and plenty of laughs, produced in high class manner, he will have a big box-office attraction. She is well known to theatre-goers having appeared in a large number of successful productions.

Saw Their Worth

The manager of the Sheridan Square Theatre, in Pittsburgh, appreciates the value of a good short subject as a business getter. This house runs pictures and vaudeville and recently two lines of a three line electric sign in front of the house was devoted to featuring a Universal two-reeler, "Ridin' Through," starring Art Acord. The other line was used for a headline vaudeville act.

In addition to the electric sign one half of the paper display space in front of the theatre was given to the Art Acord picture. This theatre manager, being a real showman, cashed in on this star's popularity with his patrons.

This is good work. Don't be afraid to play up your short subjects. Select those which will appeal to your audiences and go the limit with them in your advertising and exploitation. Don't make the mistake of considering them only as fillers.

Test Audience Likes New Series

Frederick G. Becker announces that arrangements have been made by which Bessie Love will portray the leading feminine role in support of little Arthur Trimble in the entire series of twelve two-reel cemedy dramas. The third of this series is now being filmed and Robert N. Lee is preparing the continuity for the fourth one. This series will be marketed as "The Strange Adventures of Prince Courageous" and the second subject has just been completed.

A unique stunt was used in showing the first of these subjects at the Granada Theatre in Hollywood recently. The audience was given ballots on which to express their approval or disapproval and at both afternoon and evening performances it is said a large majority of the audience expressed themselves as being pleased.

Oddities in Film

Among the interesting items in the current issue of the Urban Movie Chats is one showing how beachcombers at a seashore resort search the beach at the end of a bathing season and gather valuables and odds and ends which the visitors have lost. Another section deals with the Sealeyham dogs which are bred in New South Wales and used for hunting badgers, and are now being imported into this country and used in the chase.

New Travelaugh

"Such is Life on the Riviera" is the current Hy Mayer Travelaugh release on the Film Booking Offices of America short subject program. This is the twelfth of these single reel cartoon-scenic novelties to be issued by F. B. O.

This reel shows the beauty of the "playground of Europe" as well as illustrating the quaint types of peasants.

Fox Educationals Instructive and Entertaining

After a year of preparation and research work Fox Film Corporation has inaugurated an educational division as an active department of its huge motion picture enterprises. To pave the way for this big undertaking Mr. Fox a year ago turned over to the educational division the tremendous resources of his entire establishment—studios. equipment, staff of experts, laboratories, title writers, etc.—giving this division every facility for turning out the highest type of both original and novel educational films to meet the requirements not only of exhibitors, but of the educational field as well.

To this task Mr. Fox called upon the two hundred and fifty cameramen comprising his staff in all parts of the world, men who are always alert for items of interest, to be on the lookout and provide all possible subjects of educational value with thrills and interest, to serve in bringing to the screen short subjects covering travel, geography, science, natural history, sports and athletics, history, invention, medicine, surgery, and progress in society, politics, music and art.

This is the first time that the entire resources of one of the largest producing and distributing companies has been made available on such a comprehensive basis in the inauguration and maintaining of an educational program.

The subjects will not be cut to a uniform footage, but will run from 450 to 1,000 feet in length. This has been done so that the entire footage of each subject may be utilized for live matter of action and interest.

The production of the educational pictures has been entrusted by Mr. Fox to the competent hands of Herbert E. Hancock, who is assisted by Frank E. Tierney. The Fox educational sales organization is headed by Edward J. O'Donnell.

There are now ready for release on September 24 the first series of six educational subjects as follows: "Alligator Hunting and Farming" 475 feet, "Thrills and Spills" 400 feet, "Volcanoes of the World" 925 feet, "Water Sports" 485 feet, "A Story of Ice" 550 feet, and "Ancient Rome" 863 feet. In addition to these it is announced that about thirty more subjects will be released at intervals during the coming season.

A number of these subjects have already been shown for review and they give high promise for what is to come, both from an educational viewpoint and from the standpoint of interest and thrills that will hold an audience. They are novel and full of instructive matter, excitement and interest and should find a welcome in every class of house.

The underlying idea in establishing this division appears to have been not to provide films dealing with cut and dried subjects whose only purpose is to educate, but to provide matter which will not only instruct the spectators on a great variety of subjects, but which will entertain and thrill them as well. In other words, to provide subjects which while they satisfy from an entertainment standpoint are at the same time increasing your store of knowledge,—short doses of education mixed with interesting information and entertainment.

Exhibitors can advantageously add these short subjects to their programs with the feeling that they will prove attractive to the general public and provide a nice balance to the remainder of their bills. At the same time, they will have a tendency to attract to the theatre a certain class who have been inclined to hold aloof from motion pictures and to win the approval of clergymen, educators and welfare workers, and their co-operation as well.

"Mass Play" Is New Sport Review

"Mass Play" is the title of Goldwyn's latest issue of The Sport Review, edited by Grantland Rice and produced by Jack Eaton for Artclass Pictures. It is devoted to a picturization of mass athletics at Culver Military school in Indiana.

Most of the exercises take place in a nearby lake where two score students participate in the crack-the-whip dive.

All kinds of swimming tests are indulged in. War canoe and cutter racing is another form of the mass play at aquatic sports. The younger students, in boy scout uniform, are shown also doing interesting stunts.

Next "Hallroom" Is "The New Mama"

The second release of the new Hallroom Boys comedy series will be "The New Mama" instead of "A Tailor Made Chauffeur" as previously announced. C. B. C. announces that the latter film will be the third release of the series. "The New Mama" features Sid Smith as Percy; George Williams as Ferdie, and Al Santell directed, while Harry Cohn supervised the production.

Pathe Offers Rogers

Pathe announces for fall release two two-reel comedies, starring Will Rogers. They are "The Ropin' Fool," which was successfully presented at the Capitol Theatre, New York, some time ago, and "Fruits of Faith," which has not yet been publicly shown.

"The Ropin' Fool" contains some interesting slow motion views of lariat throwing and also shows Rogers doing a lot of stunts with a rope, cowboy fashion. It is all handled in the star's inimitably humorous vein. In "Fruits of Faith" the star appears as a tramp, and it is said to be a unique offering filled with genuine humor and pathos.

"The Tiger of San Pedro"

This two-reel drama released by Educational is an excellent number of the Sherlock Holmes series of detective stories. The mystery and suspense is well maintained and the spectator is kept in the dark almost until the final scene as to the underlying motives. Eille Norwood's work as the celebrated detective is very good and his disguise excellent and the supporting cast adequate. The story holds the attention. It deals with a mysterious murder. From the fact that long scratches appear on the dead man's face, and the information contained in the fragments of a note, Sherlock Holmes is able to solve the mystery. There is an excellent fight scene with a surprise ending.—C. S. S.

"Dandy Dan"

Sid Smith is responsible for some clever acrobatic comedy in this Fox offering, "Dandy Dan—He's a Detective Man." He has the part of a boob detective and starts out with the courage of the ignorant. The comedy is successful because it is full of surprises. There are many new touches that offer if not hilarious laughs, a type of light amusement that goes well anywhere. The slapstick stunts are not so new, but they serve to give the number a wider appeal.—M. K.

"Let 'Er Run"

There is a lot of clever and humorous action in this two reel Christie comedy featuring Dorothy Devore who is charming as usual. It all revolves around a horse race and there are some exceedingly fine shots of the race. Dorothy's father tells her sweetheart he must win the race in order to marry her. He of course succeeds through a clever ruse and the manner in which he turns the tables on the old man is well done. About the weakest point in the film is the fact that his ruse of whitewashing a black horse is so crudely done that it would not deceive the father and race attendants who know horses. Nevertheless the idea furnishes a basis for a number of laughs, especially when the rain begins to wash the whitewash off.—C. S. S.

"Some Wild Babies"

This Urban Popular Classic takes the spectator on a trip through the woodlands, and gives various views of its wild creatures. It has been done with great care and skill and shows birds and beasts in their native state and in the act of raising their families.

Feathered and furred birds and animals from all climes have been caught by the camera, and the world-wide survey gives intimate views of wild creatures all the way from Tibet to the African jungles and the Australian plains.—T. S. daP.

"Through English Eyes"

America's famous points of beauty, both natural and man-made are illustrated here, as they impress a visitor from Great Britain. Some unusually effective shots are included. The sky-line of New York and the sky-line of the Rocky Mountains are photographed with fine appreciation and the note of conservatism running through the subtitles expressing the admiration of an undemonstrative traveller, adds somehow to the appeal. It is in one reel, distributed by the Post Nature Pictures Corp.—M. K.

Starland Review No. 9

This issue of Starland Revue includes a group of scenes that are bound to be of interest to patrons of the average picture theatre, as it embraces episodes made up of stage people who would generally not come to the eye of film devotees. In the order of their appearance, the scenes are a little by-play between Nikita Balief and Morris Gest, producer and presenter, respectively, of the "Chauve Souris," on the roof of the Century Theatre; Neysa McMein, the prominent illustrator; girls from the chorus of Ed Wynn's Carnival showing how to fool the edict in some seaside resorts that forbid walking through the streets in bathing suits; the delightful "Hobo Dance," from Michie Ito's "Pinwheel Revue;" Billy Arnold, well-known cabaret star, displaying his technical ability in the art of make-up, and, to finish, Veronica Marquise, another cabaret star and well-known toe dancer, does a few difficult steps of a toe dancing jig. (Released by F. B. O.)—F. T.

"Screen Snapshots No. 9"

Keeping up the entertainment value established in previous issues of this fan magazine of the screen, distributed by Pathe, this issue shows some attractive views of Betty Compson in costumes of other days, Pearl White returning from Europe, Snowy Baker romping with a kangaroo, Wesley Barry and Niles Welch doing a stunt scene; also a picnic, at which a number of other stars are featured. —C. S. S.

"The Radio Hound"

Brownie, the wonderful dog which is starred in this series of two-reel Century Comedies, as usual, does some clever stunts in this number. Particularly good is the way he acts in trying to elude a man who is chasing him, ending in his locking the man in a barn. Brownie is equipped with a radio phone outfit which enables him to keep in touch with his boy friends. This gives opportunity for some original stuff. There are a number of laughs and this subject is very interesting.—C. S. S.

"Deputized"

Keeping up the good impression produced by the previous issues in this series of Pathe two-reel Westerns, starring Leo Maloney, this number has thrills and action enough for the average five-reeler of this type. It is built on the theme of unreasonable and practically unfounded jealousy, and strikingly shows the awful results to which it may lead. There is also good fighting and good horsemanship in this picture and it should find a welcome with any audience that likes Westerns.—C. S. S.

"The Big Flood"

Paul Terry has used his keen imagination with amusing effect in this Aesop Film Fable depicting the great flood. He has indicated the reaction which Noah and his menageric had to the news that the storm was approaching. It is a highly original number, starting in with a rainfall literally of cats and dogs and ending with the comic parade of all the animals into the ark except the skunks. A Pathe release.—M. K.

"Pathe Review No. 174"

An unusually fine example of beautiful photography is the "Photographic Gems" section of this reel, showing the "Painted Waters of the Adirondacks." There is a unique section showing the funeral ceremonies of a chieftain in Dutch East Indies, clever modeling in clay, and a color section showing views of Athens, Greece.—C. S. S.

"The Radio King"

It was of course inevitable that someone would produce a radio serial, not only because the prevailing wide interest in this subject makes it good showmanship to do so, but also because of the almost limitless possibilities of this comparatively new scientific development makes it particularly fitting for producing mysterious, weird and unusual effects such as delight serial fans.

Universal, in "The Radio King" featuring Roy Stewart, has taken full advantage of the possibilities and live showmen will find this serial a box-office magnet, due both to the wide appeal and the exceedingly large range of excellent exploitation possibilities.

An innovation is the fact that its length is only ten episodes. Screening of the first three shows it has snap, unusual thrills, and weird effects. A striking feature is the strong suspense in which the spectator is held, you never know just what mysterious or spectacular thing will happen next.

The story deals with the attempt of a master detective, a man of science to overcome an equally brilliant inventor who is a criminal and whose warped mind caused him to seek to overthrow society, his genius making him the leader of a band of anarchists. The action hinges on the fight of these two for the possession of a secret invention by which radio messages may be recalled from the air. The success of the criminal right at the start succeeds in nearly electrocuting the detective so that he has only a few months to live adds an unusual note and focuses the interest with a bang.

The idea of detectives and criminals employing science against each other is not new, but the introduction of radio, the use of the latest developments along this line and the utilization of the possibilities of this subject which are still speculative, multiply and hold the interest.

Roy Stewart as the detective and Sidney Bracey as the master criminal head the cast and finely portray their roles. The same is true of the lesser characters which include Louise Lorraine in the role opposite Stewart, together with Al Smith, Clark Comstock, Ernest Butterworth, Jr., and others. Credit is due to Robert F. Hill for the manner in which he has directed the serial and Robert Dillon for the story and scenario.—C. S. S.

"Bending the Twig"

Lessons in hygiene are given in this Urban Popular Classic. Children are taken as the subject. That cleanliness is one of the chief rules of health is depicted by the showing of a little child being given a thorough ablution, to which she seems not in the least to object.

The harm of eating between meals is illustrated by "Willie" being called in to supper, but declining the invitation because he was "full up" of apples which he had been devouring in an orchard all afternoon. The best sort of food for children is milk, according to this film, and it gives other interesting information along the same lines. —T. S. daP.

The bathing girl pageant alone should sell this Hal Roach comedy, featuring Paul Parrott. His charming accomplice is Jobyna Ralston, always in the front ranks of the parade, where she belongs. The story is a burlesque on the boom camera man trying to get material for the film weeklies and never managing to get stationed at the right angle. Finally when he succeeds in getting a few shots of a most beautiful girl, his film escapes from the camera and burns up the town. This Pathe release, in one reel, has every reason to be popular.—M. K.

"Such Is Life in Amsterdam and Alkmaar"

If you'd like a sightseeing trip through these two Dutch cities, you couldn't do any better than to take it through the eyes of the camera in this Hy Mayer Travelaugh. In fact, the camera way is preferable for it does away with the inconveniences of actual travel, and yet gives a clear insight into the lives of the picturesque Dutch people and their quaint cities. Amsterdam is shown built along somewhat the same lines as Venice with canals running alongside the houses. But it is seemingly a busy and prosperous place.

Alkmaar's chief industry is cheese-making and the different phases of the business are all brought out in the film. It is an F. B. O. release.—T. S. daP.

"For Rent—Haunted"

Johnny Jones, typifying the enterprising youth of this country, always ready to champion the weak and punish the evildoers is the central figure in a thoroughly enjoyable comedy here. More like a short comedy drama than a comedy, the subject is tinctured with just enough seriousness to be effective. Johnny and his pals, the most charming of whom is Gertrude Messinger, contrive to make the town skinflint suffer by supplying the spooks in the house which he is trying to rent. When he offers fifty dollars to the one who can rent it, they realize how seriously their mischievousness has resulted. But they plan ingeniously to get the fifty dollars and succeed. A Pathe two-reeler.—M. K.

"The Frozen North"

This two-reel First National comedy, starring Buster Keaton, is a broad burlesque on the prevalent "snow" pictures. In the foreword Buster says that after seeing most of the bad men of the films he believes he is as bad as any of them. There are the usual mounted police, frontier dance halls, dog sleds, etc., but the action is, of course, caricatured and will get many laughs. One of the best bits is the nondescript collection of dogs pulling his sled. When they bolt after a rabbit near the North Pole, he calmly calls a taxi and proceeds; other humorous scenes include his hold-up aided by a paper cut-out of a bad man, and the scene where he attempts to abduct a woman much taller than he is, in spite of her husband's objection.—C. S. S.

Urban Movie Chats No. 31

A number of interesting subjects are shown in these "Chats." One in particular which will attract the undivided attention of the spectator illustrates the way in which the street car companies in Cincinnati have overcome the handicaps of the high bluffs on which sections of the city are built. The cars are seen being conveyed to the tops of these bluffs on movable platforms, a very interesting mechanical and engineering feat, indeed.

Another shot that will prove of particular interest, is that of a Texas dairy farmer and his method of having his cows give more and better milk by giving them a musical concert on a phonograph shortly before milking time.—T. S. daP.

"Two Slick Traders"

The adage that "A Fair Exchange Is No Robbery" furnishes the theme for this Paul Terry cartoon, distributed by Pathe. One man who has a balky auto exchanges it for a lot of animals, including a cow, a mule and a dog that have given their owner a lot of trouble. Both believe that they have been stung. There is considerable good humor and clever animation in this number. —C. S. S.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

An Error

In September 2 issue, page 66, in discussing the "Biggest Question" there is an error. In the last line of the second column "working distance" should read equivalent focus. Those who are keeping the articles should pencil in the correction.

Biggest Question

A San Francisco projectionist propounded the following question:

If you were called upon to design and equip a 2-projector projection room in a high class motion picture theatre and to advise as to the location and construction of same, and to advise as to the selection of a screen, what would you do with regard to every one of the items concerned, and why would you do it?

Construction

The matter of construction is a serious one. Just what I would advise would depend upon conditions. If the room is to be located in an old building—a building already constructed, such as, for instance, an old legitimate house being remodeled into a motion picture theatre, and I found the best location of the projection room would not carry the weight of brick or concrete walls I would advise the use of hollow tile, or of gypsum blocks.

If it be hollow tile, then I would not recommend anything less than six (6) inches thick, and the same is true of gypsum blocks. Hollow tile or gypsum is indeed excellent under any conditions, if the construction be done rightly. If hollow tile, the tile must be set in rich mortar, tempered with cement, and must be plastered on the inside.

If it be an old building it is hardly likely that a fireproof ceiling and floor will be available without making them so, therefore we must roof the roof with hollow tile or gypsum blocks, carried between steel beams and set in mortar in the usual way.

Under no circumstances would I recommend the installation of other than a hollow tile, gypsum block, brick or concrete projection room for a permanent installation, and of the four, hollow tile or gypsum blocks are very much the best, since they are comparatively cool, are light in weight and non-conductors of sound.

If it be a new building, then we may assume that the projection room will set on a fireproof, solid floor, since only fireproof construction will be allowed in such a building.

We may also assume that there will be strength to carry brick or concrete walls, hence the projection room walls may be of concrete, brick, hollow tile or gypsum blocks, with the two last named preferred. If brick walls are used, then they must be at least two courses thick, with a bonding layer every seventh course. Concrete walls must be not less than six (6) inches thick.

Whatever material is used for walls, the ceiling or covering must be of hollow tile or gypsum blocks, set in the usual way between steel carrying beams, the construction to be such as will be air tight and not permit of smoke leaking out into the auditorium through crevices in case of fire. The ceiling will, of course, be plastered on the under surface with a hard-setting plaster.

Are You Working by "Guess" or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens chart (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) is in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

Address Moving Picture World, either 516 Fifth Ave. New York City, or 28 East Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, Ill.

Conduit Location

So far as is practicable all electrical conduit must be embedded in the walls of the room, with suitably located outlets for the various circuits.

The Floor

It is essential that the floor of the projection room be solid and entirely without vibration. If the projection room rests on a floor of the usual fireproof construction it will only be necessary to cover this with a cement finish of two parts sand to one of cement. Otherwise, there should be six inches of concrete made by mixing crushed stone with cement mortar in proportions of one of cement to three of sand. This will provide a solid foundation, in which the projector anchor bolts must be embedded.

The base must be finished with a three-quarter inch top dressing of one of cement to two of sand. It is necessary to make the top dressing very rich and of high grade cement, because if the cement be poor or if the mixture be poor there will be a continual disintegration which will produce a dust that is a very efficient grinding powder.

This cement dust will get into projector, motor and other bearings and will wear them out very rapidly. For this reason I always recommend a projection room floor covering of battleship linoleum. It is a bit costly, but saves several times its price in the end.

Dimensions

The dimensions for a 2-projector projection room should be not less than eight (8) feet front to back, by nine (9) feet wide, with three (3) feet additional width for a stereopticon and three (3) more for a spotlight, if these are to be used. From floor to ceiling seven (7) feet must be an absolute minimum, but the measurement should not be less than eight (8) feet.

Wall Openings

For the door I would have a wall opening not to exceed thirty (30) inches wide by seventy-two (72) high. The door must be of non-combustible material, such as asbestos board, bolted to both sides of a steel frame, the latter well braced to prevent sagging.

If it be necessary that the projection room open directly into the auditorium, I would provide a vestibule—a small one—into which the projection room door would open, with a door opening from that into the auditorium.

This is because if the projection room door open directly into the auditorium, then should a fire occur and the room fill with smoke before the projectionist and his apprentice came out, it is likely that a puff of smoke would accompany them into the auditorium, whereupon Mr. or Mrs. or Miss Solid Ivory Top would instantly leap up, scream "Fire," make a bolt for the entrance and—the rest of it is unnecessary to describe. It is summed up in panic and death. For this reason our projection room door must never open directly into the theatre auditorium.

The door itself may be of the sliding variety, hung upon a sloping track so that it will be kept normally closed by gravity, or it may be hung on hinges and held shut by a suitable spring. In any event the door must fit snugly when closed, and if there be a vestibule there must be a door for both openings and both doors must be the same as to construction and hanging.

The observation ports I would recommend to be not less than sixteen (16) or more than eighteen (18) inches square, that they be so located that the projectionist will have a clear view of the entire screen from working position beside the projector. This item is of vital importance to good screen results.

In four out of five projection rooms it has been made hard for the projectionist to see the screen, and usually it is impossible for him to see it as a whole from working position beside the projector. This always reacts to the injury of screen results, hence to the drawing power of the theatre.

And there is no good reason for a small observation port. The large opening has absolutely no effect on fire hazard, if the ports be properly shuttered and the shutters be properly installed and fused. The objection that noise may reach the audience is valid, but is easily overcome, where it exists, by covering the ports with glass. An observation port less than sixteen (16) inches square will invariably and inevitably work injury to screen results, make no mistake about that.

For Lens Ports

For the lens ports I would recommend an opening in the wall one foot square, the same to be stopped down to actual requirement of the light beam after the projectors are set. The stop should be a mask of metal or asbestos board, set permanently in place and making air tight joints with the wall.

For stereopticon ports I would recommend a wall opening six (6) inches wide by eighteen (18) high, the same to be stopped down as described for projector lens ports.

The observation port for the stereopticon should be not more than twelve (12) inches square, suitably located. The spotlight port may not be more than eighteen (18) inches, square or round. Incidentally it is well to keep the stereopticon and spotlight port closed when not in actual use.

Note: I would recommend that if the distance of projection exceed seventy-five (75) feet a high grade opera glass oc installed in one of the projector observation ports, near the top of the port. The glass should be fixed permanently in place, and may be so attached to its support that it cannot be removed.

I would see that all wall openings except the door be covered with shutters of metal not less than three thirty-seconds (3-32) of an inch thick, fitted in grooves so as to drop shut by gravity. These shutters must overlap the wall opening at least one inch when closed. They must slide in metallic grooves, which latter must be bedded in mortar and permanently attached to the wall. The shutters must fit snugly in the grooves, which must be at least one-half (½) inch deep, but must not bind therein.

Master Cord

All port shutters must be held normally shut by gravity and must have a layer of shredded asbestos packed into the bottom of the lower or bottom groove, so that they will strike without undue noise when they fall. All port shutters must be held open by a single master cord, either by means of a separate cord attaching to the shutter at one end and to the master cord by means of a metal hook at the other end, or by means of a mechanical device the operating element of which is attached to the master cord and held at "open" position thereby.

The master cord must be of the variety used for fishing lines, and must have a diameter of not less than one-eighth (⅛) of an inch when tightly stretched. It should be very carefully installed, since the master cord is a very vital element in projection room safety, insofar as it has to do with the prevention of panic.

Properly installed, in combination with a proper means for removing smoke and gases generated by film fire, it will be extremely improbable that an audience will ever know that a projection room fire is in progress, even though it be a very bad one.

The installation should be as follows: In a location to be approved by local authorities, preferably in the frame of the projection room door, near the door latch, a suitable headless spike shall be fixed. On this spike shall be a metal ring of convenient size, to which one end of the master cord is attached. Immediately over each element of the rewinder a metal ring or staple shall be affixed to the ceiling. Immediately over the film storage reservoir, separated from each other any convenient distance, two staples or rings shall be affixed to the ceiling. Immediately over the front end of each of the upper magazines of the projectors, separated from each other from one to four inches, two iron staples or rings shall be affixed to the ceiling. From the first named ring and spike the cord shall pass upward to and through a staple or iron ring affixed to the ceiling, and from thence to and through one of the staples over one of the possible seats of fire, which we will assume to be the rewinder, the film storage tank and the projectors, as named. From this staple the cord will pass down and attach to a strip of film as shown in Figure 5 by means of a suitable clamp. This film will pass under two studs attached to the wall and extending out, one over each element of the rewinder. They shall be not less than twelve inches or more than eighteen inches above the top of the reels when they are on the rewinder. To the other end of the film fuse thus formed the master cord attaches, as shown, the arrangement being such as will keep the fuse stretched over the rewinder, substantially as shown in Figure 5. The cord then passes to the film storage tank, as shown in Figure 5, and thence to the projectors, where the arrangement is as shown in Figure 6. A metal casing is made and attached to the lower front of the upper magazine as indicated. This casing is open at either end. In the lower end are three studs, fixed in position between the metal sides and carried by them. The film fuse passes into the protective chute thus formed, and around the studs, which hold it in position and exposed. The bolt holes B must be slotted, the slots one inch long, so that the end of the chute may be adjusted so that the film fuse will be within one-eighth (⅛) of an inch of the film when it is tightly stretched between the upper magazine fire valve and the upper projector sprocket.

Metallic Fuses

If it is desired metallic fuses may also be placed in the master cord—as many of them as may be desired.

This plan is entirely practical and is cheap in application. The chute for the projector magazines should be included as a portion of the projector regular equipment, though if that were done it could be put into a better form. It could be a part of the upper magazine fire valve. Its addition to projectors would fill a real need, and would add very little to the cost of manufacture.

Examination of Figures 5 and 6 and the application of common sense will show exactly what would happen if a fire started, either at the rewinder table, the film storage tank or either of the projectors. Almost instantly the blaze would strike the film fuse, burn it in two and thus drop all port shutters within one or two seconds of the starting of a fire at either of the four probable seats of fire, thus closing the ports before the audience has opportunity to glimpse either fire or smoke.

We thus have arranged for instant closing of the port shutters, but this will avail little unless the smoke and gases be removed from the room so that none will escape into the auditorium. Remember that once Mr. and Mrs. or Miss Solid Ivory Top get the least glimpse of fire or SMOKE there is immediate danger of that fearful thing, a PANIC. And taken in connection with what I have suggested with relation to port shutters, and what I shall say about ventilation, there can be no panic because neither smoke nor fire will or can be visible to the audience or any member thereof.

What Hays, Richards and Horater Have to Say Regarding Seating

APROPOS of the article on house seating, which appeared in our issue of September 23, we print below the views of three men whose opinions are well worthy of consideration.

Theodore L. Hays is general manager of the Finkelstein & Ruben Theatrical Enterprises, of Minneapolis; E. V. Richards is vice president and general manager of the Saenger Amusement Company, Inc., of New Orleans, and H. L. Horater is vice president and general manager of the Patheon Theatre Company, of Toledo, Ohio.

We feel sure that the viewpoints of these three eminent authorities will be of both interest and value to those of their fellow exhibitors who contemplate re-seating an old house or laying out the plan for a new one.

Comfort Important, Says Hays

The psychology of successful purveyance to patrons of entertainment lies in providing an environment as near ideal as possible; an atmosphere which will tend towards the creation of a receptive attitude on the part of theatregoers.

Many elements enter into or contribute to the so-called ideal environment. Harmony in decorations, appropriate furnishings, effective lighting, proper ventilation, cleanliness and especially comfortable seating.

There is no question but that the last named factor is one of the most important.

In the early days of the motion picture industry, it was possible for the Exhibitor to get by with seat platforms measuring from 28-in. to 30-in. in depth, notwithstanding the fact that seating conditions were crowded and uncomfortable.

This is no longer the situation, State and City building regulations quite generally provide for a minimum depth of platform of at least 32-in. measured from back to back of seats.

Space for Long Limbs

This space is sufficient to provide comfort even for persons with long limbs and will permit of patrons passing those who are sitting without much annoyance.

The problem of the motion picture exhibitor is a different one than that of the manager conducting a theatre in which the patrons are seated in accordance with reserved coupons and as a rule remain seated during the entire period of performance.

The motion picture audience (except where seats are reserved) is a continually changing audience with the result that the seat platform should be sufficient in depth to permit persons to pass the patrons who are seated without necessitating their rising to permit such passage. To permit of this condition seat platforms would necessarily require a depth of at least 34 inches.

This latter width is quite desirable but involves a sacrifice of considerable floor space and is not generally adopted, except where ample floor space is available.

Favor 20-inch Seats

For a number of years past 32-in. depth has been generally accepted by architects, engineers, and managers as adequate spacing for seat platforms.

Regarding the width of seats, 17-18-19-inch were formerly the customary widths given to seats of motion picture theatres. The manager with fore-sight recognizes the fact that unless patrons are comfortably seated, no matter how excellent the performance, the full measure of enjoyment is not to be accomplished if the patrons are forced to sit in a crowded condition during the period of the performance.

It is generally recognized now that 20-inch is the proper width of an opera chair. Chair manufacturers, architects, and engineers do necessarily provide for some 19-inch chairs and some 21-inch-22-inch wide, in order to reconcile spacing, but a general use of the 18-inch and 19-inch chair is a thing of the past.

As to the style of chair. A wood frame, not too heavy in style and construction, square seat and panel back of leather is in my judgment most desirable. The plush covered seat and back chair is a thing of the past. Sometime some enterprising chair manufacturer will design a model rattan back and seat, one that will provide both comfort and ventilation.—Theodore L. Hays.

35 Inches Says Richards

In my opinion, comfort is the most essential service of any theatre because without it no theatre, or any other business could prosper.—Thirty-two (32") inches should be the minimum space between each row of seats, but a thirty-five (35") inch would give maximum comfort to patrons without any great sacrifice of floor space.

The type of chair is a matter of choice,—climatic conditions largely governing. In the cooler climates heavy upholstered chairs seem to be the preference. A recent innovation throughout the South and Southwest, where the warmer weather predominates, a cane bottom chair has been found adaptable. This eliminates the laundrying of seat covers, which is quite an expense and runs into money. The backs are porous and give ample ventilation, relieving the heat discomfort to patrons. The curved back chair seems to fit better than the straight back type.—E. V. Richards.

Stop Crowding, Says Horater

I am of the opinion that seats should be comfortable and believe that an effort to crowd, unless one has an exceptional attraction, has a tendency to keep people away. It isn't necessary to have too much leg room, and the same people like to stretch their legs, particularly if they are bored with an attraction and the seats are uncomfortable.

I believe that the most comfortable type of a chair seat is the ordinary veneered one. I would strike a happy medium were I to build and equip a theatre and install 20-in. chairs.—H. C. Horater.

PORTABLE ARC LAMP
For Studio use. Said to develop 2,000,000 candle-power

New Portable Arc

Here is a new portable arc lamp invented by a cameraman for studio use. It has a twenty-eight inch parabolic reflector of solid spun copper, triple silver plated. The arc is of the single acting type, hand fed and focusing.

The inventor claims that the lamp develops two million candle power illumination at a distance of fifty feet from the arc. A special diffusing bracket to hold two diffusers forms part of the equipment.

According to the inventor's statement, the current consumption of the lamp is thirty-seven and one-half amperes and it weighs sixty-seven pounds.

Troy's New Eleven Hundred Seat Lincoln Has Opened

WITH the Mayor, city officials, filmdom of Albany, Troy and Schenectady, present, the Lincoln theatre, costing approximately $200,000, and located in the business center of Troy, was recently opened under most auspicious conditions. "The Masquerader" was chosen for the opening week. The house will charge an admission of 35 cents and as such leads other theatres of the city which are charging an admission of 25 cents.

The new theatre which has been upwards of a year in construction, is owned by Symansky brothers.

The Lincoln has a seating capacity of 1,100, including a mezzanine and balcony. The interior color scheme is a combination of salmon and blue. The ceiling is of a quarter-dome type, arching delicately from the walls to the center. The ceiling is in paneling, with centers from which hang the chandelier, electric clusters in gold and ivory. All draperies are dark blue velour, the aisles being of rich deep red.

Designed by Cummings

The house was designed by M. F. Cummings and Son, architects of Troy and constructed by Philip Casey, Jr., of Troy, the decorators being the Eckert Studio of New York, the electrical effects were installed by the Edwards Electrical company, also of New York. The ornamental plaster work was under the direction of the Snyder Studios of Syracuse. The curtains and draperies are from the John Sears Company of New York, the sign being designed and erected by Kollath Brothers of Schenectady, the heating and plumbing being installed by J. J. Horan and Company of Troy.

The exterior is of terracotta with a large steel marquee. A duct cooling system has been installed. The projection room, located in the rear of the balcony, is fireproof in its construction of concrete and steel. The equipment includes two Simplex projectors.

130 Foot Throw

The projector throw is 130 feet. The Stanley Frame Company of New York, has supplied the lobby frames. The ticket office equipment includes an automatic ticket seller machine. Intercommunicating phones are installed throughout the entire theatre.

In accordance with its general policy there will be no glaring posters used in the lobby displays. All advertising will be of hand painted scenes and lettering.

The Lincoln has a twelve piece symphony orchestra in connection with the organ. Professor David Stulmacher will direct the orchestra.

The house will be managed by Edward H. Crawford.

The ushers, young women, are gowned in dark blue and white with a single "L" in center of their caps.

Installations Follow Improved Conditions

Two Simplex Mazda equipments have been installed in the new view room of the Bellingham Theatres, Inc., a recently formed corporation of Bellingham, Wash.

The bettering of business conditions in the Pacific Northwest has been the signal for remodeling a number of smaller houses and adding new projection equipment.

Webster & Walsh have installed two Powers 6-A projectors in their Liberty Theatre at Everson, Wash., which is about to re-open after extensive improvements have been made.

J. Beardsley, of the Orpheum Theatre, Snohomish, Wash., has put in a Capital model Simplex.

Claud Jensen has installed a five unit Automaticket machine at the Majestic, Portland.

More Light for Less Money With the G-E Incandescent Lamp Projector

Pictures equalling the best in the largest theatres can now be obtained in smaller theatres without costly apparatus.

The same steady illumination possible with a direct current arc can now be obtained with the G-E Incandescent Lamp Projector on either alternating or direct current at a great saving in first cost and at one-fourth the current consumed by the arc, taking into account all inevitable losses by either method.

Maintenance cost is also low because there is no carbon dust to injure the mechanism of the projection machine; and the cost of lamp renewals does not exceed the cost of arc lamp carbons.

The G-E Incandescent Lamp Projector produces better screen results than any a.c. arc equipment and is the equal of the d.c. arc outfit up to 50 amperes.

The simplicity of the Incandescent Lamp Projector (no adjustments during operation) and its healthfulness (no fumes or dust) recommend it to projectionists everywhere.

Send for literature and price including all necessary fittings for attachment to any American made projection machine.

FOR BETTER PROJECTION

POWER'S
Dissolving Stereopticon

HANDBOOK of PROJECTION for Theater Managers and Projectionists

Fourth Edition

by

F·H·RICHARDSON

WE STRONGLY ADVISE AGAINST USING THE MOVING PICTURE PROJECTOR STEREOPTICON ATTACHMENT.

There are two advantages in the dissolver as against the single stereopticon. First, the dissolving out of one picture by the other is a much more pleasing effect than can possibly be had with a single stereopticon. Second, when using a single stereopticon, unless the projectionist is very careful while removing or inserting slides, he will move the carrier, which will cause the picture on the screen to move or jump. This is not possible with the dissolver.

Stereopticon pictures may be projected with a very much less brilliant light source than is necessary with motion pictures. As a matter of fact high amperage for stereopticon projection is objectionable, because the resultant heat may and probably will crack the slide if it be left in the light for more than a very brief period of time.

"The Man Who Saw Tomorrow"

By Perley Poore Sheehan and Frank Condon.

Directed by Alfred E. Green.

NO story precisely like this has ever been filmed. It is the most unusual plot ever conceived.

It is so varied in incident that it is as good as two stories rolled into one. On one hand you see the hero living a wild, primitive life of adventure in the South Seas, on the other you see him struggling for fame and power in European diplomatic circles.

There are three thrilling romances—one with a South Sea Island girl, another with a society beauty, and a third with a Russian princess.

Cast includes Leatrice Joy, leading woman of "Manslaughter," June Elvidge, Theodore Roberts, Eva Novak, and John Miltern.

A Powerful Dramatic Close-up of the American Home of To-day

A photoplay that lifts the veil of secrecy from the home-life that exists in every community.

A picture that every woman will be sure to see and then tell her friends to go see it.

A great star, with an all-star cast, in a great story that has love and romance, pathos and humor, joy and despair, success and failure—everything that goes to make a 100 per cent box-office feature.

WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER

Is the most sensational hit in the history of motion pictures. All New York is talking about it! The newspapers are filled to overflowing with its praises!

Here are a few extracts from leading New York dailies:

"When Knighthood Was in Flower is one of the greatest film epics ever made in America; in fact, the picture merits visit after visit to grasp all its glories." —Robert G. Welsh, Eve. Telegram.

"The most amazingly beautiful motion picture ever screened. Moves swiftly never wearying, and leaving at the last a regret that it is over." — N. Y. Mail.

"When Knighthood Was In Flower is all that has been claimed for it; the people simply burst into applause again and again. Don't miss it." — Harriette Underhill, N. Y. Tribune.

"It seems to us that this picture is every bit as important to see as any play on Broadway. It marks a high point in the art of entertainment and in the art of the American motion picture studio. We whole-heartedly commend it to every man, woman and child to whom romance and beauty are not mere words found in dictionaries."—Daily News.

"When Knighthood Was In Flower ranks high alongside of the best in romantic screen drama with a beauty of background which has not to our knowledge been surpassed. The scene showing Marion Davies in an attitude of prayer is one of the finest moments which we have seen in the cinema."—N. Y. World.

"It has magnificent settings and costumes, and lighting effects of almost unbelievable beauty, and is acted with skill in addition."—N. Y. Sun.

"When Knighthood Was In Flower is dazzling to the eye, splendidly impressive and apparently true to the time and places of its settings. Marion Davies really outdoes herself, while Lyn Harding is a joy. Such a King!"—N. Y. Times.

"No one can afford to miss this great screen masterpiece, and you may be assured we will go again."—Evening Journal.

"Marion Davies gives a performance of the modern, stubborn, adorable Mary that is not only the best thing she has ever done, but one of the finest performances ever given by any actress."—Morning Telegraph.

"You come away from 'When Knighthood Was In Flower' as pleasantly weary as an art collector after a day among treasures, or an out-of-towner after a Sunday afternoon on Fifth Avenue."—N. Y. Globe.

"The production is one of the most massive and costly ever attempted, and Miss Davies' interpretation has made the entire effort worthy."—Edward E. Pidgeon, Journal of Commerce.

"When Knighthood Was In Flower represents the supreme achievement of the motion picture art."—New York American.

"Beautifully staged and photographed. The costuming is gorgeous."—Evening Post.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

William Fox desires to make known to Exhibitors and Motion Picture Theatre Owners the fact that are now ready for release to the trade

Another Mile-Stone in Motion Picture History Has Been Passed

The release of the first group of Fox Educational pictures marks the beginning of a new Epoch of public Appreciation of the Service rendered the Community by the Motion Picture Theatre.

See three following pages for details.

FOX FILM CORPORATION

1—What are Fox Educational Entertainments?

They are short pictures of from one-half reel to one reel in length made so that they are, first of all, entertaining to the general public; but, at the same time, conveying information on popular subjects in a manner which make them of real value from an educational standpoint. Each picture deals with a single subject. Fox Educational Entertainments are not to be confounded with screen reviews or other make-shift, pieced together so-called educational reels.

2—Who are they made for?

First and foremost for motion picture theatres and their audiences. Fox Educational Entertainments will please the regular patrons of their theatres because of their entertaining qualities, and will create a new body of patrons for you because of their educational value.

3—Where can they be booked?

Fox Educational Entertainments can be booked through any of the established Fox Exchanges in the United States and Canada in just the same manner as any other William Fox motion picture is booked. The manager of the Fox Exchange which serves you has prints in his office and is prepared to screen these pictures for you.

4—When can they be shown at your theatre?

On September 24th the first six Fox Educational Entertainments (listed on the opposite page) will be ready for release, and can be shown at your theatre on and after that date as quickly as you may desire to play them.

5—How can they be booked?

You can book for your theatre either one or all of the first six of Fox Educational Entertainments. This means that these pictures can be booked and presented on an individual or a group basis, as you may elect.

6—How will they benefit your theatre?

First: By adding a unique and highly desirable entertainment value to your program. Exhibitors and the public have long expressed the desire for short numbers on the program of the motion pictu e theatre, different from the comedies, news reels, screen reviews and other product now available. A novel and welcome addition to any theatre's program will be found in these pictures.

Second: By bringing into your theatre a new and valuable class of patronage and thus make friends for your theatre of the very best people in your community. In this manner there will be created between your theatre and the community in which it is situated a closer contact and community of interest.

—of Fox Educational Entertainments:

Wm. A. Johnston, Publisher Motion Picture News

says editorially, (See page 1354, issue Sept. 16.)

"When William Fox takes off his coat and goes after anything you can always count on results. We speak prominently here of this enterprise because we regard it of great fundamental importance. This kind of picture brings the exhibitor in sympathetic touch with those community groups which today are often opposing him. And it is just this bridging the gap—and only this—which will eventually eliminate censorship."

Robert E. Welch, Editor Moving Picture World

says editorially, (See page 182, issue Sept. 16.)

"There is going to be unusual interest in Fox Educational Entertainments. William Fox is spending a lot of money here on an idea that is akin to an ideal. If all the subjects hold up to the first ones he has lived up to every calculation he has made."

says editorially, (See page 19, issue Sept. 23.)

"The significance of this undertaking is very great. The time is most opportune for the production of motion picture subjects of an educational character... but the effort of the Fox organization does not stop merely with the production of subjects that inform and instruct... these subjects afford genuine entertainment. They place in the hands of the theatreman an instrument that certainly will be productive of excellent results in gaining the attention of the best people of his community. The Fox organization in this matter has identified itself with a highly commendable undertaking.

Coming Fox Educational Entertainments

Future Releases

The Educational Division of Fox Film Corporation plans to release fifty-two subjects yearly of from 300 to 1,000 feet in length. These will be pictures of current educational and entertainment value and will not be of a scientific or technical nature. They will be produced from the showman's angle for the purpose of entertaining and amusing the theatre-going public. Each one will be a distinct novelty, unlike anything heretofore offered the motion picture theatre.

Production Plans

More than 200 experienced cameramen are now gathering especially ordered material for Fox Educational Entertainments.

Frederick Fesneau and L. Maes, two cameramen thoroughly acquainted with the Old Country, now are in Europe making special pictures for these subjects. Russell Muth, who won fame by his daring flight over Mt. Vesuvius is in South America. Al Brick, another of the Educational staff, has just returned from China, where many unusual subjects were made for your use. These pictures set a new standard of exceptional entertainment.

I'M GLAD YOU MA

No. 301.—Straight from the Shoulder Talk by Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

A competitor scolded me and kidded me the other day.

He said, "You're the easiest mark in the business. Why, man, the exhibitors are SIMPLY CLEANING UP MONEY on 'The Storm' and they are LAUGHING BEHIND YOUR BACK because you practically gave them the picture instead of getting big money for it."

His criticism did not have the effect he thought it would. Instead of hurting my feelings, IT MADE ME GLAD.

Whenever I hear that the exhibitors are CLEANING UP PROFITS with Universal Pictures, it gives me a thrill of delight because it means more good will is added to the huge pile of good will the Universal has always had.

But my friend made one slight mistake. The exhibitors are not laughing behind my back. They are honestly telling me to my very face how well they are doing with "The Storm." I never in my life received so many messages of gratitude and congratulation, not only because of the big money the showmen have made and are making on the picture BUT BECAUSE I DID NOT USE IT AS A CLUB TO MAKE THEM BOOK OTHER PICTURES WITH IT.

I ask you to pause just a moment and carefully compare the Universal's selling and booking policy with that of other companies.

DE THE MONEY

How many others, if they had had such a powerful box-office success as "The Storm" would have permitted you to book it WITHOUT BOOKING OTHER PICTURES AT THE SAME TIME?

The policy of clubbing the exhibitor over the head with a good picture to make him book other pictures less meritorious has been very successfully worked in this business. You have stood it for a long time. It has temporarily enriched the coffers of the people who did it, but IT HAS STORED UP BAD WILL AGAINST THEM IN YOUR MIND.

The Universal's policy is the simplest of all, because our basic thought has been to EARN YOUR GOOD WILL.

We've got other pictures coming from the studio all the time, as good as "The Storm" and better. They don't need anything to sell them except their own merits. When you make a clean-up with them, it won't make us mad. We will never regret that we did not wring a higher price out of you.

I'm glad you made a pile of money on "The Storm." You'll make just as much on our pictures to come, and not a blessed one of them will be used as a club to bang you over the head.

Good will comes from the heart. I'm going to hang on to yours with all my might and main. I'm not an easy mark just because you make money on Universal Pictures. I'm GLAD—eternally, almighty and doggone GLAD!

A FRANK STATEMENT!

In announcing a new picture for release, the conscientious producer and distributor finds it most difficult to convey the excellence of his production..... for fear he will over-rate or sometimes under-rate its real value.

We are in just this position in announcing..

SHADOWS

The few persons at Los Angeles who have seen it pronounce "Shadows" the most unusual picture ever made, a revelation in every way!

So totally different that it just doesn't permit comparison with any other picture!

Their comments tempt us to refer to it as "the Greatest", "the Most Wonderful" motion picture ever made.

But one reads so many such claims that these adjectives have long since lost their true meaning!

So we merely wish to convey that

VARIETY: Exceptionally well played and exceedingly interesting story. The film is something of a novelty. It gets away from the familiar love story triangle and is fresh in its romance.

NEW YORK TELEGRAPH: The Jack London atmosphere has not been lost in translating his novel to the screen in "The Mohican's Daughter." The story has been extremely well handled with a color and picturesqueness of the half-breed love story retained. It is the kind of story that goes across with a very wide audience.

MOTION PICTURE JOURNAL, New York: An exciting Indian story with good atmosphere. The story of an Indian girl who falls in love with the white manager of a trading post.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW: "The Mohican's Daughter" makes a pleasant story and affords good interest for anyone. The chief interest depends upon the love story of Jees-Uck, the Indian girl, and the young manager of a trading post.

REELAND REVIEWS: It remains a Jack London story which is more than can be said of a great many pictures adapted from this writer's work. A well-made picture that should attract in any community.

"I am the Prince of Wales"

You will never forget the thrill contained in the scenes where a king's heir, clad in the rags of a thief's child, seeks to assert the authority of class over mass—and is answered with blows and ridicule.

"The Prince and the Pauper" is Mark Twain's immortal romance; one of the tenderest and richest of all the stories ever written in the history of the world's literature.

Even more appealing than "Huckleberry Finn" and "A Connecticut Yankee." With all the weight that a statement can be made we say to the Exhibitors of the country: "This is the biggest profit-making picture of its type ever produced." See it immediately at our exchanges. says "SCREEN OPINIONS"

"The Veiled Woman"—Class A-b. (Superior)

"The Veiled Woman" is one of the most interesting of modern screen achievements. It is distinctly not "movie stuff," but is impressionistic in style.

Character development is excellent, the story is clearly defined and its points of argument clearly set forth. Lloyd Ingraham deserves a great deal of credit for his worthy attempt at the making of an inspirational picture.

SCREEN OPINIONS

There is easily enough drama with its accompanying love story to keep the spectator firmly interested throughout the progress of "The Veiled Woman," a picture produced by H. J. Reynolds and released by Hodkinson. It is a somewhat poignant story of simple souls told appropriately in a simple manner.

An agreeable absence of the stereotyped and exaggerated small town types so prevalent in the motion pictures.

The picture is almost flawless.

THE MORNING TELEGRAPH

A very unusual picture. Contains a moral and certainly gets away from the general run of picture themes.

"The Veiled Woman" is the most out of the ordinary picture that has been shown in some time, or rather it is Myrtle Reed's story which is unusual. The theme is wholly unlike anything that has been used and is certainly a deviation from the general run of screen material.

For those who want pictures that are unusual, this latest Renco production can be highly recommended. It isn't likely that they have ever seen anything like it.

THE FILM DAILY

The offering is certain to excite considerable interest due to its unusual theme and the moral established. Again the characterization is well defined and stands out, particularly that of the title character. In its favor is the fact that it gets away from the ordinary run of photoplays and presents a line of drama which is absorbing up to the scenes which build the climax.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Screen entertainment of the best and highest grade. Exhibitors should find this production a valuable treasury aid.

We'll Pay for Our Mistakes If You'll Pay for Our Successes!

W. A. JOHNSTON, in his editorial on "Independence" in the Motion Picture News, stated our position exactly when he wrote:—

"A Good Picture is good no matter what its source."

Also he declared, "it is highly necessary that the Independent Producer get all the encouragement his product deserves."

Once again we are in agreement, as all the exhibitors who attended the Charnas banquets in Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Detroit and Cleveland and heard our declaration of principles and policy will testify.

But we go further and state that we believe the exhibitors should support ALL good pictures, be they produced by big companies or small companies.

The theatre man should pay the small producer as good a price for Good Pictures as he does the big fellow who has the power to force a fair return for his product.

We agree with Mr. Johnston that the word "Independent", as used in this business, is misleading. It should be abolished from the language of the picture industry.

It doesn't mean what it pretends, because the only man truly independent in this business is the one who makes Good Pictures.

Good Pictures are all that count!

B. P. Schulberg has demonstrated that he can produce Good Pictures and he will continue to demonstrate that he can.

We are willing to stand on the Preferred Pictures he produces.

TO ALL EXHIBITORS:—

Reviewed "SURE FIRE FLINT" at A. H. Flagg's Playhouse, Westfield, N. J., and it went over great—twice as many laughs as "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," and a much bigger production. As it is over length, intended cutting out drags or gags that missed fire, but picture went over so strong it would be a crime to cut out laughs that are so hard to get, so we are sending it out on 7 reels.

Here is a big picture, book it quickly. Prints will reach exchanges by the middle of next week.

Fresh news every week.

"SONNY"

Richard Barthelmess in an Inspiration Picture, directed by Henry King

Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Ore., reports in the Moving Picture World:
"The best picture of the year. Patrons even say it exceeds 'Tol'able David.' Many went out of their way to tell us about it."

W. W. Booth, Strand and American Theatres, Belle Plaine, Ia., reports to the Exhibitor's Herald:
"A truly wonderful production and will please. Star's work good. It is a pleasure to show this kind of picture and will help put the theatres on their feet.

"TROUBLE"

Jackie Coogan—Presented by Sol Lesser.

F. Buttolph, Calton Theatre, Morehouse, Mo., reports:
"Broke Monday record established by 'The Sheik.' Can say no more, as we thought latter would stand."

The Detroit News says:
"Jackie Coogan won the unusual token of applause in a silent drama. 'Trouble' is an epic in human interest. Jackie lives his part. A great picture."

The Detroit Free Press says:
"Seldom have audiences shown such enthusiasm as marked the appearance of Jackie Coogan in 'Trouble.'

M. Golomb, Franklin Theatre, Union Hill, N. J., says, as reported in the Exhibitor's Herald:
"Grab this. Pleased 100 per cent. You will sure make money. Very good."

Raymond Gear, Mayflower Theatre, Florence, Kan., reports:
"A good one both from entertainment and box office standpoint."

"HURRICANE'S GAL"

Starring the beautiful Dorothy Phillips and produced under the direction of Allen Holubar.

The Detroit News says:
"A rousing hour and a half of real entertainment. Just about everything in the line of thrills that can be imagined. One of the achievements of the screen. Real gems in camera work."

Frank L. Browne, Liberty Theatre, Long Beach, Cal., reports through the Exhibitor's Herald:
"Good melodrama with plenty of action. The work of the players is exceptionally fine."

The Detroit Free Press says:
"Action that should satisfy the soul of the most ardent admirer of melodrama. Miss Phillips is charming."

The Detroit Evening Times says:
"Thrills—Thrills—Thrills—all that the producers claim. A stirring romance featuring the beautiful Dorothy Phillips and a supreme cast in one of the greatest love tales staged. A perfect storm of sensation."

The Seattle Star says:
"This film contains all the best elements of all the sea stories that have been told in films."

Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Chicago:
"The type of picture my patrons like. Many stopped me to say how good it was. A real action picture of the sea with an interesting love story. Business good."

"ONE CLEAR CALL"

A John M. Stahl production, presented by Louis B. Mayer.

W. H. Breuner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind., reports:
"A remarkable production. One of those really big pictures, the kind the patron, after seeing, knows that it is the finest picture he has ever seen. Henry Walthall, Milton Sills, Irene Rich and Claire Windsor do most satisfactory work, and they all proved themselves as being fully capable of the parts assigned to them."

"SMILIN' THROUGH"

Norma Talmadge in the picture produced by Joseph M. Schenck

S. A. Hayman, Lyda Theatre, Grand Island, Neb., reports:
"Best picture we ever had. Good crowds. Extended run two days, making total of seven days in a town of 13,000."

The Crowd Speaks for Itself!

This is how they gathered for "The Masquerader" at the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles. But read Sol Lesser's letter to Richard Walton Tully—

"I want to congratulate you on the triumph of "The Masquerader" at our Los Angeles Kinema Theatre. We turned many people away and it is the most satisfactory picture we have played there in months. Pictures of this character renew any waning interest of the public and mean much for our business. I witnessed this picture for the first time and it stirred me as no picture has for some time. I lost myself completely to my surroundings and I enjoyed the picture as much as the most enthusiastic ticket buyer. We anxiously await future Tully-Post-Young productions."

Hailed As Her Best Picture!

Read what the Cincinnati Times-Star says:

"The Katherine MacDonald fans are going to like the 'American beauty' better than ever as a result of her new picture at Keith's. The story—'Heroes and Husbands'—has more life, more individuality and charm than any vehicle she has had in a long time. The statuesque star seems to like her role and has exhibited more 'pep' than usual—and she has much capable support. The theme is pleasant and the titles are adroit, and witty. Willard Louis, Charles Gerard, Charles Clary and Mona Kingsley, who is almost as pretty as Miss MacDonald, are in the cast."

"Hits the Nail on the Head"

Says Film Daily

"In selecting the drama of the northwest as the subject of his latest burlesque, Buster Keaton has hit the proverbial nail on its head. The subject is one which has not been satirized to any great degree and Keaton's antics have the advantage of novelty. There are several distinctly amusing episodes in the production, the scene at the fishing hole being unusually good. It is certain to keep them laughing. In the scene with the dog sled there is more mirth-provoking material. The piece as a whole is a commendable effort and a distinctly desirable addition to almost any bill."

A New Idea in National Advertising of Motion Pictures

Ellis Parker Butler

HERE'S some big news for you. Ellis Parker Butler, one of America's foremost authors, whose book, "Pigs Is Pigs," is known to practically every family, will write a series of six story advertisements in the Saturday Evening Post on "East Is West."

First National considered this picture so unusual it invited Mr. Butler to see it. He was so enthused over its bigness and its fine entertainment value that he agreed to write a message to the American public on its merits. It was then arranged to use these heart to heart talks in the most widely distributed medium known, The Saturday Evening Post.

Think of the tremendous asset in having Mr. Butler write these messages under his own signature. No more capable writer could be engaged to undertake such a campaign. And his high standing as a man of letters will carry additional weight. Besides, the American people love the personal touch in advertising, and especially when a man of so unusual attainments talks directly to them, telling them what HE thinks. This is something new in picture advertising.

We want the public to know that "East Is West" is a BIG picture, so big that it can't be compared with any previous Constance Talmadge picture. So we arranged for this unusual campaign to drive home the fact to every man, woman and child.

These six story advertisements will also be reproduced on six half sheet posters for your lobby, so that a single glance will connect the advertisement with the picture, even if any one should not have taken time to read them through, though they'll be so interesting every one will read them.

It's a Tough Job

Sitting in New York and attempting to analyze the thoughts and problems of trade readers in every section of the country.

It's best not to try it—from a New York viewpoint.

We are not going to. We much prefer to consider this editorial page a sort of listening post for the industry—reflecting the views and reactions of all the industry.

No more New York than it is Ohio—or California, or Canada.

As an Example—Take This:

New York, and trade paper men in particular, are given to considerable conversation and discussion just now on the pending "uniform contract."

We have just completed a Mid-West trip in company with other New Yorkers. Each city visited gave opportunity for face-to-face talks with numerous exhibitors. On each occasion the "uniform contract" was dragged into the conversation —by one or the other of the New Yorkers.

The exhibitor reaction was interesting.

There wasn't any reaction.

Unless you prodded a bit. And then it was something like this:

"Yeah, I guess the 'uniform contract' is a good idea. But what does it mean?"

What's in the Word "Contract"?

Then follows the business of explaining. An unsatisfactory task, for it doesn't seem to answer the questions that arise:

"Will the 'uniform contract' do away with advance deposits?"

"Will the 'uniform contract' prevent distributors finding a loophole when one of their stars becomes a Harold Lloyd or a Chaplin over-night?"

"Will the 'uniform contract' prevent an exhibitor overbuying just to freeze his opposition out—and never intending to show the pictures?"

"Will there be real PLAY DATES in the 'uniform contract'?"

Then you realize what should have been apparent to a film man earlier. That the "uniform contract" doesn't awaken much interest because no exhibitor ever expects to see a day when any contract—uniform or otherwise—will be a contract in the picture business.

He has never read the fine print on the reverse of the present contracts, so he cannot be expected to get very excited over a rewriting of the fine print.

In his experience, when an emergency has arisen, a contract has only been something which the stronger side flouted or used as a club—as best suited its purpose.

Sometimes the exhibitor won out because the distributor didn't like to lose a future good customer for the sake of enforcing the contract. At times the distributor possessed the MIGHT.

But, at any rate, says the average exhibitor:

"Uniform" means little. "Contract" means less.

The Cue for a Laugh

Weaving further ahead on the subject of contracts and the thoughts "out in the field," we know a certain conversational spot that is always the cue for a laugh.

You get the merry ha-ha about the time you mention the contract troubles of the poor producers with stars and directors.

If you persist in shedding a few tears for the plight of the producer in his dealings with unreliable temperaments, to whom a contract is a scrap of paper, the ha-ha grows into a raucous roar.

In Detroit—or Cincinnati—or Pittsburgh—and most likely any other spot at which you might step off a train, they tell you that the producers taught the stars all the lessons they need to know about contract breaking and contract observance.

They cite concrete examples.

Then once in a while someone will take from his wallet a clipping quoting some New York film man on the glory, sanctity and inviolability of contracts. This is the signal for a chorus of laughter by the assembled company—of exhibitors.

The exhibitor tells you:

"When a star or a producer becomes an unusually big magnet and feels that he should get more money for his pictures than they have been contracted to the exhibitor for—it's the distributor who says, 'I'll show you how to get around those contracts.'

"Then why should he complain if the star or producer remembers the lesson? And puts it into operations with reverse English?"

And Here's a Surprise

If the exhibitors who write to trade papers have had one favorite for denunciation in the past year or so it has been the Hoy system.

Hoy, we were told recently, is doomed. Either he has been given a brief respite or the plank he is walking is extra long. At any rate, exhibitors have paid their respects to the departing.

Imagine our surprise, therefore, while sitting in a Cincinnati hotel lobby, to hear one exhibitor speak up in defense of Hoy!

"I don't care what most exhibitors say," declared this man. "Or what abuses may have crept in. This business will always need the Hoy system—or something without the name but serving the same purpose and functioning practically the same way.

"Perhaps I am prejudiced because I sold film before I became an exhibitor. But I know that unless there is some strong agency to keep the bad fellows in line I—and other reliable exhibitors—am going to pay to make up the loss in efficiency and money to the exchanges."

This from an exhibitor. But then another theatre man entered the arena.

What's Your Credit Standing

"What you say may be all true enough," remarked this speaker. "I won't quarrel with the Hoy system or any substitute our territory may have, because I long ago became accustomed to the funny things I have to meet in this picture game.

"But there is one shock to my pride that I have never really overcome.

"Before I came into the theatre business I was a retail merchant. I wasn't the biggest merchant in town, either. But at any of the wholesalers with whom I did business my name was always good for a bill of goods up to eight thousand dollars.

"In the film business my name isn't good for a plugged quarter.

"And if I keep on doing business along clean and straight lines for the next fifty years my credit standing will still be twenty-five cents less than a quarter.

"That's a shock to a man's self-respect and business pride that must cost this business thousands of dollars annually. You convince a man in no uncertain manner that you are always going to regard him as a crook and a sharp worker.

"What do you expect after that?"

This Is a Hard One

"Don't tell me that we have a lot of unreliable exhibitors and such conditions cannot be helped. Look at the annual bankruptcies, fires, and other questionable happenings in the dry goods field.

"But dry goods credit men face their problem and handle it intelligently. They don't lay down and say:

"Well, it's too big a job for us, Mr. Smith. So we will have to consider you a crook and everybody else a crook until you prove yourself otherwise—and even after that, to play safe."

Here's a Million Dollar Idea

"If this be advertising make the most of it."

The man, the men, the organization or the organizations responsible for what happened at this week's meeting of the New York Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce deserve more praise than an editorial pen is capable of bestowing.

Here's the scene:

Clergymen from every section of the city—and every denomination—present at a theatre owner's meeting. Seated—not in frigid formality at a guest table—but alongside exhibitors.

And hearing from the lips of these neighbors of the theatres' plans to show pictures of the Holy Land. Non-sectarian pictures—but inspiring. Each man to his own thought. One a week, for a year.

The general impression being conveyed that theatre men have been anxious to do such work and such community service—and have only awaited the opportunity and the means. And that, the means being offered, it has been grasped eagerly.

We don't need to editorialize on what a meeting of this sort means in clearer understanding and mutual benefit—to clergy and theatre men. That would be painting the lily.

But, being uncertain as to the brow due the laurel of praise, we'll mention all the names:

Geographic makes the pictures. American Releasing distributes them. The Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce brought about this week's gathering.

A Line for the Book

We are told that The Chicago Tribune said it. We are not certain, but it is worthy of any source.

Blackman Addresses Wichita Convention—Harmony Prevails

Wichita, Kansas, Sept. 26.

By wire to Moving Picture World.

WHAT is said to be the most successful convention ever had by the M. P. T. O. of Kansas was held at the Hotel Broadview here, Monday, September 25. Morton Van Praag, president of the organization, expressed the belief that more real business had been done and more results had been forthcoming than at any other convention held in the Sunflower State.

The meeting can well be called a co-operative one, for more than 150 exhibitors and exchange men attended. Complete harmony prevailed. President Van Praag called the convention to order. The executive board was in session the entire morning and the general meeting was not called until 1 o'clock. The so-called Hoy system caused quite a lot of comment and the organization is preparing a statement regarding this system for the press.

Medical films, which have been produced by unscrupulous men in the game for pecuniary benefit rather than educating the public, were condemned. The association commended the national organization for its establishment of its music department and for its extension of public service work.

Secretary Smith read a letter concerning the new music department and the work it has done and is doing to eliminate the music tax. The letter declared that the committee already had secured the co-operation of thirty-five of the biggest authors, composers and publishers, and it urged the exhibitors to use their music in preference to that of others and thus aid the committee in its work. The matter of amendment to the copyright law is to be taken up at Washington very soon.

Co-operation also has been received by the committee from the record people, the Radio people, from the National Hotel Men's Association, as well as many other hotel associations, and from the National Association of Dancing Masters. It was also declared that it was very essential that the committee should have the co-operation of the exhibitors. Members were urged not to pay the music tax.

The legislative program for this year was spoken of and district committees will be appointed to handle the legislative program. It was stated that last year the Legislature was very much antagonistic to exhibitors. The proposed law of prohibiting children under sixteen from attending any amusement house, unless accompanied by parent or guardian, was disapproved of greatly.

If the law was passed granting the screen the same constitutional rights of free speech and expression as the newspapers, this would automatically do away with the censor board, it was said.

Van Praag introduced the organization's new business manager, C. E. Cook, saying that the biggest step forward the organization ever took was the appointment of Mr. Cook, who was formerly with Capper Publications. Mr. Cook outlined his plans for the coming year. He will start an intensive membership campaign, publish a bulletin every week for the exhibitor, secure more publicity, have a better co-operation with the exchange men and the censor board, and establish an information bureau. Probably the most important step will be to make the organization self-supporting. This is to be done by various means, solicited advertising, running of slides, etc.

A committee to co-operate in an advisory manner with the Kansas board of censorship was appointed, consisting of M. B. Shanberg, C. E. Cook and R. R. Biechele, all of Kansas City.

The opinion was voiced that unscrupulous exhibitors put into their advertising things which hurt the exhibitors in general. It was urged that better advertising methods be used and that suggestiveness be avoided.

The principal and most inspiring speaker at the banquet given at the expense of the exchanges was the Rev. Blackman, of Chanute, national chaplain of the American Legion. He said that if Jesus Christ were alive today, he would not only sanction movies, but would employ them from every angle to "put over" his message to humanity. Mr. Blackman's speech, "Jesus and the Movies," has created a great deal of comment whenever heard.

"Christ would not be slow to grasp the illimitable possibilities in the movies," Blackman declared, "and in addition to giving His sanction to their use, He probably would write scenarios, direct His own pictures and even go so far as to act for the clicking camera. He would employ all the modern agencies existing today to scatter His message over the world. He would utilize newspaper advertising, telephone and telegraph, airplanes and every known device.

"Jesus used modern methods when He taught. He was a keen student of psychology and He knew His crowds. I believe that He not only would recognize the movies by attending them, but that He would use them for all they are worth, to project His message of love and life to the hungry millions who gaze longingly at the silver sheet. And what material for the film producer that man Jesus would make! Wherever He went in this day as in that, crowds would follow and the movie cameras would click at every turn.

"Jesus would realize the possibilities of the screen in reaching multiplied audiences. It would be no small inspiration to know that when He stood before the audience the scene would be reproduced before a thousand crowds by the camera. Imagine what it would mean to see that strong, tender, mobile face looking from the screen! Think what an infinite number of lives would be touched and transformed by the sheer understanding of it!

"One of the greatest advantages that Jesus would find in the movies would be the possibilities for character portrayal. What a scenario Jesus could write with His knowledge of human emotions and actions, with His sympathy for human weakness and suffering, with His grasp of cause and effect in human lives! He could unfold before our eyes the great mysteries and lessons of life and we would be as shaken by them as were His audiences in His Galilean ministry."

Blackman declared that the movies are a more patent influence for the upbuilding of human character than any agency the world has ever known. He also thought that religious prejudice against motion pictures is diminishing, as church authorities are realizing the infinite power of the film.

Other speakers at the banquet were W. Y. Morgan, candidate for governor; Richard J. Hopkins, attorney general, and a candidate for justice of the Kansas Supreme Court, and Fred L. Crabb, president of the Kansas division of the Anti-Saloon League of America.

All the speakers rapped foolish censorship of movies.

Techni Co. Warned

Patents Infringed on, Jerome Is Told —Suits Threatened.

William Travers Jerome, vice-president of Techni Color, Inc., has been notified by Prizma, Inc., producers of Prizma color pictures, not to manufacture, exhibit, lease or sell any color motion picture films made according to the process and with the apparatus described and claimed in U. S. Patent to Mason, No. 1,348,029, dated July 27, 1920, and which is owned by Prizma. Mr. Jerome and Techni Color, Inc., are also requested to immediately discontinue further exhibition of the film now being exhibited at the Candler Building, New York, and to account to Prizma for all gains and advantages received therefrom. Prizma is now taking steps for the immediate filing of suits.

Forty-five men have subscribed $1,000,000 in forming Techni Color, Inc. The inventor of the process is Daniel Frost Comstock, formerly a member of the faculty of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. It consists of taking the pictures with a special camera on ordinary negatives, and coloring them by passing the negatives through a series of chemical baths after they have been developed in black and white. The company will not produce pictures but color negatives made by producing companies.

A corporation called the Techni Color, Inc., was chartered in Delaware September 12 last, and a subsidiary called the Techni Color Motion Picture Corporation has been chartered in Maine. It is proposed to build factories near this city and in Hollywood.

He had previously, on this trip, arranged for exchanges in Indianapolis and Milwaukee.

Mostly Our Films

Newfoundlanders Like Best Those from United States

Approximately 80 per cent. of the motion pictures exhibited in Newfoundland are of American origin, the remainder being Canadian, with a few English, according to a report just received from Consul Benedict, St. Johns. by the Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C. Practically all of the films are shown at St. Johns, the only municipality.

The programs in the Newfoundland theatres are along much the same lines as those of American houses, and consist usually of a news film or serial, one big picture and a comedy. Good melodrama is appreciated and is in good demand, but complex and problem pictures do not seem to take well. This may be due to a large extent to the fact that all films must have the approval of the local censor board before being exhibited. All the American stars that are popular in the United States are also popular in Newfoundland.

Public Service Department's Activities Get Quick Co-operation.

The quick and enthusiastic response that has greeted the initial activities of the Public Service and Educational Department of the Crandall Theatre in Washington, D. C., under the directorship of Mrs. Harriet Hawley Locher, has, the Crandall theatres state, amply demonstrated the value of such a public relations department as an integral part of the executive organization of every chain-theatre exhibiting unit in the United States.

Mrs. Locher's work has derived a considerable impetus from the splendid spirit of co-operation manifested toward the new Crandall undertaking by Mrs. Susie Root Rhodes, supervisor, and the Directors of the Municipal Playgrounds in the National Capital. While Mrs. Locher now has six flourishing organizations having direct contact with children represented on her advisory board, she deemed it best to exploit the interests of only one at a time and chose the Playgrounds as the medium of closest approach to all of the children at this season of the year.

A New Company

A new film production company has been formed, headed by Thomas Dixon, author of "The Birth of a Nation" and many successful novels and plays. The organization is now at work on the first of a series of feature screen plays adapted from Mr. Dixon's stories.

The production which is being screened is "The Beast," and a notable cast is said to have been assembled. Madelyn Clare has the leading female part, and Robert Ellis plays the male lead. Among others in the cast are Helen Ware and Gustav Von Seyfertitz.

New York headquarters of the company are at 43 West Thirty-seventh street, while production is going on at the Tilford studio, 344 West Forty-fourth street.

Kane On Tour

Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, who left New York for Los Angeles last Thursday, September 21, stopped over en route at Chicago, Kansas City and Topeka, for the purpose of meeting the Associated representatives in the two former cities, and of visiting friends at Topeka. From Tuesday, September 26, until Thursday, the 28th, he was at Santa Fe, New Mexico, thence to go direct to Los Angeles.

Showmen Losing Opportunity to Down Censorship at Election

FOR the first time in America, or anywhere else, a popular vote upon censored or uncensored films is at hand in Massachusetts, and through a referendum the intelligent electorate of the state is to be consulted as to its preference. Yet, despite the fact that this most important measure is to be acted upon barely six weeks hence, the whole question of movie-censorship has been allowed to become almost forgotten.

When about a year and a half ago the Massachusetts legislature passed, and the governor approved, an act for the state censorship of the films, the movie interests and other opponents of such supervision promptly gathered the 15,000 signatures necessary to a referendum upon the new law. As the new biennial law then became operative, this test of public opinion could not be made until the present Fall. It was believed, and declared, that the expression against this intrusion upon "the rights of the people" would be most significant.

New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania and some other states had ordained movie censorship by legislative act, handed down like a judicial decision upon the public and the purveyors of pictures; but this was the first time the public had been asked to express its own opinion upon the subject.

Proponents of this bill have not been idle during the past few months and a campaign has been carried on, somewhat under cover to be sure, that has been having considerable effect, and that will result in a favorable vote on the bill unless much more vigilance is shown by the interests who seek to combat a movie censorship.

These interests have been very lax thus far in their efforts to educate the public despite the fact that it is their own interests that are at stake. The theatre men have their screens, upon which to send forth their message, but even these as yet bear no urgings against censorship.

An attempt to prevent the use of screens for such purpose was made by the proponents of the censorship bill at the last session of the legislature, but this was defeated; but the theatre managements have failed to take advantage of the opportunity to spread their message. There is a general feeling prevalent that the National organization is working on the matter and is going to make the fight for the Massachusetts theatre men. Whether that is so, or not, the theatres could be a decided aid to any such fight and a showing of interest on the question might be effective in showing that the theatre owners are still willing to exert themselves.

The full text of the film censorship referendum question, as it will appear upon the ballots at the coming election, is as follows:

No. 3—"Shall a law (Chapter 438 of the Acts of 1921) which provides that it shall be unlawful for any person to exhibit or display publicity in this Commonwealth any motion picture film unless such film has been submitted to and approved by the Commissioner of Public Safety, who may, subject to the appeal given by the act, disapprove any film or part thereof which is obscene, indecent, immoral, inhuman or tends to debase or corrupt morals or incite to crime, and may, subject to the approval of the Governor and Council, make rules and regulations for the enforcement of the act, which law was passed in the House of Representatives by a majority not recorded, and in the Senate by 21 votes in the affirmative to 16 votes in the negative, and was approved by His Excellency the Governor, be approved?"

Industry Is Making Rapid Recovery from Depression

By ELMER PEARSON
General Manager, Pathe Exchange.

THROUGHOUT the course of my recent trip to the Pacific Coast, my sojourn there and the return journey, it was everywhere manifest that the picture industry was making a rapid recovery from what has been the longest and most severe period of depression it has ever experienced.

It was equally apparent that increased receipts at the box office had to maintain themselves for several weeks longer than ever before in order to convince exhibitors that good times were really on the way.

I suppose we cannot blame the exhibitor for that attitude in view of what he has been through during the last year or more; but, of course, a regular good old-fashioned revival of patron interest in motion pictures cannot take place before the exhibitor demonstrates his own confidence in present and future possibilities by giving his public only the best, and getting behind it with his old time fervor in advertising and exploitation.

Likewise, the increased rentals must make themselves felt through the exchanges and back to the producers before that very essential of the industry's future gets fully active again in the production of wonderful pictures in sufficient numbers to sustain complete patron interest.

Production activities in Los Angeles were, of course, greater than at any time during the last two years; but on every hand came the query: "When are we going to start getting real returns on pictures made last year so that we can have real money with which to develop this big plan, or that, which has been mapped out for months?"

Fortunately, however, it is apparent that the market just now affords a few real big pictures that will suffice for the exhibitors' immediate needs, and beyond all doubt the returns on these will act as a further spur to production activities. But surely no exhibitor should hesitate to book all the good stuff available, because there is not any too much of it, and he will need all there is, and more, to sustain patrons' revived but critical interest.

I was afforded an opportunity to see considerable product destined for early release on the Pathe program, and was much gratified to note uniform and splendid improvement in quality which each of our producers has been able to effect.

On this trip I visited our branches at Chicago, Omaha, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Portland, Seattle, Spokane and Minneapolis. At each of them, both manager and exhibitors, with whom I talked, were enthusiastic about the future outlook based upon the recovery that has already been noted.

Cohen Leaves Metro

Future Plans Not Stated But May Tie-Up Abroad

Harry J. Cohen, one of the organizers of Metro Pictures Corporation and a most active officer of that concern, has resigned, to take effect November 1. The action comes unexpectedly and just after an exhaustive trip to Metro's various branches and allied concerns throughout the foreign field.

During Mr. Cohen's association with Metro he has occupied the posts of branch manager, district manager, sales and promotion manager and foreign director. The latter was his position at the time his resignation was offered to Marcus Loew. In the past seventeen years Mr. Cohen has held but two positions, that with the General Film Company in its golden days, and the last with Metro, which has existed since 1914. He recently celebrated his seventeenth year in the film business and is a veritable walking encyclopedia of things of the stage and screen.

Just what Mr. Cohen's future plans are, is not stated, but it was current gossip in London last June that he had been the recipient of offers from various German and British producers to tie-up permanently for the betterment of distribution of their products. At that time Mr. Cohen refused to consider the proffers.

Pathe Dividend

Pathe Exchange, Inc., by its secretary, Lewis Innerarity, announces that a dividend at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum on the preferred stock of the company has been declared payable on September 30, 1922, to stockholders of record at the close of business on September 20, 1922.

The statement explains that these are the dividends accumulated since the dates of issue to and including the eighth day of September, 1922.

More Appointments

Before leaving for Los Angeles, Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, announced the following appointments to the sales organization of that company: John Mooney to be sales manager of the Buffalo office and Mr. V. M. Young as Associated representative in the Dallas territory, effective September 18. Also C. L. Hickman, Associated representative in the St. Louis territory, effective September 11, and C. W. McDaniels, Associated representative in the Milwaukee territory, effective September 25.

Ratify Merger

Chicago exhibitors met on September 22 and ratified the action of consolidation and raised $500 in dues and subscriptions for the joint committee. There were thirty-one exhibitors present with sufficient proxies to vote an approval with a result that there is now but one M. P. T. O. A. organization in Illinois.

Plans to Produce

To Make Chinese City Another Hollywood

Plans are on foot to make Nantunchow, a model industrial city on the Yangtsze in China, an up-to-date moving picture production centre. Zuliong L. Lee, a Chinaman who is conversant with Western methods, having been a student in the United States, is head of the enterprise, and has associated with him Harry Gregin, of New York, an expert camera man and photographic authority.

It is planned to put the production basis on a different standard from anything of the kind ever attempted in the Orient as Chinese girls are to take leading roles, whereas heretofore all acting done in China was carried on solely by men. Many prominent Chinese are interested in the project, among them being Chang Chien, who built the model city; General Chu Chin-lang, former civil governor of Canton, and Mr. Chen Ling-soong.

Fairbanks Coming

Film Stars on Business and Pleasure Trip

Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and party will soon depart from Los Angeles for their annual visit to New York and are expected to arrive in New York, Tuesday, October 3.

The chief purpose of this visit will be combining the pleasure of the trip with the business of presenting their latest photoplay productions. The world's premier of "Douglas Fairbanks in 'Robin Hood'" will shortly be given in New York.

Miss Pickford is bringing along the completed production of her latest photoplay, "Tess of the Storm Country," the premier showing of which will be announced later.

This visit to New York of Mary and Doug will be of about a month's duration.

Appoint Supervisors

Goldwyn Makes Branch Managers District Heads.

In addition to its twenty-four branch exchanges, and the local manager of each office, Goldwyn Distributing Corporation has appointed seven supervisors to oversee the distribution of its product.

The country has been divided into seven districts and each supervisor will have several exchanges in his territory. The supervisors were formerly managers of Goldwyn's branch exchanges. Their names and the cities where they will make their headquarters follow: S. Eckman, Jr., New York; Ben Fish, Denver; J. A. Koerpel, Cleveland; H. Leonhardt, Los Angeles; Arthur Lucas, Atlanta; C. E. Maberry, Chicago, and W. E. Truog, Kansas City.

Mrs. Coogan Dined

Sol Lesser this week gave a dinner party at the Hotel Biltmore in honor of Mrs. Jack Coogan, mother of the famous star, who is now in Gotham. Included in the party were Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Gore, Irving M. Lesser, Harry Rathner, and several others in the film world of Gotham.

Mrs. Coogan arrived last Sunday and will remain in New York several weeks.

Goulding Resigns

Charles H. Goulding has resigned as managing-director of the Eastman Theatre, recently opened in Rochester, N. Y. His successor has not been appointed.

Block Goes West

Ralph Block, former well-known dramatic critic and special feature writer on the staff of the New York Tribune, and more recently scenario editor for Goldwyn, has signed a contract with Paramount and left Saturday for Hollywood, where he will become one of the production editors at the Lasky studio.

Arranging for Game

The committee in charge of the fall tournament to be held under the auspices of the Film Daily, is making every effort to have it the biggest event of its kind. The tournament will be held October 19 at the Sound View Golf Club, Great Neck, Long Island. Applications to enter are still being received.

Denial Made That Censorship Has or Can Improve Film Industry

DISCUSSION looking toward the improvement of moving pictures was carried on at the ıncheon given by the Better Pictures ssociation of the World at the Bilt-ıore Hotel, Tuesday, September 26.

It was unqualifiedly denied that ensorship has, or can, in any way elp to make pictures better. This as one of the outstanding statements the meeting.

Of particular interest to exhibitors as the statement by Dr. Robert Vatson, chairman of the co-operating ommittee of the association, that he elieves in making every effort to elp exhibitors arrange with producers be allowed to view the pictures hich they are to buy before the sale consummated.

"Exhibitors know their public," Dr. Vatson said, "they know what kinds pictures the public wants, and are ıtirely capable of discriminating gainst good and bad pictures. There's reason why they should be kept in ıe dark when making their pur-ıases." Dr. Watson stated also that ıe public does not want "innocuous lms," and that pictures can be virile ıd yet "clean" all the way through. e said a plan should be adopted to award a seal of merit to pictures of real worth.

Arthur S. Friend, of Distinctive Photoplays, speaking from the producers standpoint, backed up Dr. Watson in his statement that virility is the life of pictures, and told about the vast number of persons whom the pictures reach and of the great influence they exert.

That censorship is a failure is clearly shown by the films that reach the public after having gone through the censorship mill, said Dr. Clifton Harby Levy, representing the New York Board of Jewish Ministers. He contended that better pictures tend to make better men and women because of their far-reaching influence, and that the way to put the unworthy class of pictures out of business is to ignore them, and not to advertise them by holding them up to censure. He said that churches and public halls should buy and present the better class of pictures under a seal of merit, in order to illustrate to the public that there really are such pictures made.

Mrs. Harry Sternberger, secretary of the Council of Jewish Women, pledged the support of her organization toward any move looking toward the betterment of pictures.

Will Hays was not present because of press of business, but he had an able representative in the person of Lee Haubner, who said that better moving pictures would come when the public demanded them and that the public would learn to appreciate better pictures when the producers made them better. In other words, he compared the problems of the industry to a never ending circle. He said he applauded the efforts of the B. P. A. and the National Board of Review, but the job they have undertaken is very difficult because there are so many differences of opinion as to what constitutes a good picture and what makes an inferior one.

An opportunity for the public at large to make known their desires as to the sorts of pictures they prefer should be given to the people, said Ilsey Boone, secretary of the B. P. A., and John A. Quinn, president of the organization, also made an address. Following the speaking which came after an excellent luncheon, the United Artists production, "The Man Who Played God," was screened and enthusiastically received.

Warren Clergy Host

nly One Opposes Distribution of Religious Series.

Fred Warren, vice-president of the merican Releasing Corporation, was ost at a luncheon this week at the otel Astor, New York, to prominent ergymen of the Protestant, Roman atholic and Jewish faiths, as part of ıe regular meeting of the Theatre wners' Chamber of Commerce. The scussion centered around means of dvancing the educational, religious ıd cultural aspects of motion pic-ıres. "The Voice of the Land" series, ıotographed by Dr. J. E. Holley, hich shows practically every spot on ırth mentioned in the Bible, was, ith one exception, praised as fur-shing theatre owners with an oppor-ınity to do a real public service. hese films are released by American eleasing Corporation as a group.

Pleads for Closer Affiliation.

Charles Steiner welcomed the guests ıd Charles L. O'Reilly pleaded for a oser affiliation between theatre and ıurch. Bernard Edelhertz saw in the booking of the pictures an opportunity to uplift the spiritual tone of the community. The Rev. Dr. E. B. Russell discussed the production of the pictures—how they were made by Dr. Holley for the Geographic Film Company and have Prizma color sections. He said that the Washington convention of the Federated Churches of America was enthusiastic about them. Speaking for Will Hays, Courtland Smith voiced admiration of the spirit of co-operation shown at the luncheon.

The different clergymen urged the wide distribution of the pictures until Rabbi Joseph Silverman spoke. He took a different attitude.

Teach Religion in Churches.

"You can't teach religion without teaching theology," he said. "There are no such things as general ideas of religion. Everyone has his own conception of religion, which means his own theology. The only place to teach religion is in the churches, the synagogues and the Sunday schools. If any company wishes to produce pictures to be shown in Sunday schools, that is another matter. But you can't have pictures shown in public and treating of religious themes without giving offense."

A New Sort of Tie-up

Exhibitors Say They Also Will Profit by New Arrangement.

The official bulletin of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin of Sept. 14, tells of a recent tie-up of the Wisconsin Theatre owners with the Selznick organization for promotion of November as M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin-Selznick Month.

According to the arrangements the theatre owners' organization will share in the receipts which the Selznick organization collects from the showing of its pictures during that month. This arrangement, the bulletin says, is distinctly different from any which producers or distributers have heretofore made with exhibitors, as under former agreements the producers and distributors were the sole beneficiaries, it is stated.

"The exhibitor has had so many of those weeks thrust upon him," the Bulletin says, "that he finally got tired of working for producers' weeks and began asking when the producers were going to have an exhibitors' week." The tie-up with the Selznick organization, it is said, was the outcome.

Leaves for Europe

Bruce Johnson, First National Foreign Manager, to Make Survey of Firm's Business

On the eve of the departure of Bruce Johnson, manager of the foreign department of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., for Europe, an important foreign film transaction was consummated between Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and Sol Lesser for the entire foreign distribution of Jackie Coogan's recently completed picture, "Oliver Twist."

Johnson, who sailed September 22 for London will spend three months traveling through England, Germany, Austria, Belgium, Holland, France, Spain, Italy, Portugal, and in fact all of the foreign countries.

The purpose of his trip is to thoroughly cover the foreign affairs of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and to establish exchanges in those countries where the business of First National warrants it. First National now maintains exchanges in England, France, Sweden and Germany.

Accompanying Mr. Johnson are David P. Howells, president of David P. Howells, Inc., and Louis Brock, representing Joseph Schenck.

Closes Foreign Deal

Chipman, Ltd., Contracts for Metro Company Productions

Metro Pictures Corporation closed this week a contract with Chipman, Ltd., whereby this firm will have distributive rights for Metro releases in Cuba, Porto Rico, San Domingo, Trinidad, the Windward Islands and British Guiana for two years.

This is the largest contract ever closed for this Caribbean territory, according to an assertion this week by Harry J. Cohen, foreign manager of Metro, who was actively instrumental in the consummation of negotiations, and who made the result public. Roy Chandler represented Chipman, Ltd.

Declare Dividends

A four per cent. dividend on the preferred stock was voted at the regular meeting of the Board of Directors of Associated Exhibitors on Thursday, September 21.

Of this, 2 per cent. covers the dividends on the preferred stock for the third quarter of 1922, payable October 1 to preferred stockholders as of record on September 20, 1922. The remaining 2 per cent. being as accrued dividends on the preferred stock for the year 1921 and is payable on October 1 to preferred stockholders of record on June 1, 1921, or their successors in interest.

Brunet Resignation Accepted

At the regular meeting of the Board of Directors of Pathe Exchange, Inc., the resignation of Paul Brunet as president was formally accepted and the Board authorized the following statement:

"No action was taken on the election of a new president nor is any such action contemplated for some time to come, and in all probability will be deferred until our annual meeting some time next year.

"The Pathe executive organization as now composed has been functioning for over a year with splendid efficiency and with entire satisfaction to all concerned. We accordingly see no immediate need of rearrangement or change.

"Furthermore, the resignation of Mr. Brunet will in no way affect the policy of the company nor its management."

Back from Palestine

J. Gordon Edwards Completes Big Fox Picture in Holy Land

J. Gordon Edwards, director general of photoplay specials of the William Fox organization, returned from Palestine last week, having completed a big job. He took an entire company with him to Palestine, and there, in the Holy Land, and in Jerusalem, in the very places described in the Bible, he photographed the picturization of Wright Lorimer's novel, "The Shepherd King."

The story deals with the life of David, beginning when he is a mere shepherd lad and kills the giant Goliath, and later shows him annointed by Samuel and proclaimed King of Israel.

Miss Violet Mersereau, the leading woman of the cast, also returned to America with Mr. Edwards. The remainder of the company returned to the William Fox studios in Rome, Italy, where other pictures will be made.

Annual Convention

The Cleveland Cinema Club will hold its first annual convention at the Hotel Statler, Cleveland, Ohio, October 6 and 7. The National Board of Review will co-operate. It is said that Will Hays and famous screen stars are expected to attend. The Cinema Club is organized to study the art of motion pictures and encourage its best development in Cleveland.

F.B.O. Head on Tour

Harry Berman, Distribution Head, Completing Sales Reorganization

Harry M. Berman, general manager of distribution of the Film Booking Offices of America, is leaving on October 1 on another tour of F. B. O. exchanges, which will take him as far as the Pacific Coast, where he will supervise the establishment of a new branch in Portland, Ore., to serve exhibitors in that territory. Mr. Berman's trip will also result in the opening of the new F. B. O. branch in Salt Lake City.

Since Mr. Berman took office with the F. B. O. no less than seven new exchanges have been announced by that company. In addition to Portland and Salt Lake City, branches will open shortly in Charlotte, N. C. and Des Moines, Iowa; while in Albany, N. Y., Sioux Falls, N. D. and Oklahoma City, F. B. O. exchanges are now operating, having been established by Mr. Berman.

This present tour of the F. B. O. general manager will complete the reorganization of the sales force of that company.

Butler to Write Ads.

Prominent Author to Furnish "Copy" for First National Announcements

What is probably a new precedent in the motion picture industry will be established when Ellis Parker Butler, author of "Pigs Is Pigs," writes a series of six advertsements to run consecutive weeks in the Saturday Evening Post for Associated First National Pictures, Inc., on "East Is West."

Famous authors have given their time and talent freely to the writing of screen stories and continuities but this is probably the first time that a writer of national repute in the fiction field has consented to write national advertising for a motion picture.

The agreement was made as the result of an invitation recently extended to Mr. Butler by First National to witness a private showing of the picture. So enthused was the writer of light comedy fiction over the artistic and entertainment merits of "East Is West" that he was the first to suggest that the picture should be advertised nationally in a becoming manner.

Mr. Butler is to be given a free hand in the preparation of these advertisements and will tell the Saturday Evening Post's two million and a half readers exactly what he thinks of "East is West" and of Miss Talmadge's performance as Ming Toy.

Facsimiles of these advertisements will be given to each exhibitor running the picture because of their punch, artistry and effectiveness for lobby display purposes.

Regional News and Gossip

The Dinsmore Brothers are again opening their Majestic and Grand Theatres at Patton, Pa., full time. The Majestic has been closed all summer, while the Grand has been open but two nights a week.

The Grand and Regent Theatres at Blairsville, Pa., have also been reopened after an all-summer shutdown, owing to poor business caused by the general depression and the coal strike.

Among other theatres in the territory which have been running only part time, and which are again open six nights a week, are the Imperial and Strand at New Kensington and the Olympic at Arnold, Pa.

The lobby of the Strand Theatre, Lincoln avenue, was precipitated to the basement on Friday afternoon, September 22, carrying with it sixty children who were gathered there awaiting admittance to a free showing of the first episode of a serial. One eight-year-old girl was almost instantly killed, while all the rest were more or less seriously injured. Sol Selznick is owner of the building and A. H. Sauer is manager of the house. Both men were injured in the disaster.

Pittsburgh's newest photoplay house, the Cameo, on Fifth avenue downtown, was opened on September 18 with "Human Hearts.' The Cameo has been entirely rebuilt, and was formerly Rowland & Clark's Savoy Theatre. Details of construction and photos of the new house will appear in the World shortly.

Guy Ida, formerly of the Imperial Theatre, New Kensington, has taken over the Star Theatre in Tarentum, having purchased the same from Oscar Featherbush.

John Hando was in Pittsburgh recently and stated that his Grand Theatre at Monongahela, Pa., will soon be ready for reopening. The Grand was destroyed by fire several months ago.

Barth Dattola, well-known New Kensington exhibitor, has returned home after a few days' stay at Montreal.

About twenty-five men, among them some of the most prominent exhibitors in the Pittsburgh film section, as well as representatives of the press and the sales force of the local branch of the Film Booking Offices, gathered in the Hawaiian room of the William Penn Hotel, Tuesday noon, September 19, and were entertained at luncheon by Carter DeHaven and Manager Abe Schnitzer of the local F. B. O. branch.

Edward J. Bauman, one of the most experienced motion picture men in the country, has assumed charge of the Rex and Plaza Theatres at Wheeling, W. Va., as house and exploitation manager.

Charles Deford, of the Deford Theatre, Martinsburg, Pa., has sold his house to Joe Bongiovanni, of the Empire Theatre, Clymer, Pa. Mr. Deford only recently opened this pretty little house of 450 seats. He states he is retiring from the business altogether and is going to California.

O. J. Sybert, of the Grand Theatre, Marietta, O., has taken over the Grand Theatre at Butler, Pa., and opened the same on September 20 with "The Storm."

Harold Lloyd in "Grandma's Boy" got the crowds for two weeks at Pittsburgh's Million-Dollar Grand. The Cameraphone in the East End began the picture on September 25.

Rowland & Clark's beautiful State Theatre was filled to capacity Sunday evening, September 17, when a trade showing of the new Owen Moore Select release, "Love Is An Awful Thing," was given.

The construction work on the new Virginian Theatre, Charleston, W. Va., is rapidly going on to a finish. The building will be completed within a few days and pictures will be shown before September is over. When completed the total amount invested will be $250,000.

The Littlestone brothers, William and Albert, of East Pittsburgh, have returned home after spending several days' vacation in Atlantic City.

The East Liberty Cameraphone held its annual fall fashion show recently, in conjunction with East Liberty merchants, and met with the usual success.

The Strand Theatre, New Kensington, Pa., is now running full time, after having been open but three days per week the past several months. O. A. Mardorf is owner of the house and says prospects are much better for future business.

Ben Engelberg is completely rebuilding his Elmore Theatre on Centre avenue, Pittsburgh, and he says when it is completed he will have one of the finest houses in the city. The new Elmore will seat 1,000 persons, and Ben expects to spend about $100,000 before it is completed.

"Bill" Robson, Paramount exploiteer, spent a day in New York recently and dropped a card to the World representative that beginning September 25 he would be connected with the local Goldwyn office in a similar capacity.

Walter Silverberg, proprietor of the Mercer Square Theatre at Greenville, Pa., was a Pittsburgh visitor recently. He told the World representative that it was too hot to stay in the theatre and too hot to play golf, so he came down to pay the exchange managers a social call.

D. F. Ferguson, formerly manager of Rowland & Clark's Savoy Theatre, Pittsburgh, is in charge of the accessories department of the First National exchange, succeeding Kennedy Bair.

Milan Savlovich, of the National Theatre, Johnstown, Pa., was a recent Pittsburgh film exchange visitor.

Mr. Maud Bleakley has taken over the Rivoli Theatre on Brushton avenue, Brushton, and has changed the name to the Lincoln.

Dennis A. Harris, of the Harris & Davis Enterprises, has returned to this city after a several weeks' stay in Europe. Mr. Harris was honor guest at a luncheon held by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania at the General Forbes Hotel, Wednesday, September 27.

Employes of the local Universal office journeyed to Butler, Pa., on Wednesday, September 20th, and formed a big parade with their machines, using red fire, n' everything to attract the attention of the street crowds. Reason for all this was the grand opening of O. J. Sybert's Grand Theatre there, where "The Storm" was shown.

Mr. Greenwood, of the Star Theatre, Union City, Pa., cannot decide what kind of an automobile he wants. Won't somebody write him and give him their opinion? Help a brother exhibitor!

The West Virginia Amusement Company is erecting a new house at Fairmont, W. Va., which, it is expected, will open December 1.

The news has just leaked out that Howard Cross, formerly connected with the S. & S. Film & Supply Company here, and part owner of the newest film building on Forbes street, was married the other day to Miss Claire Griffiths, bookkeeper of the local Second National exchange.

Eddie Wheeler, one of the film veterans in the Pittsburgh territory, has taken over the Penn Film Service from Matthew Teplitz, who has announced his retirement from the film business. Years ago Eddie conducted the Grit Film & Supply Company here and later owned the American Standard Film Company. He was also salesman for the Penn and Standard exchanges in the Steel City. Most recently he was publicity director for the Grand Theatre, Greensburg, Pa.

Albany Film Business Shows Over 10 Per Cent. Increase

Compared with a year ago this time, motion picture business is showing anywhere from a 10 to 25 per cent. increase in the Albany territory, which includes something over 300 houses and which extends to the Canadian line on the north, runs nearly to Syracuse on the west and to Binghamton and Kingston on the south. While September is generally regarded as a slow month in motion picture circles, it has been just the contrary this year.

Such is the story which comes not only from the exchanges and the road men, but from the exhibitors themselves. In place of the hard luck stories which one heard throughout the territory a year ago, one is greeted with smiles as the exhibitors state that an unusually good summer has been followed with a fall opening that gives every indication of approaching normal business, or better.

"The outlook is certainly encouraging," said George Roberts, of Albany, manager of the Colonial and the Hudson Theatres, a veteran of the business and one who has made a name for himself through making the residential houses pay handsome profits.

Frank V. Bruner, manager of the Pathe exchange in this city, claims that present day business is showing a 25 per cent. increase over that of a year ago, and substantiates his assertions from the books themselves.

J. H. Morgan, local manager of the Educational Film exchange, places the increase at 20 per cent. above a year ago.

"In the smaller towns, where labor conditions have finally been adjusted," said Mr. Morgan, "the increase has been heavier."

"There is no kicking heard these days," remarked R. C. Halligan, manager of the Universal Film exchange here. "Last summer was not a bad one for the ordinary exhibitor. A year ago, one heard nothing but kicks from the exhibitors. They were always looking forward to a good week, but that week failed to put in an appearance and the summer was over before it ever came. There are no complaints now, except perhaps, from places where competition is very sharp and exhibitors are obliged to pay more for pictures."

Without an exception, exhibitors in Albany, Syracuse, Watertown and other places just visited by the World correspondent, assert that business is showing more encouraging signs than in many months. Take Fred Elliott's theatre in Albany, as an example. It has a poor location, owing to the fact that a prospective patron must pass the larger and more elaborate Strand, as well as one or two other houses, and once at the theatre, must climb a steep pair of stairs to the ticket office, and yet Mr. Elliott, running double features throughout the summer, admits that he has made money.

In Syracuse, the Strand, the Eckel and other of the larger houses, are playing to capacity crowds day after day, while the Olympic and the Avon in Watertown, running the highest type pictures procurable, are drawing not only audiences from the city, but from many miles around, the city being fortunate in having state roads entering it from every direction.

Watertown has a population of but 30,000 inhabitants. The managers, however, have augmented this by many thousands by making a direct appeal to those in the rural sections, men and women owning automobiles, and who can easily reach Watertown within perhaps a half hour's time, and with the assurance of an enjoyable evening's entertainment.

"We don't depend entirely upon Watertown for our patronage," said one of these managers a few days ago. "We seek out the country districts and our receipts show that in making special efforts to attract such a patronage, we will show a most substantial profit at the end of the year."

C. E. Taylor, of Port Leyden, is planning to erect a picture theatre in Frankfort. He has just purchased the site of the former Waterbury Theatre destroyed by fire about two years ago. The new house will be of stucco and will accommodate about 400 persons.

Louis Buettner, of Cohoes, vice-president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State, and who has been sick for some time past, was in town this week. Mr. Buettner owns a couple of houses in Cohoes, one in Mechanicville, and one in Hudson Falls, and knows practically every exhibitor in the state.

Proctor's Grand here has booked "Grandma's Boy" for the entire week of October 9. It is the first feature picture ever booked at this house for a straight week.

William Berinstein, owner of Colonial Theatre here, and two houses in Elmira, will reside in New York City after October 1. He expects to make frequent visits to this city and Elmira.

Exhibitors and operators here are still differing over conditions to prevail for the next twelve months. George Roberts, president of the local exhibitor association, will probably call a meeting within the next few days in the hopes of bringing about an agreement. The question is not so much over wages as hours.

Charles H. Moyer, of Herkimer, who recently bought out "Pop" Linton's house there and now controls the town, was in Albany the past week.

The old Van Curler Opera House in Schenectady, which ran burlesque last year, will start in showing pictures on Sunday, October 15, according to present plans. John Hogarty, of New York, who used to manage Chauncey Olcott, has taken over the house, and named W. H. Wright as local manager. Pictures will prevail on Sunday nights with road shows at intervals during the week.

David Lithgow, who looks after the art work at the Mark Strand in Albany, has devised a sort of open book program, giving the names and dates of coming attractions, for the lobby. From a distance, it resembles a handsome book.

"Grandma's Boy" has been selected as the opening feature for Schenectady's new State, owned by the Strand interests, and which is scheduled to open next month.

J. H. Morgan, manager of the Educational Film Exchange here, is smiling these days with the adjustment of labor troubles in the paper mill towns north of here. Take Fort Edward, for instance, Lew Fisher, who runs a house there, and who has been open but one day a week, has now decided to run five nights. Up to a week or two ago, the paper mills there had been closed for sixteen months.

"Don't talk about any cut in admission prices," remarked George Roberts, manager of the Colonial and the Hudson Theatres in Albany, a few days ago. "We are just getting on our feet and trying to make up for last year's losses."

There is a rumor to the effect that Marcus Loew is planning to erect a new theatre and office building in Albany on the site of Keeler's Hotel, which was burned three or four years ago.

Toledo Is Still Negotiating Over Musicians' Wage Scale

The Toledo Theatre Managers' Association and the Toledo Musicians' Union are still negotiating over the wage scale for the picture and theatre houses. The union officials are asking for an increase in wages. This the managers' association, it is learned, will positively refuse to grant and they have come back with a counter proposition to the union officials with a proposed 10 per cent. reduction in wages. It is expected, however, that the coming week will see the matter settled amicably.

The operators are jubilant as they have just signed a new agreement with the managers for the ensuing year which calls for a substantial increase in wages.

With the opening of Keith's Theatre this week, all the picture houses and theatres have opened for the fall season in this territory. All the managers are rejoicing over the bright outlook for good business here this winter, and with that end in view the Temple, Rivoli, Loew's Valentine, Keith's and Pantheon have lined up the best pictures available in the country for the winter season.

The railroad strike in this vicinity is now over and with the Overland factory going good all the leading picture houses are being well patronized and it is believed that the crisis in the movie industry in this section is now past.

Motion picture censorship is a matter of weighing evidence—the censors are the public's judge and jury. Two 25-year-old girls, keeping that thought foremost in their minds, now constitute, literally, film censorship in Ohio.

Several months ago, Mrs. Evelyn Snow of Mt. Vernon, resigned as chief censor for the state, after the department had become more or less of a storm center. Then the two assistant censors, Miss Edith Luethi, who has taught school, and Miss Susannah M. Warfield, who has worked in an insurance office, stepped in temporarily. They have been doing the work of the chief censor since.

"I'm satisfied with the way things are going now, and everyone else seems to be," said Vernon Riegel, head of the state department of education, of which the censorship division is a part. "I don't know when I'll appoint a chief censor."

All attendance records were roken at the Elmwood Theatre his past week. It was all caused y the introduction of Frank Leon nd Herbert Birchall as players f the new organ. Mr. Leon was ormerly feature organist at Grauman's Theatre, Los Angeles, while Mr. Birchall comes from he Conservatory of Music, Manhester, England. Mr. Fowler nnounced the new music feature vith a big advertising campaign. The Elmwood orchestra has been lispensed with.

The recently opened Olympic as lost its house manager, Wiliam McKenna has resigned and eturned to the Shubert Theatre in Detroit. Fred M. Shafer, managing director of the Lafayette Square and Olympic, will soon appoint a successor.

The Victoria has a fine new stage setting. The William Hengerer Company has installed a magnificent dressing of peacock blue silk, which is made doubly attractive by the use of new lighting arrangements. Manager Arthur L. Skinner has also installed a new screen, thirty feet high surrounded by a frame forty feet high. All the big ones from the leading studios will be shown on the Victoria screen this season.

The manager of the Lumberg Theatre in Niagara Falls, one Harris Lumberg, is back from a fishing trip in the land of the Maple Leaf. Harris said he caught a lot of fish. We took his word for it.

A. C. Hayman, head of the Strand and Cataract theatre companies in Niagara Falls, is vacationing in Gotham.

The new organ which M. Shea is having installed in Shea's Hippodrome will be ready next week, it is expected. This mammoth instrument, together with the forty-piece orchestra, should supply the music needs of the big house in very fine shape. A noted organist has been engaged. Business at Shea's Hippodrome is now top notch. Patrons are always getting more than their money's worth.

Eugene A. Pfeil, Strand manager, attended a wedding last Saturday night. It was his sister's. Gene acted as best man. As a best man, Gene is a good theatre manager.

The Lafayette Square now has its famous organist, C. Sharpe Minor back at the console of the Wurlitzer and again attracting capacity houses. Managing Director Fred M. Shafer is also back on the job following a brief illness.

A large delegation from this village motored to Rochester, Wednesday, September 20, to attend the first annual clambake staged by the Rochester Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association at Point Pleasant. They did not regret the trip, many Long Island bivalves going on the casualty list.

Manager Vincent McFaul announces that M. Mallotte, one of the noted organists of the West Coast, has been engaged to play the mammoth organ now being installed in Shea's Hippodrome and which will be dedicated about October 1. The "Hip," by the way, is now booked solid until next spring and about everything worth while in screendom will be shown on the Hippodrome screen during the season. The past two weeks have been record breakers, caused by "Blood and Sand," and "Grandma's Boy."

Fred Gillen has resigned as general manager and vice-president of the Kodeco Theatre Corporation of Binghamton to become associated with Rosenthal & Rubin, department store owners. Dave Cohen and Ned Kornblite will take charge of the Strand Theatre, which Mr. Gillen managed. The Kodeco interests control the Strand, Armory, Star and Symphony Theatres in the Southern Tier city.

The Grand Theatre in Welland, Ont., has boosted its admission prices. Manager William Dawdy blames the higher cost of productions.

Fred M. Shafer, managing director of the Lafayette Square, is recovering from a serious operation in a local hospital. He will be confined to his home for at least ten days. In the meantime, Bill Van Dyne is looking after things at the big theatre.

The Pastime Theatre has been reopened. Manager John Pferd is giving his patrons some splendid film offerings.

Buffalo will have a visit from Irene Castle, on the evening of November 3, when the famous dancer and screen star will put on a fashion revue in Elmwood Music Hall.

Manager A. Beckerich, of the Loew State, is planning a big campaign to announce the coming of "A Broadway Rose" the week of October 2. Mae Murray is a great favorite with Loew audiences and Al expects to chalk up new box-office figures.

The old Loew Theatre in Hamilton, Ont., is now the Capitol. The house reopened Saturday, September 16, with "The Prisoner of Zenda." The theatre is under the management of N. L. Nathanson. The Capitol is practically a new house since its redecoration and remodeling.

Joseph Casala, 45 years old, owner of the Star Theatre, Niagara Falls, was stricken while in the basement of the theatre and died on the way to the hospital. He leaves a widow and five children.

The Capitol, Newark, N. Y.'s new picture theatre, is nearing completion and will open this winter. A. B. Depauw will manage the house, which will seat 1,200. The theatre is one of the links in the chain operated by Associated Theatres, Inc., of which Harold P. Dygert is president.

Charles L. Hamer, manager of the Crescent Theatre, Ithaca, died last week of pneumonia.

Bruce Fowler, manager of the Elmwood, is planning a big program to dedicate the mammoth organ in his popular west side house next week. Frank Leon, the organist, has arrived from the Blue Mouse, Seattle.

Ki Makes the Old New

E. D. Kielmann, familiarly known just as "Ki," who manages the Grand Theatre, Topeka, Kans., sends us a clipping from the Topeka Daily Capital that is interesting reading. It seems that "Ki" ran Universal's "Going Straight," showing Mary Pickford as she was twelve years ago, the first half of the week, and followed the second half with Universal's "Mirrors," showing the inauguration of President McKinley, in addition to "Fascination."

The first half of "Ki's" week was devoted to three days of what he called an "Old Time Movie" program, including illustrated songs, and Elrick B. Davis, in the newspaper, aptly expressed the town's appreciation of "Ki's" novelty entertainment. It all goes to again show that the old stuff is new when it's old enough, and that your patrons appreciate your efforts to give 'em something different.

Boston Police on Trail of Self-Styled "Movie Scouts"

Police of Greater Boston are making a spirited search for a couple of self-styled "movie scouts" who have been working in the South Boston section of the city, and victimizing parents of prepossessing children out of small sums of money, after cajoling them into believing that their offspring are in a class with Jackie Coogan and others in the stellar class. The woman paves the way with praise of the children's personal appearance and a line of chatter concerning the high salaries paid to child stars. The man then follows with his little camera and makes pictures of the children for submission to the "powers that be," upon receipt of $10, or as much more as can be obtained.

The Quincy Theatre, which has been closed for several months and which was run by New York parties prior to going dark, has just been reopened under a Quincy management and very successful auspices. All the city officials were guests on opening night, and a meeting of the Quincy city council was hurried through so that the city fathers would not be late. Fred B. Murphy and his manager, William DeWolfe, were remembered with many baskets of flowers and the stage front was banked with them, as were the offices of the theatre officials. Both were congratulated on making the house a strictly Quincy proposition.

Fashionable folk in the exclusive North Shore summer colony have just been treated to a novel entertainment by Mr. and Mrs. Bryce J. Allan, who recently have returned to these shores after a long period of travel abroad. In this instance they hired a Beverly theatre and entertained some hundred odd guests at a "movie party," followed by a late supper at their summer place, "Allanbank," at Beverly Cove. Mrs. Allan, who is one of the choice group who said thumbs up or down on the invitation lists for the exclusive assemblies at which Boston's "four hundred" was wont to trip the light fantastic, is believed to have "started something," as the saying is, and "movie parties" may become a fad this winter.

Andrew J. Davis, of Jamaica Plain, for some time manager of the Strand Theatre at Fitchburg, has been transferred to the Belmont-Waverley Strand Theatre as resident manager. He has just begun his duties with the first anniversary of this playhouse, one of the most popular in Greater Boston. Before taking up the work of a theatrical manager Mr. Davis was assistant manager of the Georgian in Boston, a widely known cafe, built by the late George A. Dodge, proprietor of Paragon Park at Nantasket Beach and modelled after the big Metropolitan eating places. He held this position from the opening of the Georgian up to the advent of prohibition and the opening of the arid era, which forced the closing of many such places throughout the country.

The Athol Amusement Company, of Athol and Boston, has just been chartered at the office of the Massachusetts secretary of state, to conduct a general show business. The capital stock is $98,000. The incorporators are Edgar S. Hill and Annie Leslie Hill, of Dudley, and Esther E. Morrill, of Dorchester.

"Grandma's Boy" has made such a hit with the patrons of the Park Theatre that it has been retained for a third week. Capacity audiences have been the rule at this theatre since this film was first shown, and no diminution in the interest has been manifested. Not for some time has any film had such a spectacular run at this playhouse.

The Fine Arts Theatre, the little playhouse which is a part of the same big structure that houses Loew's New State Theatre and the immense State Ballroom, was opened on Monday, September 18, by the Henry Jewett Repertory Company, which has taken over the house pending the reconstruction of its own theatre, which was partially dismantled owing to the widening of one of Boston's Back Bay streets.

The many friends of Ray S. Averill ,manager of the Franklin Park Theatre, both in and out of the theatre field, are congratulating him on his selection to the general management of a new combination circuit that is to include the Franklin Square Theatre and the Codman Square Theatre, both in Boston, and the Strand Theatre in Lowell. His selection is conceded to be a recognition of his marked ability as a director of high-class amusement enterprises. Mr. Averill has had experience in many branches of the theatrical business, covering stock productions, vaudeville, motion pictures and advertising. He has been with the S. Z. Poli Circuit in Waterbury and Meriden, Conn., and Springfield, Mass.

Charters have just been granted under the Massachusetts' laws to the following new amusement enterprises:

The Playhouse, Inc., Chicopee, moving pictures; capital, $75,000; incorporators, Fred G. Burnham and George C. Robert of Holyoke, and Fred L. Frechette of South Hadley Falls.

Fernwood Amusement Corporation, Boston, amusements, capital, $10,000; incorporators, Norman G. MacGuffin of Rockport, and Frances Rosenthal and Mona C. Sullivan of Boston.

Jacob Lourie, proprietor of the Modern, Beacon, Park, Criterion and Shawmut theatres, and the Wellesley Community Playhouse, has been wearing an unusually broad smile of satisfaction this week because one more member of the Lourie family has made good. On Monday his brother, David A. Lourie, was inducted into the office of judge of the Boston Municipal Court, with imposing ceremonials, and was given a cordial welcome by the presiding justice and his associates.

Members of Theatrical State Employes' Union 11 participated on Sunday in the dedication of Michael A. Breen Square, at Washington and Eliot streets, in the heart of the theatre district. Military ceremonials marked the dedication. Breen, who was a world war victim, was a former member of the Boston union.

Jackie Coogan has been made an honorary member of James M. Curley Post, U. S. Junior Naval Reserves, and last week the lobby of Gordon's Washington Street Olympia Theatre, where the latest Coogan picture, "Trouble," is showing, was transformed into a recruiting station as a practical and patriotic feature of this special week.

James Q. Clemmer in East with Projection Proposition

James Q. Clemmer, one of the best known film men of the Northwest, formerly owner of the Clemmer and Winter Garden Theatres, Seattle, has been up from California for three weeks and has now left for New York. It is understood he has a proposition regarding projection in the Orient.

Mack J. Davis and son were in Seattle from Port Angeles, where work is nearing completion on his beautiful new Mack Theatre. Mr. Davis was lining up pictures and arranging for more equipment. He also operates the Dream. An early October opening is promised for his new house, which has a banquet hall in the basement and a roof garden ball room, for unique features.

Webster & Walsh have opened the Liberty Theatre at Everson, Wash., after remodeling, redecorating and installing new projectors.

O. O. Ruth has taken over R. K. Dunham's Mission Theatre in Mount Vernon, Wash., and will operate it in addition to his new Vernon Theatre. He is renovating the former house. Dunham is remodeling his Rex Theatre, which will reopen shortly.

J. B. Sparks, who operates the Strand Theatre in Bend, Oregon, is in Seattle arranging bookings. He is figuring on extensive improvements for his house.

Philadelphia Exhibitors Out in Force for De Haven Lunch

Carter De Haven, starring in the two-reel comedies, released by the F. B. O. of America, was host to a hundred or more of exhibitors at a luncheon give at the Bellevue-Stratford Roof, September 21. The affair was a delightful success, as exhibitors there will testify. Among those present were Frank W. Buhler and Abe L. Einstein, of the Stanley Company of America; Harry Knapp, chairman of the State Board of Censors; Green & Altman, Sam Blatt, Lou Pizor, P. Browosky, M. Fineman, M. Wax, George Naudasher, Morris Spiers, George Gravenstein, Dr. Walter Stuemfig, Joe Forte, H. Pepper, W. Butler, Phillip Green, Charles Rappaport, Morris Spiers, Jack Rosenthal, John S. Evans, J. Elliot, Dave Morris, Dr. Morris of Philadelphia; John Cook and Doc. Shadd. of Reading; Benn Shindler, of Camden, and Al Fisher, Jr., G. Bernstein, Fox & Kline.

H. Pepper, formerly manager of the Broadway W. P., is now in charge of the Lincoln, Forty-ninth and Woodland avenue.

Announcement is made by the Pathe Exchange, now located at 211 North Thirteenth, that they will remove to their new and larger quarters, 1232-34 Vine street, shortly.

Lou Williams, manager of the Family, has had good results with one minute after twelve Sunday showing. The Family is situated on the main thoroughfare and close to the City Hall. During the past eight weeks a line of a few hundred patrons have eagerly awaited the opening of the Sunday midnight show every week. Also, Lou is considered the best one-man lobby display originator on Market street.

The new William Fox theatre in Philadelphia will be a giant structure and one of the most up-to-date in the country. George Dembow, local exchange manager, says that the building, sixteen stories high, will cost at least $2,000,000. The capacity will be 3,000 and a $50,000 organ and a thirty-five piece orchestra will furnish the music. A truly noteworthy feature will be the installation of a refrigerating plant as a part of the ventilating system. The stage is estimated at 31 by 90 feet. Every device known to modern theatre equipment, construction and architecture, for the comfort and safety of the patrons, will be also installed. Thomas B. Lamb, of New York, is the architect. The construction is in charge of William Fried, personal architect for William Fox. The sixteen-story building and theatre is expected to be completed in March or April, 1923. At present the entire work for the excavation of the basement has been completed.

Texas Theatre Trend Toward Open Shop; Operators Strike

All theatre and picture houses in Sherman, Texas, have gone open shop. The scale demanded by the union operators was $35 a week and overtime. Manager H. O. Jones, Washington; H. C. Houston, Gem; C. J. Musselman, Travis; and Billy Batsel, Queen, have been open shop for more than a year. Eight operators are affected.

Dye Fors & Rogers theatres at Wichita Falls, Texas, are among others in Texas to be at odds with union operators. The operators walked out last week and have not returned. The Wichita scale has been $40 for forty-eight hours of work. The operators refused a reduction proposed by the managers, and non-union operators were installed. Houses affected are the Empress, Majestic and Olympic. Strand and Gem, opposition houses, remained union.

Pickets were stationed at two neighborhood theatres at Houston, Texas, when the operators had walked out upon failure to get an increase of 10 per cent. The operators were asking for a reinstatement of a scale they had voluntarily cut last year when business began to slump.

During the Dallas-Texas Palace engagement of Wallace Reid's "Leading Citizen," the Palace management conducted a balloting to determine Dallas' most prominent man, and the choice went to L. B. Remy, of the Goldwyn office, who received a plurality of 3,185 votes over his nearest competitor. Many other prominent men were entered.

Novel Booking Situation in Toronto; Only Films for Hip

The week of September 18 saw an interesting booking situation in Toronto. In fact, never before had local picture theatres doubled and tripled up with featured releases for simultaneous presentations. The Regent and Strand Theatres, both controlled by the Famous Players' Canadian Corporation and managed by Clarence Robson, offered "Blood and Sand" during the week, while three of the principal downtown theatres also presented Harold Lloyd in "Grandma's Boy," these being Shea's Hippodrome, Toronto Pantages and Loew's Theatre. No less than three large theatres also hooked up for the presentation of "Foolish Wives," these being the Oakwood, managed by Jimmie Crang, the Alhambra, managed by Harold Hutchison, and the Palace, managed by Charlie Querrie.

Shea's Hippodrome, which is now on a straight picture policy, presented "Fascination" in addition to "Grandma's Boy," while Manager Bernstein showed "The Renegade," in addition to the Lloyd comedy feature.

Manager H. M. Thomas, of the St. Denis Theatre, Montreal, arranged for the presentation of a special feature at this theatre during the week of September 24 under the auspices of the Catholic Art Association. This release is "The Blasphemer." The admission charge for Sunday performances was fixed at $1, but prices for week-days range from 25 to 50 cents.

During the previous week, the attraction at the St. Denis Theatre was a totally different type of picture, the subject being the film of the Leonard-Tendler lightweight championship fight at Jersey City.

The St. Brigid's Young Men's Association opened a season's series of Sunday evening performances at the Francais Theatre, Ottawa, on September 17, the theatre having been secured for Sundays throughout the fall and winter from Val. Bureau, the manager. Sunday shows are taboo in Ontario but this organization has held them in past seasons, a collection being taken to defray expenses.

The latest idea of having special musical programs by augmented orchestras as a weekly feature in a picture theatre has been adopted by Manager J. C. Kennedy, of Allen's Regent Theatre, Ottawa. Arrangements have been made to hold the special symphony recitals every Monday evening. The first of the series was conducted by Director Rudolph Pelisek on September 18. Ordinarily, the Regent Orchestra comprises eight pieces but for the special recitals the orchestra is increased to twenty-two musicians. The special music is given in addition to the regular program of pictures which, for the week of September 18, included Marion Davies in "The Young Diana," a chapter of "The Leather Pushers," and other subjects.

Frederick Brown, formerly of the Allen Theatre, Montreal, has been appointed conductor of the Centre Theatre orchestra, Ottawa, the manager of which is Ben Stapleton.

Vitagraph's "Divorce Coupons" was presented as "Marriage Coupons" at the Centre Theatre, Ottawa, during the week of September 11, the censors having required this change in the title. A number of scenes were deleted as well. Manager Ben Stapleton used painted art display signs of a special type for the lobby display for this feature, while the still photographs all had the "new" title of the feature superimposed over the original name.

Manager Kennedy of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, worked up an exciting popularity contest among the patrons of the theatre for several weeks, the winners of which proved to be Wallace Reid and Lillian Gish. Noting this combination, he forthwith booked "The Fatal Marriage" for presentation during the week of September 11, in which the two stars mentioned are featured. Mr. Kennedy then exploited the picture as having the two winning stars of the popularity stunt.

When the Central Canada Exhibition put on a fancy dress carnival on the last night of the Ottawa Fair, September 16, Manager Ben Stapleton of the Centre Theatre, Ottawa, took advantage of the opportunity to provide a stunt for "One Clear Call," the feature at the theatre during the following week, by having several men impersonate Klu Klux Klan characters in the parade.

St. Louis Exhibitor Exchange Distributing Fine Arts Films

The Exhibitors Film Exchange, distributors, has taken over the physical distribution of the pictures of the Fine Arts Picture Corporation. P. J. Collins, manager for Fine Arts, will have charge of the office organization, while Johnnie O'Brien and Ernest F. Ellenberg are the traveling salesmen. The Exhibitors Film Exchange is controlled by a number of local theatre owners, who believe that there is a field for an exchange of this kind. By pooling their buying powers they are able to obtain independent pictures of quality much lower than formerly and are also thoroughly protected as to actual playing dates.

The exhibitors interested and their houses are: Fred Wehrenberg, the Melba and Cherokee; Ferd Warner, North Grand and Zelphia; W. O. Reeve, Maryland and Eighteenth Street; Thomas James, Comet and Retina; R. A. Stierlin, Fairy; Fred Speros, Marquette; John Karzin, Lincoln, Casino and Olympia; Chris A. Ethim, Star; Sam Horwich, Red Wing; Charlie Warner, Queens; Fred Hoelzer, Ivory, and Steve Kaiman, Baden and O'Fallon.

S. H. Wieck of the Labor Temple, Staunton, Ill., reopened for the season, September 11. He was in town during the week arranging his programs.

Jim Reilly, of the Grand and Princess theatres, Alton, Ill., was seen along Picture Row. The interurbans make it convenient for Jim to drop in regularly.

Al Bernstein, of the Capital Theatre, Springfield, also came in during the week.

Another visitor was A. C. Norwein, of the Norwein Amusement Company, which controls houses in Flat River and Bonne Terre, Mo.

Gladino Lange and associates have taken over the Melvin Theatre, 2914-16 Chippewa street. The price paid Joseph Hallomann, the former owner, has not been revealed. The Melvin was dark for several months. It seats 600 and is situated in a good neighborhood.

Eli Gory opened a new theatre at Wilsonville, Ill., on September 15. He will show four nights weekly.

Robbers escaped with $326 from the Juniata Theatre safe early Tuesday, September 6. They beat in the door with a padded sledgehammer. The theatre is owned by the St. Louis Amusement Company.

Joseph Mogler, president of the St. Louis Exhibitors League and owner of the Mogler and Bremen theatres; William Goldman, manager of the Missouri Theatre; Fred Gecks, president of the Musicians' Mutual Benefit Association, and Steve Butler, business agent of that organization, constitute the board of arbitration that will settle all disputes between the picture houses and their musicians during 1922-23. If they can't get together on some point they will call in a disinterested person to act as referee.

J. A. Seipker is managing the Ozark Theatre, Webster Groves, Mo. He succeeded Thomas Hehl. Seipker sold his interest in the Wildie Theatre, Edwardsville, Ill., several weeks ago.

Charley Vollmer is back at the Midway Theatre. His place at the Delmonte has been filled by Edward Olmstead, who had charge of the advertising copy.

The Royal Theatre, Sixth street near Olive street, will be the Rivoli Theatre when it reopens. Secretary of State Becker the past week issued a certificate of incorporation to the Rivoli Theatre Company. Barney Rosenthal, R. G. Taylor and Nat Steinberg each hold 100 shares of the $30,000 capital stock.

Fred J. Hoffmeister, E. L. Kuh and Forrest P. Trelles have incorporated the Allied Amusement Company with a capital of $20,000. Trelles holds two shares of stock and the others 99 shares each. They are said to plan the erection of a theatre on a prominent South St. Louis corner.

Spyros Skouras, head of Skouras Brothers Enterprises, took a flying trip to New York City. Gossip has it that when he returns he will bring back a new theatre for St. Louis, to be run under the Skouras Brothers' banner. Skouras Brothers already control four houses and have large interests in the St. Louis Amusement Company, which controls fourteen theatres and several airdomes.

Charles Skouras, Tom Meyers of the Capitol Theatre and Frank J. Laurent, auditor of Skouras Brothers Enterprises, are spending two weeks' vacation in the Ozarks. They report fishing as very good.

Speaking of fishing, Harry Weiss has forsaken his old fishing hole near Logansport, Ind., and can be found any Sunday at Spanish Lake, Mo. The only difference between catching fish in Indiana and Missouri is that the fish hereabouts live up to the state slogan of "Show Me."

Sales Manager Bartlett of Associated Exhibitors has resigned his position. After spending two weeks on the Mississippi in his gasoline launch he will announce his new affiliation.

J. Wagner, auditor for the Delmonte Investment Company, has assumed the managership of the Delmonte Theatre, 5524 Delmar boulevard. Edwin Olmstead, who succeeded Charley Vollmer as manager last week, also resigned and has accepted a position at the Missouri Theatre. Vollmer is again manager of the Midway Theatre, Grand and Washington boulevards. and is scheduled to take charge of Charles Thimmig's big new house when it is built.

E. H. Brient has quit as Associated Exhibitors local manager. He has gone to Centralia, Ill., to take charge of the Hall Amusement Company's two theatres, the Illinois and Grand. The boys were sorry to see him leave. He was a hustler and had a likeable personality. Don R. Davis has been made new sales manager for Associated Exhibitors.

The Orpheum Theatre, Hannibal, Mo., which had been dark for several months, was re-opened on September 17. It will show pictures and vaudeville, with an occasional road show.

S. E. Pertle, of Jerseyville, Ill., motored into town and spent the afternoon at the big ball game. Al Bernstein, of the Capitol, Springfield, Ill., also was among the 30,000 who pulled for the Browns to take the American League leadership.

Mrs. I. W. Rodgers, Poplar Bluff, Mo., and S. E. Luttrell, Jacksonville, Ill., were visitors at the Fox exchange.

Exhibitors Flock to Omaha for Films as Season Opens

STANLEY CHAMBERS' LIGHT ADVERTISING

The Manager of the Miller Theatre, Wichita, Kan., got these cards on every cigar lighter in town, which explains the text. It's new and it proved very effective on this title

Louisville Papers "Forget" That Some Theatres Exist

Some of the newspapers still fail to realize that the public buys newspapers for information. People turn to the market sheets to find the price of onions and the price had better be there. However, if a theatre decides to cut out some of its advertising, or has a run-in over cutting it out, some of the local papers believe that it is fine repartee to refrain from mentioning the theatre's name. You'd imagine that some of the theatres were dark from the way in which at least two newspapers, kindred spirits, or morning and afternoon edition of the same, refrain from even mentioning houses in some instances.

The West Kentucky Amusement Company has been incorporated to do business at Paducah, Ky. The capital stock is $200 and the incorporators are John C. Brooks, M. Manas and Mark Stenens, all of Paducah.

The Baxter Amusement Co., a subsidiary of the Broadway Amusement Enterprises, has placed the contract with J. F. Russell for the erection of its new theatre building at 1053-57 Bardstown Road, on the site of the present Baxter Theatre airdome. When completed the Highland Theatre will be abandoned.

The management of the Mary Anderson Theatre held over for three more days Norma Talmadge in "The Eternal Flame," which made a great hit at that theatre through a full week's run. "The Prisoner of Zenda" followed.

Platoff & Bishop, of Louisville, general contractors, report that they are putting the finishing touches on the new theatre at Lexington which is being erected for the Lafayette Amusement Co

The Kerrigan Theatre, New Albany, Ind., has arranged with five parent teachers' associations for co-operative production on the part of the teachers' associations, of a James Whitcomb Riley pageant at the theatre on October 6, with school children making up the cast. The event is in commemoration of the great poet's birth. The proceeds will go to the Riley Memorial Hospital fund.

The Bankers Commercial Securities Co. has filed suit to recover $502.50 from M. Switow, operator of a chain of picture theatres in this community, it being alleged that this amount is due on account.

The Louisville Police Department, which is always fussing about something, is reported to have argued last week with the management of the Walnut Theatre over posters about the downtown streets, featuring "In the Name of the Law," objection being raised to them for some reason that isn't very clear. However, the posters stayed up.

Louise Lovely, moving picture actress, was in Louisville for a week, appearing at the National Theatre. It is reported that arrangements have been made for taking 1,000 feet of film while Miss Lovely is here, to be used principally for attracting business to the National.

Fred Dolle, of the Alamo Theatre, is not the only big Elk in his family, as Mrs. Fred was elected vice-president of the Ladies' Auxiliary at a meeting last week. Henry Strube, an east end exhibitor, also has a big Elk in his family, as Mrs. Strube was named a member of the auxiliary's advisory board.

Lee Goldberg, of the Big Features Rights Corporation, who recently secured some film showing the opening of the big radio broadcasting station of the Louisville Courier Journal and Times, has arranged for showing of this film at the Strand Theatre, Shelbyville; Grand, Frankfort; Lyric, Versailles; Opera House, Cynthiana, and elsewhere.

Harold Lloyd, in a two weeks' run at the Alamo Theatre, drew good attendances for "Grandma's Boy," it being the first time in the history of the house that any picture was run more than one consecutive week. The Alamo is following up with "A Fool There Was."

Shubert's Theatre will present big time vaudeville, it has been definitely announced. It was rumored that the house would be turned into a picture theatre. With this announcement, B. F. Keith's National Theatre declares that it will run seven acts of big time, in addition to a feature picture.

These two announcements, which settle many rumors, still leave Keith's Mary Anderson unprovided for. Heretofore, the Mary Anderson has operated first-run vaudeville during the winter and pictures during the summer months. It now seems likely that it will continue its summer bill of pictures.

Keith's National opened September 4 on the fall season, and the Shubert followed September 10.

The Turner & Dahnken Circuit is preparing to make extensive improvements in its theatre at Sacramento, the work to cost in the neighborhood of $40,000. New heating and ventilating plants will be installed.

The National Theatre is going strong with its first class picture exhibits along with high class vaudeville, the feature picture last week being Katherine MacDonald in "Heroes and Husbands," and for the coming week, Dustin Farnum in "Oathbound." With general admission at 50 cents a seat, the house is packing them in at every performance in the evening. There is a daily matinee, early evening and late evening performance.

Announcement was made late last week that bids were being accepted for a new home for the Highland Theatre. The plans call for a $100,000 fireproof theatre building to replace the old Baxter airdome and present Highland Theatre, on the site of the airdome. Louis F. Steuerle, secretary of the Broadway Amusement Company, and Joseph L. Steuerle, secretary-manager of the Walnut Theatre, are the principals in the company erecting the new house, which when completed promises to be the finest of Louisville's suburban theatres.

Frisco Exhibitor Exchange to Increase Its Offerings

The Western States Film Exchange, Inc., is now well settled in its permanent quarters at 170 Golden Gate avenue, and is making arrangements to increase the number of subjects handled. This concern is owned and controlled by exhibitors and distributes state right pictures in California, Arizona and Nevada. The officers are: C. C. Griffith, of the Piedmont Theatre, Oakland, president; Mrs. F. E. Smith, of the Liberty Theatre, Marysville, vice-president; A. E. King, of the Lincoln, Crown and Gem theatres, Oakland, treasurer, and Erwin C. Easton, secretary. Robert A. Hazel is general manager and Helen J. Hazel is manager of the San Francisco office.

The Stanford Theatre, at Palo Alto, has installed a $15,000 organ.

Fisher Productions, Inc., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $500,000 to engage in the production of moving pictures. The directors are A. L. Jaffe, V. B. Fisher, Virginia Corbin, S. I. Blake and H. L. Levin.

Five holdup men drove up to the Royal Theatre, 1529 Polk street, on the evening of September 7, at the close of the performance, held up Abraham Karski, the treasurer, and Frank Moleda, the ticket taker, seized a sachel containing the night's receipts, and made their escape.

The Frolic Theatre is the latest downtown house to join the list of those to commence their week's bill on Saturday, instead of Sunday, as has been the custom. Six first run houses have adopted this policy.

The Motion Picture Operators' Union has secured the Exposition Auditorium for its annual Movie Ball to be held shortly, and a general committee, consisting of Herman Lubfin, chairman; William Ullrich, J. A. Bainbridge, P. O. Gaffney and A. L. Noriega, is working hard to make the big benefit event a success. An indoor bathing girls' revue is being arranged and several bathing beauties from Hollywood will be on hand. Mrs. Adolph Mayer, president of the Ladies' Auxiliary, heads the women's reception committee.

Lionel H. Keene, western representative for Loew's, Inc., who spent several weeks here in connection with establishing the policy of pictures only at Loew's Warfield Theatre, has left for Los Angeles to establish a similar policy at Loew's State Theatre.

The Alta Theatre is making extensive improvements, including the installation of an organ.

Dave Harding Now Recovered from Encounter with Bandit

Dave H. Harding, manager of the Liberty and Doric, Kansas City, has recovered from the wound inflicted by a bandit who attempted to hold up the Liberty Theatre on August 3. Just recently was Mr. Harding able to leave the hospital, but he has fully recovered now and is back on the job once again.

S. A. Underwood has opened the St. John Theatre of this city, which has been closed for redecoration. A new orchestra of six pieces will be employed. The house is one of the suburban theatres and seats 800.

J. A. Hardin, formerly associated with Ensley Barbour in Muskogee, Okla., was in Kansas City recently. Mr. Hardin opened the Orpheum Theatre at Parsons, Kas., the fifteenth of this month.

C. M. Gott of the Skydrome Theatre, Warrensburg, Mo., was shopping for film to screen during the cooler months.

Lee Dorris, of Dorris and Smith, the new owners of the Liberty Theatre at Cherryvale, Kas., was in town the first of this week looking for some musicians. Dorris and Smith purchased the Liberty from T. L. Wolf.

J. J. Newcomb, Newk's Theatre at Burlington, Kas., was calling on some of the exchanges recently.

L. S. Cook, of the Liberty Theatre, Augusta, Kas., was in Kansas City last week-end.

W. H. Weber, Echo Theatre at Great Bend, Kas., was seen walking along Movie Row one day this week.

The Cole Theatre Supply Co. was paid a visit by Charles Fish of the Opera House, Butler, Mo.

G. L. Rugg, who has the Eureka Theatre in Weston, Mo., visited most of the Kansas City film exchanges last week.

Frank Davidson of the Royal Theatre at Cherryvale, Kas., was another visitor last week.

Barney Dubinsky of the Tootle Theatre, St. Joseph, Mo., and Eddie Peskay, were visitors at some of the film exchanges last week.

Joe Cooper, owner of the Wichita Theatre, Wichita, Kas., was a caller at various exchanges recently.

Jack Johnston of the Isis Theatre, at Augusta, Kas., was also a Kansas City visitor the other day.

Baltimore Exhibitor's Sons Successful in Musical Work

The two sons of Joseph Robbins, formerly manager of the Comedy Theatre, 412 East Baltimore Street, for six years, and now manager of the New Gem Theatre, 617 Duncan Place, have been very successful in their musical activities. Samuel R. Robbins has been engaged to conduct the new augmented orchestras on the Century Theatre Roof this season. He has wide experience in directing music for musical comedy work, having just closed with Eddie Cantor's "Make It Snappy," and he was on the road with "Monte Cristo, Jr.," "The Passing Show of 1919," and "Irene." Frederick Robbins will direct the orchestra on the Garden Roof. He was bandmaster for the 312th Field Artillery while in France and recently conducted the orchestra of the American Jockey Club, of Havana, Cuba.

A new policy has been inaugurated at the New Theatre, 210 West Lexington Street, by Charles E. Whitehurst, president of the New Theatre Company, by which the largest and best features will be shown at popular prices. The season was begun with the showing of Rex Ingram's "The Prisoner of Zenda," and that sterling publicist, Leon Victor, was right on the job and hustling around town to put the film over in big town style, which he did, if the 5,000 or so people who attended it on September 18, the opening day of the run, can be considered as a criterion. Eugene M. Daley, manager of the New, was as busy as the proverbial bee on the campaign also, with J. M. Shellman assisting. The prices for the big attractions are: 10 a. m. to 5 p. m., 25 cents; 5 to 11 p. m., balcony, 25 cents, orchestra, 50 cents.

Mrs. C. M. Corbet, of the New Theatre, Hancock, has written to the Public Service Commission of Maryland regarding a contract for music for $24 a year which she says would "drag one down and out of business." As the commission, however, disclaims any right to jurisdiction over instrumental or vocal music, Mrs. Corbet has been informed to that effect.

Her letter reads:

"You will find enclosed a copy of a contract for which I am to pay $24 per year. I hire a musician and he must furnish the music. He only plays about one hour every evening, as that is the only time I show; and, further, he only plays ragtime stuff. Now, must I pay him or is it to drag one down and out of business?"

Charles E. Nolte, manager of the Belnord Theatre, 2800 East Fayette street, has engaged the Broadway Ladies' Orchestra to play at the afternoon and evening performances for an indefinite period. There are ten members in the company.

Eugene N. Daley, for ten years with Lyman Howe touring the country with his travel pictures, and who managed a theatre in New York State for some time, has joined the Whitehurst Theatrical Interests of Baltimore and is now managing the Century and New theatres and handling the publicity and advertising for the Parkway. George A. McDermitt, who formerly managed the Century and New theatres, is now centering his attention on the Garden and Century Roof, also in the Whitehurst circuit, and will see that everything goes right during the coming season.

Auctioneers have sold to an undisclosed purchaser the picture theatre at 1510-12 West Lafayette avenue, for $7,500.

Star City, W. Va., never boasted of a picture house until just recently when the Star Theatre was thrown open to the public. The house has been built in brick and stucco, and seats in the neighborhood of 300. Sam Pratt is the owner and C. P. Defrere manager. Star City has a population of 800. The theatre will be open three nights a week at present.

Permit has been granted to the Community Amusement Company, Charleston, W. Va., for remodeling a store building to be used as a picture theatre. The building, which will be one story in height, will be 20x80 feet, and is located on the south side of Charleston street, between Florida and Stockton.

The Arcade, a 340-seat house, is the newest theatre addition to the town of Bramwell, W. Va. Lighting fixtures are unique.

A permit has been granted at Charleston, W. Va., for a business building and picture show in Summers street, between Virginia and Fife streets, to the Chanaba Company. It will cost $18,000.

Detroiters to Go by Autos to Coming State Convention

Plans for the annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan are progressing rapidly, according to H. M. Richey, manager of the association. Every attraction possible is being secured to make the event a memorable one in the history of the organization, and an elaborate program is being arranged. While it is a little early to be able to give out an exact program in the order of events, it is known that there will be a trip through the big Buick Motor Company's plant, a trip around the city of Flint, and a trip through the Home for the Deaf and Dumb, which is one of the most interesting institutions in Michigan. There will be a big banquet with a wonderful orchestra, addresses by Sydney S. Cohen, the national president, and the chances of having Will Hays appear on the program are very good. In addition, it is hoped to have Governor Grosbeck, Lieutenant-Governor Thomas Read and Judge Alfred J. Murphy address the gathering. The convention headquarters will be at the new Durant Hotel. Detroit expects to send an exceptionally big delegation, most of which will motor up. Fifty motor cars loaded to capacity are expected to carry the Detroiters. Arrangements have been made for free parking space, and all Flint is on its toes in anticipation of the event.

George Cook and Brad Bearsley, of the former Star Amusement Company, of Sault Ste. Marie, are being sued in circuit court for ten months' rent and alleged violation of the lease, by John P. Old, agent of the old Star Theatre. George Cook, defendant in the case, is at present manager of the Soo Amusement Company. They originally took a lease for two years with an option of five years more on the Star Theatre. At the end of two years, they decided to continue on the strength of the option. At the end of two more years, the theatre ceased operations because the city authorities found its condition, particularly the electric wiring, unsafe. Cook and Bearsley immediately demanded that Fred R. Price, owner of the building, remodel and repair the same in accordance with the requirements of the authorities. This was refused by Mr. Old, who claimed that the lease was originally accepted for a five-year option in its present shape with a clause to the effect that the theatre was then in proper condition to permit the showing of motion pictures. Cook and Bearsley then ceased to run the house and the rent accrued, finally resulting in the suit.

The Broadway-Strand Theatre, Phil Gleichman, manager, announces a one-hour concert by the specially augmented orchestra every Sunday morning, starting at 11:00 a. m. The first of these concerts starts on September 24. The popular concerts are advertised as including all "your favorite melodies and overtures—music you like the way you like it."

Effective Saturday, September 30, Sid Lawrence, for the past year exploitation manager of the Detroit branch of First National, will assume charge of both the Isis and and Idle Hour theatres, Grand Rapids, for J. W. Goodspeed, owner. The Isis will close for complete redecoration the week of September 24, and will re-open on September 30 with "Smiling through."

Signs Players

Charles H. Duell, president of Inspiration Pictures, announced that he had entered into a contract with Lillian Gish for a series of pictures. Under the terms of this contract Miss Gish severs completely all relations with her former employer, the D. W. Griffith organization, and places her future in the hands of Inspiration Pictures. Miss Gish will be directed by Henry King.

Mr. Duell also recently signed Dorothy Gish, who at present is playing opposite Richard Barthelmess in the story, "Fury," now being completed. It is understood that she will play again with Richard Barthelmess, following which she will appear in a picture with her sister.

Preview Given of Holubar Film

"Broken Chains," Allen Holubar's production of Goldwyn's $10,000 prize story, was shown in preview at the Paramount Theatre, Hollywood, recently and packed the house, it is said.

The picture shows how a young man broke the chains of cowardice after he had fallen in love with a wistful girl, who had been actually chained in her cabin by a brutal husband. Prominent in the cast are Colleen Moore, Malcolm McGregor, Claire Windsor, and Ernest Torrence.

Billie Dove Ready to Start Work

Billie Dove is preparing to start work in "Cold Courage," Metro's photoplay version of Ben Ames Williams's sea story which Irvin Willat will direct. She has had nearly a month's vacation since the the completion of "Youth to Youth," her first Metro picture. But during this period she spent much time preparing for the coming production.

Bull Montana Film Is Completed

"Bull" Montana has completed "A Punctured Prince," the second of a series of screen comedies, produced by Hunt Stromberg and distributed by Metro Pictures Corporation. The first production of the series, "A Ladies' Man," is now being shown in leading motion picture theatres. Hugh Fay is directing the series of Montana comedies.

Mr. Montana's next production is to be "Glad Rags."

Work at Paramount Studio Increasing

With the arrival of two new production units from the West Coast, activities at the Paramount Long Island studio are increasing by leaps and bounds. Within the week four companies will be under way with a fifth to be started very soon.

George Melford's unit will start "Java Head" this week and Alfred Green will begin work on "Back Home and Broke," starring Thomas Meighan, at the same time. A few days later Dorothy Dalton will commence work under the direction of Victor Fleming in a picture that is temporarily titled "Black Fury," and Alice Brady, who has just completed "Anna Ascends," is scheduled to start another picture very soon.

The name of Miss Brady's picture will be announced later.

Two Chapter Plays Listed for Release

Universal is establishing a precedent during the month of September in the consecutive release of two chapter-plays, within two weeks of each other. They are "In the Days of Buffalo Bill" and "The Radio King;" the first in eighteen chapters and the radio serial in ten chapters.

In putting out "The Radio King" in ten chapters, Universal is following a newly formed policy of making chapter plays no longer than their stories warrant. "The Radio King" is a closely knit screen drama of rapid action and scientific marvels. Not a foot of film has been wasted with unnecessary action or padded situations.

The release of two serials in a single month, a decided innovation in Universal's serial release policy, has been brought about by a complex situation. Among the factors which determined the new departure are the general film situation this fall, and also the subject matter of the chapter-plays concerned.

"In the Days of Buffalo Bill" is a stirring story of the Indian fighting days of America's empire builders. It is a 36-reel drama of stirring events from American history, woven into a romance with strong heart appeal. The picture has an especial appeal for children, and at the same time is remarkably adaptable for schools and colleges in the study of history.

Critics Give High Praise to Picture

New York newspaper critics, in reviewing Cecil B. DeMille's latest production for Paramount, "Manslaughter," now running at the New York Rivoli, seem to be practically of the same mind as their professional relatives in Los Angeles, Chicago and San Francisco, all of whom, Paramount says, agree that the picture is DeMille's greatest accomplishment thus far and that it will prove one of the outstanding box-office successes of recent years.

"Competently done, consistently interesting—well worth a trip," said the Sun critic, who re-echoed the sentiments of R. W. Baremore in the Telegraph, who said: "Here is a really great picture."

Said the Journal: "'Manslaughter' appears to possess all the elements of an unusual success," and the Call: "People will flock to see it." "Mr. Meighan's performance here is powerful and human," said the World. The Herald's critic said: "'Manslaughter' a sure 'killing' in popularity.

Speaking of Leatrice Joy, in the role of Lydia Thorne, the Globe said: "She is certainly a find and in every way the equal of any of the so-called dramatic actresses of the screen.

Joins Universal

Paul Wakefield, prominent Texas newspaper man, and dramatic critic, has been engaged as the publicity manager in Texas for Universal. He will have his headquarters in Dallas, in the offices of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, Southern distributors of the Universal product.

Big Praise

That the Rex Ingram production, "The Prisoner of Zenda," is repeating everywhere the fine impression it is making in New York at the Astor Theatre, is evidenced by enthusiastic reports of exhibitors in various parts of the country, Metro Pictures Corporation says. "Wonderful photoplay giving one hundred per cent. satisfaction" is the comment of Messrs. Soberman and Rowe, managers of the Blue Mouse Theatre in Minneapolis, where the Metro film opened recently to "one of the largest attendance records in the history of the house," to quote further from the same telegram.

Carefully-planned publicity preceded the showing of the film. The Metro special exploitation service was of great assistance in attracting public attention to the photoplay, it is stated.

"The Prisoner of Zenda" is a Rex Ingram production for Metro Pictures Corporation.

Vignola Completing "Adam and Eva"

Robert G. Vignola's first production since "When Knighthood Was in Flower," entitled "Adam and Eva," is rapidly nearing completion at the Cosmopolitan studios in New York. This latest Marion Davies starring special, adapted from the Guy Bolton-George Middleton stage success of the same name, is a comedy vehicle of a different type from "When Knighthood Was in Flower," which has placed Mr. Vignola in the forefront of the directorial ranks.

"Adam and Eva" is a story of modern life with settings of the present day.

Joseph Urban designed the sets for "Adam and Eva," and Phil Carle acted as Mr. Vignola's assistant.

"Nobody's Money" for Reid

"Nobody's Money," an entertaining comedy adapted from the play by William Le Baron, by Beulah Marie Dix, will be Wallace Reid's next Paramount star picture. Wallace Worsley has been specially engaged to direct the picture. It is the story of a young business man who is told to abandon work for a while to escape a nervous breakdown.

First National Lists Five Big Releases for October

Five First National Big Time pictures and two comedies are scheduled for October release by that organization. This offering bears out the promise made by First National to give exhibitors the best to be had in the picture line during the 1922-23 season.

The Big Time pictures, which will be released in October, are: October 2, Hope Hampton in "The Light in the Dark;" October 9, Richard Barthelmess in "The Bond Boy;" October 16, Katherine MacDonald in "White Shoulders;" October 23, Constance Talmadge in "East is West;" October 30, Lorna Doone, a Maurice Tourneur picture, presented by Thomas H. Ince.

The comedies on First National's October schedule are: "Home-Made Movies," a Mack Sennett production, with Ben Turpin; October 16, Buster Keaton in "The Electric House."

"The Light in the Dark" is a story of rare power, written by William Dudley Pelley and directed by Clarence L. Brown. Miss Hampton is supported by Lon Chaney and E. K. Lincoln. This picture was given a pre-release showing at the opening of the Strand Theatre in Niagara Falls, where it played to crowded houses for two days and was warmly praised by the mayor of that city.

In "The Bond Boy," Richard Barthelmess is said to have a stronger vehicle than in "Tol'able David" and "Sonny," two of his recent successes. Presented by Inspiration Pictures, Inc., directed by Henry King, from the story by George Washington Ogden, and adapted by Charles E. Whittaker, "The Bond Boy" deals with a youth of the mountains, as did "Tol'able David." Mr. Barthelmess is supported by such excellent players as Mary Thurman, Mary Alden, Charles Hill Mailes, Ned Sparks, Lawrence D'Orsay and Virginia Magee.

Katherine MacDonald in "White Shoulders," presented by B. P. Schulberg, is an adaptation of the Saturday Evening Post story by George Kibbe Turner and was directed by Tom Forman. In this story, dealing with a girl's purpose to sacrifice herself at the altar to save the depleted fortunes of her family, Miss MacDonald has her finest opportunity for displaying her talents as an emotional actress. Supporting her are Bryant Washburn, Lillian Lawrence, Nigel Barrie, little Richard Headrick, Tom Forman and Lincoln Stedman.

Constance Talmadge in "East is West," scarcely needs an introduction, because of the furore this picture already has created. Given a preliminary screening at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel by its producer, Joseph M. Schenck, the production was hailed by screen experts as the finest of the season, and the acting of Miss Talmadge was pronounced particularly noteworthy.

"East is West," supervised and directed by Sidney Franklin from the famous stage success by Samuel Shipman and John B. Hymer, is declared to be even better as a motion picture than it was as a Broadway play. Miss Talmadge is supported by Edward Burns, E. A. Warren, Warner Oland, Frank Lanning, Nick de Ruiz, Nigel Barrie, Lillian Lawrence and Winter Hall.

Arranging to Show Fairbanks Picture

Because of the tenseness of the railroad strike situation when Douglas Fairbanks was ready to send to New York the first print of his new photoplay, "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," he sent it in the personal custody of Harry D. Buckley, whom he had recently appointed as manager of the roadshows for this screen feature. The film will be put on view as soon as Mr. Buckley can make arrangements.

"Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" is to be shown to the New York public in elaborate fashion, it is stated. The premier will be in one of the "legitimate" Broadway houses, negotiations for which were opened by Mr. Buckley immediately on his arrival in New York. Following the New York opening other "legitimate" theatre showings will be given in the important cities throughout the country, all under Mr. Buckley's general supervision.

Finishes Filming "Passions of the Sea"

Director R. A. Walsh has finished photography on Goldwyn's first Carey Wilson photoplay, "Passions of the Sea," formerly known as "Captain Blackbird." All of the scenes for this South Sea romance were photographed in Tahiti with the exception of a few interiors which were filmed at the studios after the return of the company.

Director Walsh is now engaged in editing and titling the picture. It will soon receive its initial complete showing for production officials at the studios.

Reports received from the studios at Goldwyn headquarters in New York indicate that "Passions of the Sea" is one of the biggest productions Goldwyn has ever made.

Metro Buys Rights to "Scaramouche"

Metro Pictures Corporation announces the purchase by arrangement with Charles L. Wagner, of the screen rights to the successful novel, "Scaramouche," by Farsel Sabatini, to be produced as a motion picture by Rex Ingram, director of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," "The Prisoner of Zenda," and other big screen triumphs.

The young director to whom has been allotted the task of screening this vividly dramatic story is at present in Miami, Florida, where he and a company of players arrived a few weeks ago to begin the production of a new photoplay, "The Passion Vine," based on the short story by John Russell. Whether "Scaramouche" will follow immediately after "The Passion Vine" or whether the filming of Victor Hugo's novel, "Toilers of the Sea," will next engage the director's attention, has not yet been decided.

It is felt by Metro officials that Mr. Ingram will take full advantage of the many opportunities offered in the story and that the result will be a photoplay which will eclipse by far anything he has hitherto attempted.

To Open Theatre

"Sherlock Holmes," the Goldwyn picture starring John Barrymore, will be the opening attraction at the New Princess Theatre in Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands. It will begin a pre-release showing at that new million dollar theatre on Tuesday, October 26.

The New Princess Theatre, Honolulu, is said to be one of the largest and finest motion picture theatres in the world.

"Twin Husbands" on F. B. O. Program

"Twin Husbands" is the second Carter DeHaven comedy to be released through the Film Booking Offices of America, following "Pop Tuttle's Movie Queen" on the F. B. O. comedy program. "Twin Husbands" presents Mr. and Mrs. DeHaven in a two-reel story of the difficulties of a young man who tries to be himself and his twin brother at the same time. It is filled with novel situations and is built around a convincing and logical plot, state the F. B. O. officials. "Twin Husbands" was directed by Mal St. Clair.

"Big Four" Films on Broadway

Distributing companies of the motion picture "Big Four"—United Artists Corporation and the subsidiary organization, Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation—have two feature pictures "on Broadway" the week of October 1.

Sennett Adds Writers to Force

With John Grey, Mell Brown and Rex Taylor officiating in the Mack Sennett scenario department, the picture public may look forward to shortly seeing some new and novel comedy entertainment. This trio of writers, known far and wide for their ability to originate funny situations, have been very busy preparing scripts for the 1922-1923 Mack Sennett producing campaign, which starts about September 15.

Booking Heavily

Coincidental with the announcement that the new George Arliss photoplay, "The Man Who Played God," a United Artists' Corporation release, has been booked for showing at the New York Strand the week of October 1, comes the statement from Distinctive Productions, Inc., that this new Arliss feature is being booked heavily.

Hold Premiere at the Strand

"Under Two Flags," Priscilla Dean's latest Universal-Jewel production, had its New York premiere on Sunday, September 24, Strand Theatre, New York. Crowded houses hailed the Broadway advent of the new film and acclaimed it Miss Dean's greatest vehicle.

Manager Joseph Plunkett, of the Strand, added an elaborate presentation to the showing, including a colorful prologue. He used twenty-four persons in the prologue as well as two expert dancers and a singer of note.

The presentation was also accompanied by special music, arranged and directed by Carl Edouarde, conductor of the Strand orchestra.

F. B. O. Companies at Work on the Coast

P. A. Powers, managing director of the Film Booking Offices of America has returned to the F. B. O. home office in New York after several months spent in supervising the production activities of F. B. O. units at the big R-C studios in Los Angeles. Mr. Powers having, it is said, lined up an excellent array of future product for F. B. O. release, will remain for the present in New York to watch the work of his sales organization.

Mr. Powers left three producing organizations hard at work at the Coast studio. Harry Carey, having completed his second F. B. O. release, "Good Men and True," is now well under way with "The One Man." Johnnie Walker has half completed his second starring picture, "Captain Fly-by-Night," the story of which is by Johnston McCulley, author of "The Mark of Zorro."

Under the direction of Chester Bennett, Jane Novak is completing her third F. B. O. release, "Thelma." Ethel Clayton, having finished "If I Were Queen," under the direction of Wesley Ruggles, is soon to start on her second production for F. B. O. release.

Mr. Powers also announced that he conducted a careful search while on the Coast for suitable players to enact the leading roles in "Fighting Blood" picture which will be adapted on the screen from H. C. Witwer's series of stories.

Ray to Do "Miles Standish"

Charles Ray's determination to film "The Courtship of Miles Standish," and make the famous Longfellow epic the high water mark in his career rather sharply marks his transition from the mere "movie" material to which until recently he devoted his talents, to the higher plane of subject and character.

Believing that time and thought are what make superior pictures, Mr. Ray has announced that under his contract with United Artists he will make but two productions a year.

The Charles Ray picturization will begin on board the Mayflower where the love of John Alden—which character Mr. Ray will enact—for Priscila Mullens began to germinate. Research already done by the star shows that many highly dramatic episodes paralleled the historic romance and should be shown in portraying its development.

Sennett Pushing Big Comedies

During the past six weeks strenuous efforts have been made by Mack Sennett, comedy producer, to complete the editing and titling of two promising two-reel comedies and one a five-reel feature comedy, scheduled for early fall release through the distributing hands of Associated First National Pictures.

The two-reelers are "Bow Wow," a rural comedy featuring Louise Fazenda, John Henry, Jr., and Teddy, the canine star with almost human intelligence. The other, "When Summer Comes," directed by Roy Del Ruth, is a broad farce in which Billy Bevan is the featured player with Mildred June in the leading feminine role.

The feature comedy, entitled "The Shriek of Araby," has in it Ben Turpin and Kathryn McGuire.

"The Girl I Loved" Nearly Finished

Charles Ray is returning to first principles in his second production for United Artists, "The Girl I Loved," which already is about two-thirds completed. It is said that it was in this kind of role several years ago that he came into fame by starring in a picture in which he was cast merely as a juvenile support. Immediately he was lifted to the rank of star. "The Girl I Loved" is said to be highly dramatic.

Joseph DeGrasse, director of "The Old Swimmin' Hole," "45 Minutes from Broadway" and "A Tailor-Made Man," is the director.

Added to Cast

June Elvidge, stage and screen celebrity, and David Torrence, New York character star, have been added to the cast of "Forsaking All Others," being filmed at Universal City as an all-star special production.

Said to Be a Big Film of City Life

"Lights of New York," the latest Fox special, is said to be a graphic study of conditions in the great city that are daily enacted among its millions of men and women. The author, the mysterious "Mr. X.," who is now a regular contributor to the scenario department of Fox Film Corporation, has not, it is stated, put in a special plea for any one class of persons or tried to point any particular moral, but has contented himself with opening several pages from life and permitting his audience to see things as they are.

Marc MacDermott plays one of the principal characters.

Fox says the story is told so vividly that every father and mother and also every big spirited young chap who is not careful of his choice of companions will recognize the truth of the picture. Clarence Nordstrom plays the young chap who pulls up in his reckless dash down the wrong path just in the nick of time.

Paramount Lists Two Big Pictures

Paramount will open the month of October by releasing on the first the Penrhyn Stanlaws production, "Pink Gods," with Bebe Daniels, James Kirkwood, Anna Q. Nilsson and Raymond Hatton, and the Hamilton Theatrical Corporation's production, "Above All Law."

The age-old lure of diamonds, for women, and the lengths to which many women will go to acquire the precious stones, is the theme of this Cynthia Stockley story which was published under the title, "Pink Gods and Blue Demons."

Bebe Daniels plays the role of the girl victim of the "pink gods," James Kirkwood is seen in the strong character of the South African, Anna Q. Nilsson is the young widow who resists temptation, and Raymond Hatton is seen as a diamond thief. Others who have important roles are Adolphe Menjou, Guy Oliver, George Cowl and Arthur Trimble. Miss Stockley's original story was adapted by Sonya Levien and J. E. Nash and the scenario was written by Ewart Adamson.

Superb East Indian atmosphere, with all the mystery and mysticism that that atmosphere entails, is an outstanding feature of "Above All Law," which is presented by the Hamilton Theatrical Corporation. It carries a powerful dramatic story, it is said, and in addition it is graced with some of the most colossal sets ever seen on the screen.

Miss Vidor to Do "Alice Adams"

Just before leaving for the Coast, Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, announced that Florence Vidor will do "Alice Adams," by Booth Tarkington as the first feature on her new contract with Associated. This novel won the Pulitzer prize for 1921, as the best American novel of the year.

Universal Changes Film's Name

Gladys Walton's latest feature picture, adapted by Universal from "M'liss," one of Bret Harte's most famous stories, will be released under the title of "The Girl Who Ran Wild."

It had originally been intended to release the film under the name of "M'liss," but as Mary Pickford once made a picture by the same name Universal was requested not to use the title. The picture will be released Oct. 9.

Warning

Warning is hereby given by Film Booking Offices of America, Inc., to all producers and distributors of motion pictures that F. B. O. owns and controls the world's rights to H. C. Witwer's series of (12) twelve stories—"FIGHTING BLOOD," now appearing serially in COLLIER'S.

This series of Witwer stories will be produced in two reels each; in fact, at the time of the writing of this advertisement, production has already started at our Coast studios.

The "FIGHTING BLOOD" stories are by the same author as "THE LEATHER PUSHERS" series, which also appeared in serial form in COLLIER'S.

Because of the keen competition for the purchase of the "FIGHTING BLOOD" series, and because of the inability of several film companies to procure them, it has been rumored that an attempt will be made to plagiarize the plot and action of these stories.

In view of this, this advertisement is published to warn ALL producers, distributors and all others that F. B. O. will protect itself against plagiarization, by the full power of law.

Because of the marked success of the Witwer stories, F. B. O.'s "FIGHTING BLOOD" series will be booked on the "First Come First Served" basis.

A National campaign of advertising in the Saturday Evening Post, Collier's, and others is now being planned for the "FIGHTING BLOOD" series.

We've got "the goods" in this new Witwer series.

The time to insure your getting the "FIGHTING BLOOD" series is now. Put your request in immediately to your nearest F. B. O. exchange manager.

Pyramid on Lookout for Good Stories

Pyramid Pictures, Inc., announces that arrangements are now being made under which the services of the best American and English authors will be available in selecting stories for Pyramid productions.

"We naturally feel," said an official of Pyramid, "that our future interests require action now, although we have managed to let it be known far and wide that we are in the market for the best stories obtainable. It is also true that we have been treated very generously by some of the best writers in America, who have submitted their work to our scenario department. Some of these stories we have acquired, and others are under consideration.

"Our scenario department is in touch with authors here and abroad, and no effort will be spared to enroll some of the great writers on our lists."

An official of Pyramid explained that in cases where an author desires to enter into a profit-sharing agreement with the producer, an arrangement will be made similar to the royalty idea, and under which the authors' share will be determined by the volume of business the picture does. This arrangement is available for directors, under the Pyramid idea, and can be extended in several ways, it was explained.

Reports "Lion's Mouse" is Progressing

Cable advices from Hollandia Films to Producers' Security state "The Lion's Mouse" is well under way in production and present indications point to its being one of the screen classics of the year.

A few weeks ago Wyndham Standing and Marguerite Marsh were specially engaged to co-star in this famous story and sailed directly for Holland, where work was started immediately under direction of Oscar Apfel.

"The Lion's Mouse," when completed, will be handled in America by Producers' Security Corporation, which will announce the releasing channel later.

Caldwell Signs New Contract

Orville Caldwell, the handsome giant who will be seen in the leading male role in Katherine MacDonald's new picture, "The Lonely Road," has signed a contract under which he will appear in a similar capacity in the next production in which she will be starred, "The Scarlet Lily."

The actor-athlete was named for this new part because of his brilliant work in "The Lonely Road." Those who have seen the early runs of the picture declare that his characterization as the young husband mark him as one of the most promising of the younger male players on the screen.

Griffith's Newest Given Pre-Showing

When the residents in the vicinity of the Sterling Theatre, Derby, Conn., sent the town marshal to stop the laughter and applause in that house the evening of September 15, the first public recognition was given to D. W. Griffith's latest photoplay production, "One Exciting Night."

This picture, on which Mr. Griffith has been working since he completed "Orphans of the Storm," is made for United Artists Corporation release. Its try-out length was in thirteen reels, but Mr. Griffith always starts his pictures far beyond the length at which they close for standard release, preferring to cut his work before an audience, listening to mass reaction for guidance.

The actual filming of "One Exciting Night" took about three months. The story is by Irene Sinclair, and the action is laid in a country home in Baltimore. The main action takes place in one afternoon and evening, with the principal scenes all laid in one house. The settings are modern in every sense. The players appear in the latest of present day fashions. For this picture Mr. Griffith has stepped entirely away from costumes, mob scenes and vast sets.

For his cast Mr. Griffith drew largely from the legitimate stage, every player in the picture having had experience before the footlights. For the leading man he selected Henry Hull, actor and dramatist. Carol Dempster, of the Griffith players, is the heroine. C. H. Croker-King, a famous English character actor, plays the part of the doctor.

For the comedy Mr. Griffith took Porter Strong, formerly a minstrel man, whom he has been training in blackface parts.

Frank Sheridan is seen in the role of the detective; Frank Wunderlee is the butler; Margaret Dale is a society adventuress; Morgan Wallace also has an important part, while others in the cast are Percy Carr, Herbert Sutch, Irma Harrison, Grace Griswold, Charles Mack and Alice Fleming.

Albert L. Grey, general manager of D. W. Griffith, Inc., has arranged for the opening of the picture in Tremont Temple, Boston, early in October. The New York opening will follow shortly afterward, and the picture will then be shown in Chicago and Philadelphia.

"Forget-Me-Not" Makes Big Success

"Forget-Me-Not," a Louis Burston production released by Metro Pictures Corporation, has, it is stated, firmly established itself as a solid box-office attraction. Everywhere it is said to be proving a fine subject for exploitation, and exceptional business is being reported in the largest photoplay theatres in the country where the film has been shown.

Standing-room only—for the first time in months—was the effect of the photoplay at the Blue Mouse Theatre, one of the largest motion picture theatres in Minneapolis, Minn., where "Forget-Me-Not" was recently exhibited. A novel exploitation campaign, effectively handled through the use of teasers and other printed matter, accounts in part for the big business done, it is said.

"Forget-Me-Not" is a Louis Burston production for Metro Pictures Corporation. The film was directed by W. S. Van Dyke. In the cast are Bessie Love, Gareth Hughes, Otto Lederer, Irene Hunt, Myrtle Lind, William Machin, Hal Wilson, Gertrude Clair, Sam Allen and William Lawrence.

First National Obtains "Oliver Twist"

Rumors along Broadway to the effect Sol Lesser would make a contract with Associated First National Pictures, Inc., for the distribution of Jackie Coogan's super-production of "Oliver Twist" were verified this week with the announcement that the road-show plan which was practically settled upon was discarded and that the First National organization had closed with Lesser for the big Coogan attraction.

The signing of a contract between First National and Lesser for the Coogan product marks the closing of one of the biggest deals in many months. It is understood that all engagements will be played on the basis of a guarantee and percentage and that the Jackie Coogan Productions eastern offices in charge of Irving M. Lesser will have the approval of all contracts.

It is understood that "Oliver Twist" will have a general release date late in October and that there is a strong possibility of a Broadway run of the production.

Advertises Heavily Selznick Film

If the Select Picture "A Woman of No Importance" may serve as a criterion exhibitors are offering more co-operation in an advertising way than ever before. For the showing of the Oscar Wilde story at Clune's Broadway Theatre in Los Angeles, Manager Jay Haas used a full page advertisement in The Record.

In addition to such a generous amount of space being allotted the production an additional source of gratification is the skilful way the page has been arranged.

New Goldwyn Official Sees Boom in Trade

James R. Grainger, recently elected a vice president of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, is now at the Culver City studios in conference with Marshall Neilan. Mr. Grainger, who has for four years acted as personal representative of Marshall Neilan, is still looking after the distributing interests of that producer.

Mr. Grainger, who is making a tour of all the Goldwyn exchanges, says that with the opening of the fall season, attendance has greatly improved at the theatres and that conditions generally are on the upward trend.

Story Being Chosen for Theda Bara

The selection of a story for the Theda Bara productions which is to be made by the Selznick company under the supervision of David O. Selznick has been narrowed down to one of two or three of the scores of offerings which have been examined. Actual production work will begin within the next four weeks.

Arrangements Made to Distribute

An announcement from Associated Exhibitors states that Roy Crawford, vice president and treasurer of that organization, has completed arrangements with E. S. Manheimer for the distribution by Associated of "Breaking Home Ties," a six reel feature.

Goldwyn Closes Big Foreign Deal

Goldwyn's foreign department has just entered into a contract with the export department of the New York Film Exchange for the handling of its sixth year product—the season of 1922-1923—for the greater part of South America.

The countries in which the New York Film Exchange will control the distribution of Goldwyn's "big twenty" photoplays for the new season are Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Ecuador, Peru and Bolivia.

Arrangements Made

Leon D'Usseau, New York scenario chief for Universal, has just completed arrangements with William A. Brady for the purchase of last year's successful play, "Up the Ladder." It will be used as the first starring vehicle for Virginia Valli, who has just completed her work at Universal City in "Bitter Sweet" in support of Lon Chaney.

Melford in East

George Melford, who has just completed the production of "Ebb Tide," the Robert Louis Stevenson-Lloyd Osbourne story of the South Seas, at the Lasky studio, has arrived in New York ready to start work on "Java Head," at Paramount's Long Island studio. He is making his headquarters at the Lambs' Club.

In Metro Picture

Claud Gillingwater, during three decades one of the most notable figures on the American stage and for the last several years prominent in motion pictures, will appear in support of Viola Dana in her newest Metro picture, "Miss Emmy Lou," which Harry Beaumont is directing.

Places "Jelly Fish"

The new Smith-Cadwell production, "The Jelly Fish," in which Wyndham Standing is starred, has been placed by Producers' Security with Playgoers' Pictures for National distribution. The feature is the second starring vehicle of Wyndham Standing to go to Playgoers.

Claire Adams Signed

Claire Adams, leading woman of many high class western features of the Hamptons and other producers, has been signed by Universal to play the feminine lead opposite Herbert Rawlinson in "The Kidnappers," a picture which has just been started at Universal City under Stuart Paton's direction.

Engaged by Wire

Edmund Lowe, noted Broadway leading man, was engaged by wire to play the male lead opposite Betty Compson in "The White Flower," a new Paramount picture which will mark the return of Mrs. Julia Crawford Ivers to the ranks of woman directors.

Booked in Four Big Texas Cities

Goldwyn's new Rupert Hughes picture, "Remembrance," has just been booked by another circuit for October showing. The Interstate Amusement Company will show it in the four largest cities of Texas—Fort Worth, San Antonio, Dallas and Houston—for the week beginning Sunday, October 15.

"Remembrance" was recently booked by the Libson circuit of Cincinnati the Stanley Circuit of Philadelphia and the Johnson and Van Herberg circuit of Seattle.

Hodkinson Lists Big Film for October

Fifty-three different editions in print, distributed among forty-eight publishers, is the advance publicity and advertising preceding "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," which will soon be presented on the screen under the title of "The Headless Horseman," released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation sometime during the month of October, and which will provide the screen with one of the best read American classics.

Produced by Carl Stearns Clancy, a member of the new school of motion picture presentation and featuring such a well-known and popular idol as Will Rogers in the beloved role of Ichabod Crane, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation feels that they have a film feature of 100 per cent. entertaining value and one with a strong box-office appeal.

This popular legend, taken from the "Sketch Book" by Washington Irving, is particularly adaptable to screen presentation and it was this fact that led Mr. Clancy to secure the rights for the filmization of this American masterpiece.

In the selection of the cast great care has been shown. Will Rogers has been selected for the role of Ichabod Crane; Lois Meredith plays the charming Katrina Van Tassel, Belle of Sleepy Hollow, whose wiles stir up hopeless ambitions in the breast of Ichabod. The supporting cast has been painstakingly selected in order to assure every box-office angle for the completed production.

Sign 60 by 35 Feet Adorns Theatre

Cosmopolitan says the largest and most unique electric sign in the United States, and probably the world, adorns the front of the Criterion Theatre and announces to Broadway the fact that Marion Davies in "When Knighthood Was in Flower" is the reigning film success at that famous house.

The sign is 60 feet long and 35 feet high, covering almost the entire front of the Criterion Theatre from the marquee to the roof. The letters spelling the name of Marion Davies are 10 feet high, while those in the title of the play, are in two lines of five feet each.

Harold Lloyd Film Sent to New York

Harold Lloyd's first feature comedy completed under his new distributing contract has been shipped to New York, according to advices from the Hal Roach studios just received by Pathe. "Dr. Jack" is its title. It has been previewed on the West Coast with favorable results, it is stated. Pathe sums up many reports received to this effect in the oft-repeated verdict: "'Dr. Jack' contains more laughs than 'Grandma's Boy.'"

Pathe's date for the release of "Dr. Jack" is not yet announced. It is stated, however, that it will be given to the public before the end of the year. The picture was completed several weeks ago.

Worsley Signed

On Loew Circuit

"Dusk to Dawn," the Associated Exhibitors feature starring Florence Vidor, which recently played at the Capitol Theatre, New York City, has been booked for the entire circuit of Marcus Loew theatres in Greater New York.

New Season Begun

Advices received by E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, tell of the opening of the new Paramount season in Tokyo on August 23, to record-breaking crowds at the Imperial Theatre in Tokyo. The first pictures screened through the releasing program of the new Paramount organization were "The Sheik," "Fool's Paradise," and "A Trip to Paramount Town," the latter a two-reel picture depicting the activities of the Lasky studio.

This is the first time in two years that the Imperial, Japan's largest and best legitimate theatre, has shown motion pictures, according to Tom D. Cochrane, Paramount's manager in Japan.

Contracts for Seven Fall Releases

Through the efforts of E. E. Reynolds, branch sales manager for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation in Minneapolis, Minn., a contract has been consummated with the Hennepin Theatre, one of the Orpheum chain, whereby this theatre will show the seven fall releases of the Hodkinson Corporation for first-run in Minneapolis.

According to the report received from the Minneapolis exchange, the following Hodkinson feature attractions will be shown at the Hennepin Theatre sometime in the very near future. They are: "No Trespassing," "Slim Shoulders," "Married People," "The Veiled Woman," "Hearts Haven," "Mind Over Motor" and "The Headless Horseman."

"Chair of Peter" Was Shown

"The Chair of Peter," the motion picture illustrating the ceremonies incidental to the election and coronation of His Holiness, Pope Pius XI, released in the United States and Canada by the Jaxon Film Corporation, New York City, was shown to the Catholic Writers' Guild at their meeting Tuesday evening, September 26, at the Ansonia Hotel.

Descriptive March Composed

E. T. Paull has composed a new descriptive march entitled, "Sheridan's Ride." W. C. Simon reviewed this composition and not alone does it describe the synopsis which precedes the number, but there is spirited music with not a dull measure in it.

E. T. Paull probably has written more descriptive marches than any other composer. He is the composer of the famous "Ben Hur Chariot Race," which most musicians are familiar with.

W. Brandt Praises Davies' Film

"The entire motion picture industry owes a vote of thanks to William Randolph Hearst for giving such a wonderful picture as 'When Knighthood Was in Flower,' now at the Criterion Theatre, to the public at this particular time," declared William Brandt, founder and president emeritus of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, just before the weekly meeting of that organization at the Hotel Astor.

Mr. Brandt is the owner of several theatres in Brooklyn.

Hold Special View

L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North are preparing plans for a special presentation on "Notoriety," the seven-reel feature recently completed by Will Nigh. The picture is now being cut under Nigh's supervision.

In the Independent Field

By ROGER FERRI

Newsy Bits

Lester Scott, Jr., special representative for Affiliated Distributors, Inc., leaves next week for a swing around the exchange centres showing Johnny Hines' latest feature, "Sure Fire Flint."

Charles L. Stephenson, President and General Manager of Stepheuson Attractions, Ltd., of Canada, is in New York, lining up product for the Dominion.

Wallace Worsley, who directed "Rags To Riches," the Harry Rapf feature which Warner Brothers are distributing, has been signed to direct Wallace Reid in his next picture.

Col. A. C. Bromhead of Gaumont, Ltd., of London, arrived in New York this week.

J. Charles, 2nd, assistant to President W. E. Shallenberger of Arrow Film Corporation and exploitation and publicity director of that firm, has returned to New York from Toledo, O., where he exploited "Light Life In Hollywood."

Lou Rogers, who is organizing a new co-operative independent exchange striug, is expected to go on a brief trip to talk with franchise-holders.

Bookings on Al Lichtman's "Rich Men's Wives" are breaking all records for the booking of independent pictures by representative first run houses, judging from reports that have reached this office this week.

"More To Be Pitied Than Scorned," C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's special, is slated for a special run at the Victory Theatre, Providence, R. I., where Mayor Gainer has been induced to attend the opening night.

C. C. Burr, Lester Scott, Johuny Hines, Doris Kenyon and others associated with Affiliated Distributors, Inc., and Mastodon Films, Inc., went to Westfield, N. J., where they attended the test showing of Hines' latest picture, "Sure Fire Flint."

Harry Rapf, producer of "Rags To Riches," in a letter to this department from the Coast, says that he is planning a brief trip to the East some time next month.

Franklyn Backer, President of East Coast Productions, Inc., reports that his J. B. Warner pictures are netting big returns for exchanges and it will not be a surprise if word is given out within the next few weeks that that star will make a new series for independent distribution.

Tony Luchese and Oscar Neufield will open their Baltimore exchange, to be known as Progress Pictures, Inc., on Oct. 5.

Marcus Loew has booked "I Am The Law" for the metropolitan circuit, the picture opening at Loew's State Theatre in Newark, N. J., on next Monday.

The case involving International Film Corporation and "I Am The Law" is at a standstill, pending the return to New York of Federal Judge Knox, who is away on a vacation.

Frankie Lee's first starring vehicle will be "Last Night When I Kissed Miss Thompson", an American Magazine story by Bess Aldrich. Some of the stars on the screen with whom Frankie Lee has appeared are Charles Chaplin, William Farnum, Sessue Hayakawa, Agnes Ayres, Pauline Frederick, Bessie Love and Milton Sills.

The Week in Review

THE last week of September, 1922, will go down into independent history as one of its most important. Many significant things happened. To enumerate them here would mean a repetition of what appears in the pages that follow. However, we may be pardoned for emphasizing several happenings. Perhaps none was so important as that concerning the first run situation, which brought news of record runs from many sections of the city. Again on Broadway we found an independent picture—Warner Brothers' "Rags To Riches"—outdrawing every other picture attraction on its own merit. A little distance westward in Paterson, N. J., we found L. Lawrence Weber-Bobby North's feature, "The Curse of Drink" bringing to the new U. S. Theatre the biggest business that house has done in many a day. Al Lichtman's beautiful production, "Rich Men's Wives" continues its wonderful showings. At Westfield, N. J., our special correspondent attended a test showing of C. C. Burr's latest Johnny Hines' feature comedy-drama. "Sure-Fire Flint." The showing was unheralded, coming in the form of a surprise for Westfield folks. But the point is that the picture registered remarkably and is now ready for general exhibition.

THESE are only a few of the important things that happened during the current week. From Arrow Film Corporation came the happy announcement that Dr. W. E. Shallenberger was lining up a promising array of productions. And hardly had we completed reading that announcement when our telephone dingled and an Arrow official on the other end informed this department that that enterprising firm had acquired the distribution rights to "The Streets of New York," which Burton King recently completed. That feature will be given its premier at Frank Hall's million-dollar house in New Jersey during the week of October 22.

YOU can't keep a good man down. That's an old saying, but seemingly true, for those two genial gentlemen, Eddie Bonns and Lou Marangella, who constitute the entire Warner Brothers' publicity, advertising and exploitation force, simply can not be held down. Their Fifth avenue ballyhoo stunt in conjunction with the showing of "Rags to Riches" at the Capitol Theatre in New York constitutes a genuine publicity masterpiece. Just how these two hustlers accomplished the feat is explained in detail in an exclusive story appearing on the fourth page of this section.

WARNER BROTHERS' can justly lay claim to having a publicity and exploitation duo that can hold its own with any similar department comprising of anywhere from four to ten experts. Surely, they are obtaining as good results, if not better than many of the costly staffs handling picture exploitation. They are original, persistent and aggressive and make friends of all with whom they tie up in the exploitation of any particular picture. And in that method is one important secret of the successful showman.

BUT live-wires minus the product are helpless. And in the case of the Warner Brothers such is not the case, for unless we miss our guess, "Rags To Riches" will gross in the neighborhood of $50,000 during its run at the Capitol Theatre this week. We are basing this estimate on figures compiled on business done up to Wednesday night. If that figure is exceeded, few showmen will be surprised, for Harry Rapf never produced a better production. It is a box office magnet if ever there was one. It has title, cast, story, production and what not.

OUR hearty congratulations to Tony Luchese and Oscar Neufield, owners of De Luxe Exchange, Philadelphia. Elsewhere in this issue is published a special despatch from Baltimore announcing the opening of two new exchanges, to be known as Progress Pictures Exchanges, by these two gentlemen in association with successful business men. The exchanges are to be located in Baltimore and Washington. If the achievements of these two gentlemen in Philadelphia constitute any criterion, they will have no trouble putting over their new venture.

THEY don't make exchangemen any better than Frank Zambreno, owner of the Progress Exchanges of Chicago and Indianapolis. Neither is there a more popular and manlier a gentleman in this industry than this genius from the Windy City. While others are complaining about alleged booking lockouts, Mr. Zambreno is getting choice dates at the best theatres on the Loop and only this week a wire from Chicago brought news that his Graphic production, "The Wildness of Youth," had been booked into two Loop theatres, the Castle and Barbee's theatres, simultaneously during the week of October 1. This is the first time one independent picture has played two Loop houses day and date. But the season has merely started. Take our tip and keep your eye on this Chicagoan.

Trade Notes

Sol Lesser, who is in New York with his partner, Mike Rosenberg, made the statement that "Oliver Twist" will gross $3,000,000. That's the figure that he is holding out for in First National negotiations.

Frank Newman, the Kansas City exhibitor, who is in New York, made it known that independent pictures of merit are ever wanted by him and that he has booked most of the big ones for showings this season.

Jesse A. Levinson is planning a trip for the purpose of selling exchangemen his latest features. Mr. Leviuson will operate on an extensive basis this year.

From the Weiss Brothers' New York offices this week came the statement that the police had recovered a large quantity of paper for "Adventures of Tarzan." The paper is believed to have been stolen from Sam Zierler's Commonwealth Exchange of New York.

Jack Von Tilzer, traveling representative and sales manager for East Coast Productions, returned to New York this week. He has been on the road selling franchises for the J. B Warner westerns, Fatty Karr and Crescent comedies.

The death of Isaac Wolper, formerly head of Mayflower Pictures Corporation, which he founded, in Boston last week came as a distinct shock to his numerous friends in the independent market.

Word comes from Betzwood, Pa., that Frank N. Seltzer has completed "Aching Hearts" at the Betzwood studio. The cast includes Lee Kohlmar, Richard Farrell, James Thomas, Betty Howe and Arthur Ashley. E. S. Manheimer, according to the despatch, will handle distribution on the picture.

Pell Mitchell, a well known cameraman, has signed with C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation to supervise and produce the Starland Revue for that firm. He takes his new duties October 1.

Sherman Webster, formerly special representative for Select in upper New York State, has joined the Nu-Art Exchange of Buffalo, covering the Rochester territory.

Sam Grand and Harry Ascher, both Boston exchangemen, were in New York last week.

Harry Segal of Pioneer Exchange, Boston, is perfecting plans for the road showing of the Lee-Bradford special, "Determination."

Producers Security Corporation, of which Ricord Gradwell is the head, has increased its capitalization from $300,000 to $600,000, according to a despatch from Albany, N. Y.

Charles Jawitz, head of Jawitz Pictures, on his return from a visit to the territories, reports that he has noted a general improvement in the local distribution of state rights pictures.

Independent producers report that the player signing situation has cleared, for no difficulty is now encountered in producing the necessary talent for independent pictures.

No statement, either confirming or denying the report that Warner Brothers were anticipating the production of a special dealing with the life of the late Kaiser, was available.

Amalgamated Exchanges Formed and Sign Mrs. Valentino and Two Others

Official confirmation was received this week of the exclusive announcement made in the Independent Department of Moving Picture World that a new co-operative independent distributing firm was being formed. Late this week it was announced that Amalgamated Exchanges, Inc., of America had been organized. The organization embraces exchanges in every distributing centre in the country, and, according to reliable information obtained by this publication, it will start off with a release schedule of twelve productions. This number, according to several franchise-holders, will be augmented.

The new concern will produce pictures, and made announcement this week that the first picture, "The Madonna in Chains," will be started at the Yonkers, N. Y., studio on next Tuesday. Those who have already been engaged to appear in the picture include E. K. Lincoln, Martha Mansfield and Mrs. Rodolph Valentino, who is making personal appearances, this week playing Fay's Theatre in Providence, R. I.

Amalgamated also announced that it has leased the Mittenthal studio, also in Yonkers, where a second company will start production on another picture shortly. Among the authors whom this firm announces as having signed are Langdon McCormack, Edward Owings Towne, Denman Thompson, Charles Reade, Hal Reid and Martin J. Harvey. Announcement of other people to be engaged is expected to be made next week. It is certain that Mrs. Valentino will appear in a series of pictures that this company will handle.

Ben Schulberg Explains Why Title of Second Al Lichtman Film Was Altered

LOS ANGELES (Special) — "Shadows," B. P. Schulberg's second Preferred Picture for the Al Lichtman Corporation, was made from "Ching, Ching, Chinaman", a prize story by Wilbur Daniel Steele. Schulberg decided to change the title because he felt the new one is a closer fit to the story and its suggestion of mystery.

"We decided on the name 'Shadows' because", said Schulberg, "it incorporates the suggestion of mystery which is the keynote of the plot. I am confident that in our faithful interpretation of Wilbur Daniel Steele's story we have retained its finest element, and I feel that by changing the title we are aiding exhibitors in conveying to their patrons just what the true nature of the picture is.

"By constant reference to Mr. Steele as author we reach his immense following composed of readers of Pictorial Review, Harper's, Century, Success, and many other magazines which have published his stories".

First-runs throughout the county will probably start showings of "Shadows", the new Schulberg-Lichtman release, in October. From the studio here comes word that Lon Chaney, who has the principal role, has made another unusual characterization. As a matter of fact, the cast for an independently released picture is exceptionally strong. Besides Chaney, there are Harrison Forde, Marguerite De La Motte, John Sainpolis, Walter Long, Buddy Messenger and Priscilla Bonner. Tom Forman, one of the former Lasky directors, made the picture.

An old line melodrama is the basis of "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" which Gasnier has just finished for B. P. Schulberg. Bertha M. Clay wrote the story. Kenneth Harlan, Edith Roberts and Estelle Taylor are principals in the cast. It is understood Harlan's work in this prompted Schulberg to sign him for a year.

The entire Shipman producing unit from Canada has arrived and is settled in Los Angeles. The company includes twenty-five persons.

There is some talk here that Francis Ford is about to organize his own producing company, with Peggy O'Day, who is to star, financially interested. However, Miss O'Day has received several offers and may accept one of these in preference to gambling with a corporation.

"South of Northern Lights," the latest Neal Hart western, should be in New York by this time, for a print of that picture was shipped to William Steiner Productions, Inc., from here early last week.

Production on "Brass" and "The Beautiful and Damned", two Warner Brothers' pictures, is well under way at the Warner studio here.

Joseph Brandt, of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation and managing director of Federal Film Exchanges of America, is in Los Angeles. He is making his headquarters at the Hallroom Comedy Studio, where Harry Cohn is in charge.

Russell Simpson, who did some wonderful work as the sheriff in Harry Rapf's production "Rags To Riches", has been signed for an important role in "Peg O' My Heart".

MARY ANDERSON
Now co-starred with Ray McKee and Charles Murray in C. C. Burr's all-star comedies.

Orville Caldwell has been signed by Ben Schulberg for appearances in Preferred Pictures, which Al Lightman will release.

The first "Fatty" Karr production which Bruce Mitchell is making for East Coast Productions, Inc., of New York, will be completed by the 28th of October.

The Warner forces were jubilant this week when news reached the studio that Harry Rapf's "Rags To Riches" with Wesley Barry had met with unanimous praise at its initial showing in New York.

Atlas 'Change Buys "Why Do Men Marry?"

Unity Pictures, Inc., announces that the Atlas Film Distributing Company has purchased "Why Do Men Marry?" for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey.

The box-office value of the title of this society drama, in which Edy Darclea is the star, has been quickly recognized and Unity Pictures, Inc., state that a large number of exhibitors have seen the picture and are all enthusiastic over its "bring 'em in" title.

This is the first of many productions in which Edy Darclea is to play the leading role. Recently she completed work on "Sant' Ilario," a Henry Kolker production, which is to be released shortly.

Jaffe's Back

Sam Jaffe, business manager of Preferred Pictures, which release through the Al Lichtman Corporation, is back in Los Angeles.

Ben Schulberg Starts on Two Productions

LOS ANGELES — (Special) — What will be the fourth and fifth releases through the Al Lichtman Corporation were started this week at the Schulberg studio. Tom Forman commenced work on "Are You a Failure?" and Gasnier on "The Hero" for Preferred Pictures, Inc., of which "Bennie" Schulberg is president. The former is from an original story by Larry Evans, which will later be novelized. Incidentally, the picture is the second of a series of Tom Forman productions, the first being "Shadows," which Lichtman will release in October.

Gasnier's subject is the play by Gilbert Emery, in which Richard Bennett starred last season on Broadway. It is understood that Barbara Le Marr and Gaston Glass are two of the principals in it. These two pictures are fourth and fifth on the Lichtman schedule; the others, "Rich Men's Wives," "Shadows" and "Thorns and Orange Blossoms." The last two are yet to be released.

Ben Wilson has completed the second comedy of the series which he is producing for Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., in which Eddie Barry appears as the poor unfortunate who is penniless and is found in many amusing situations vainly trying to collect a life insurance policy without cashing in his life. "Moner or My Life" is the title of this production.

Under the direction of Ben Wilson, Monty Banks has completed the second of the series of two-reel comedies which he is making for Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., the title of the production being "Love Taps"; Monty appearing as the pugilistic lover.

Edward L. Klein, of the Edward L. Klein Company, has left for Chicago to meet the officials of a West Coast production unit for the purpose of closing an important deal which has been under negotiation for several weeks and which involves a series of big productions to be distributed throughout the World through the Klein organization.

"Sure-Fire Flint" Makes Crowd Howl at Unheralded Test Show

WESTFIELD, N. J.—Charles C. Burr's Johnny Hines feature, "Sure-Fire Flint," was given its world premier presentation at Flaggs Theatre here on Saturday, Sept. 24, in the presence of a capacity audience. The showing was in the nature of a test to ascertain the entertainment value of the production, the picture having been put into the theatre without any advance bill and with the spectators kept in ignorance that they were being treated to a genuine first-run and were seeing the feature before fans in larger cities. It opened "cold," but the reception accorded the production turned out to be an ovation.

No better test of the entertainment value of the picture could have been made. It was not the plan of Producer-Distributor Burr to ascertain the drawing power of the picture. For several weeks he had scouts out in the sticks seeking a town that would furnish an acid test for the picture. He wanted to see just how much enjoyment movie fans received. It was at this same house that Mr. Burr tested the entertainment value of his Edwin Carewe Northwest feature, "I Am The Law".

If the much applause inspired by the picture can be accepted as a criterion, Johnny Hines' second feature-length picture will be a better drawnig card than his first one, "Burn 'Em Up Barnes", for the reason that the patrons left the theatre talking in praise about the picture. Particularly enthusiastic was the audience when the thrilling scene where Johnny Hines in an automobile collides with a fast moving express was shown.

"Sure Fire Flint" registered well, and one thing is certain and that is that those exchanges and exhibitors who bought or booked this feature on the strength of the excellence of "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" have an agreeable surprise coming to them, for the production is a first-class picture from every angle. The settings are picturesque, while the cast, which includes names galore, is a hard-working and successful one. Doris Kenyon made a splendid leading woman for Hines and the two together played a big part in the making of a production that is replete with thrills, romance and characteristic "Torchy" humor that made them howl. Miss Kenyon did remarkable work on this picture and she endeared herself to every Westfieldian on hand at the opening.

Analyzed from a showman's viewpoint, "Sure Fire Flint" looms forth as sure-fire. It is big enough to warrant the expenditure of extra exploitation money, for it will all be returned with a huge profit, for as entertainment the picture is true to its name. Of course Hines, being the central figure, is given every opportunity to show at his best, and he didn't miss a single chance. His natural air is what grips the audience, which was thrown into a seemingly endless chain of hilarity, interrupted only through some heart-interest moment, the two combining to make it a special worthy of superlative exploitation, and showing at any figure your patrons will stand paying at the box office.

Dell Henderson never did anything so attractive, his was the touch of a showman with the box office ever before him. He has given the exhibitor angles that are not to be found in most pictures. He took particular pains to see that nothing was overdone and that every player assumed his or her role naturally. He wasted no time telling his story or introducing his characters. Whatever salary Dell Henderson received for making this production he earned many times over, for in "Sure Fire Flint" one finds a cheerful example of just what constitutes honest-to-goodness entertainment that is away from the regular stereotyped variety.

Others in the cast whose work is deserving of mention are Edmund Breese, Bob Edeson and Effie Shannon, all of whom act intelligently. Particularly attractive is the characterization of Edmund Breese. Ralph Spence's titles are characteristic of that writer, for they are funnier than those he wrote for "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" and to the point, keeping the spectator in a cheerful state of mind through the entire showing of the picture.

The showing brought to Westfield an array of distinguished motion picture talent from the metropolis. C. C. Burr headed the party, which included Johnny Hines, Doris Kenyon and others. Both Hines and Miss Kenyon made appearances. He chatted with his audience as though he had known every member of that crowd for years. This intimate speech won for him applause that lasted for some little time. But modestly, Johnny refused to hog the limelight, and when the audience yelled for more he politely introduced his leading lady, Miss Kenyon, who made a beautiful appearance, winning over her audience with a talk on experiences encountered during the making of the picture.

Exhibitor Flagg was as enthusiastic over the picture as his overjoyed audience, saying that "it was the greatest picture I have shown at my house since Charlie Chaplin in 'The Kid.'"

Grand to Give Big "Notoriety" Showing

BOSTON (Special)—Plans have been completed by Sam Grand, of Federated Film Exchange of this city, for the world premier and trade showing of Will Nigh's latest feature, "Notoriety", at the Copley-Plaza Hotel on Tuesday evening, October 4. The affair promises to be one of the greatest of its kind held in this section, for virtually every exhibitor of any consequence will be on hand at the showing, which will be preceded by a dinner and followed by a dance.

Prominent film executives, stars and exhibitors will be on hand, according to plans that were announced here. A special train will leave New York Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock with a party of film folks from the metropolis who will be the guests here of Mr. Grand and L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North, distributors of the Will Nigh pictures.

Federated Exchange will release the picture in this territory. Will Nigh also will be on hand as will also several of the stars and Sam Saxe, sales manager for L. Lawrence Weber-Bobby North.

"Purple Highway" Is Ready

The first Kenma production of Madge Kennedy, stage and screen star, has now been completed, after several weeks' work by Rufus Steele, the author, Henry Kolker, the director, and several members of the production staff. Miss Kennedy herself sat in at several of the conferences and private screenings, although during the same period she had been rehearsing for a new John Golden stage production. The cast of "The Purple Highway' is one which is all-star in fact as well as in name. Not less than a dozen well known players have important roles, and among these are Vincent Coleman, Dore Davidson, Monte Blue, and Pedro De Cordoba. Henry Kolker, the man responsible for "Disraeli," directed this first Kenma special.

Preferred Pictures to Form Stock Company; Sign Harlan

LOS ANGELES (Special)—B. P. Schulberg this week announced his intention of forming a permanent stock company from which talent will be drawn to appear in future Preferred Pictures.

His first move along these lines was the signing of Kenneth Harlan and Orville Caldwell. Schulberg intends adding to this nucleus from time to time in order to insure a prominent array of talent in forthcoming pictures and in order to carry out his promises to exhibitors to make pictures with all-star casts and from worthwhile literary material.

Harlan's contract followed a role in "Thorns and Orange Blossoms", the Bertha M. Clay novel which Louis J. Gasnier has just completed for Schulberg and released through the Al Lichtman Corporation. At present, Harlan is at the Warner Brothers studio where he is being co-featured with Marie Prevost in "The Beautiful and Damned". When he finishes in that picture, he will return to the Schulberg plant on Mission Road ready for work in new Preferred Pictures.

Censors O. K. Levinson Film

Jesse A. Levinson announces that the New York Motion Picture Commission have passed his current feature, "The Plaything of an Emperor" without a single elimination or change. Mr. Levinson considers this an exceptional tribute to the dignity and beauty with which this passionate love story of Napoleon and Countess Walewska is unfolded. He points out that censor troubles would be entirely avoided if producers were to insist that their scenario writers exercise a finer imagination and a keener sense of what the adult mind can appreciate without having apparent facts emphasized by "peppy" sub-titles.

Schlesinger Puts Over Big Deal

Gus S. Schlesinger, general manager of the Warner Brothers foreign department, successfully negotiated a big deal last week with Juan Kunzler, Sociedad General Cinematografica, Buenos Aires, for the entire series of Warner pictures. Mr. Kunzler purchased the exclusive rights for Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru, Bolivia, and Ecuador.

Ed. Bonns' 5th Avenue Tieup Helps "Rags to Riches" Threaten House Mark

Opening to a business estimated at $9,200 on the day, a figure within a few dollars of the record, Warner Brothers' initial 1922-23 release, "Rags to Riches," a Harry Rapf production, gave promise at the Capitol Theatre, New York City, on Monday, Sept. 25, of ranking among the biggest money makers shown on Broadway. On Wednesday of this week the gross had climbed to a point where it was fair to assume, provided the ideal theatre-going weather held up, that the picture would gross more than any other independent production shown at any house on Broadway.

The opening—Sunday, Sept. 24—was a distinct surprise to everybody along the main stem, for the reason that the day was an unusually hot one for that time of the year. Incidentally, there were other outdoor attractions in New York that invited attendance on such a hot day. That the weather did interfere with business at Broadway houses was evident from the grosses recorded at the vaudeville and other picture theatres on that street. However, the Capitol outdrew them, the turn away at the night show being a lifesaver for several of the vaudeville and picture houses in the immediate neighborhood.

A clever program, conceived by Sam Rothafel, helped the draw materially, for there was no advance exploitation to speak of done on the picture. The Capitol has adopted what might be pardonably characterized as a "high brow" or "institutional" policy. That is, the management has drawn the line on sensational exploitation or in fact outside exploitation of any kind, contenting itself with the newspaper tieups. The advertising in the newspapers, however, was in line with that usually done by the house.

Eddie Bonns, publicity and exploitation genius of Warner Brothers, and his able assistant, Lou Marangella, had worked several weeks prior to the opening on some stunts, but Mr. Rothafel informed them that the policy of the house prevented their consummation. One of the stunts that is particularly unique, called for a clothes-line to be strung across Broadway from the dome of the Capitol Theatre to the building on the other side of the street. Pinned on the line were to be old and stylish clothes, with each suit having a letter so that when read across the line the title "Rags to Riches" would strike the spectator. But Rothafel ruled that out.

However, a little thing like a policy means nothing in the life of enterprising showmen who care to take no chances on their wares regardless of their merit, so when it was made plain that the house would sanction no stunt, Bonns and Marangella proceeded to negotiate some tieups with business houses along Broadway and other principal New York thoroughfares. Several thousand neat and artistic cards with Wesley Barry in various characterizations and the title immaculately jotted across the full length of the card were planted in windows at ideal spots. This attracted much talk among showmen, for it was a much bigger tieup than the one these clever men negotiated for "School Days". And such tieups are not common on Broadway.

Another helpful stunt that attracted attention to the picture was the ballyhoo float that was sent throughout New York. This float, in able charge of Frank Cassidy, an old time circus trouper, did remarkable work, for numerous stunts were pulled. One particularly good attractor was pulled at Fifth Avenue and 42nd street, New York, the busiest street in the world, at the congested noon hour. The attractive float with its settings made up of the seven books advertising the seven Warner releases, with a banner thrown about the float announcing the Capitol opening, joined the traffic at 59th street and Fifth avenue, creeping its way down the hustling and bustling thoroughfare, slowly, but carefully.

The slow progress of the float truck exasperated other automobilists, who immediately resorted to a honking of their horns. This honking in time became so loud and persistent that the thousands who walked up and down the street could not help but have their attention attracted to the creeping obstacle. The stunt went over big, but not so big that it could not make all New York showdom take notice, for the racket that was pulled at Fifth avenue and 42nd street earned thousands of dollars of worth-while advertising for the picture, the opening and Warner Brothers.

Having consumed something like 35 minutes in deliberately creeping down Fifth avenue from 59th street to 42nd street, amid a wholesale honking of automobile horns that made every other noise on the street inaudible, the float finally got to that busy spot diagonally across from the Public Library. Traffic, north and south, was stopped, but the driver deliberately drove on, the officers in charge interrupting the progress and calling out to the chauffeur to stop. The latter made a feeble effort at replying that the mechanism of the truck was not running smoothly. The officer replied that that didn't mean a thing in his life and emphasized his order for the truck to back up with a threat to arrest the riders—Frank Cassidy, Eddie Bonns and Lou Marangella.

The chauffeur, apparently reluctantly backed up, but when traffic was again ordered to move north and south it was found that the car was stalled. This gave the publicists a chance to do their "act". The officers, angered because traffic was hopelessly tied up, loudly "bawled" out the trio. The three got out of the car and fumbled with the car, Bonns arguing with the car frequently mentioning the picture. Horns from machines, held up for blocks up Fifth avenue and 42nd street, created a commotion, with thousands of folks about the machine seeking to ascertain what the trouble was. The officers, sensing it to be a publicity stunt, refused to arrest the trio.

After holding up traffic, hundreds of machines and thousands of people, along the entire length of Fifth avenue from 59th street down to 34th street, the truck was started, but not until everybody in the neighborhood had been made acquainted with the opening at the Capitol. Then the truck moved into 42nd street and up Broadway. It was the first time that such a stunt was worked on Fifth avenue. Money could not have purchased the curiosity aroused by the stunt, and the box-office of the Capitol later in the week proved that it was a money-getter. All of which puts Eddie Bonns, Lou Marangella and Frank Cassidy in a class by themselves.

To further aid the Capitol Theatre run the Monday newspapers came out with reviews praising the picture. Quinn Martin, the most fastidious critic in New York, who is being 24-sheeted in the metropolis by the New York World, said it "was a quality picture of rare excellence". He advised his readers "don't miss this picture". The New York American, Evening Mail, New York Sun and Evening Sun, and others, all agreed with Mr. Martin that the production constituted "high class entertainment of the superlative order", as one of the writers put it.

These commendable reviews had a tendency of keeping up the huge Sunday draw, and on Monday business was held up, with indications that the gross of the week would surpass the most generous expectations of even its distributors.

AND HERE IS THE PROOF!
Clever and bold stunt that tied up traffic on Fifth Avenue for twenty-five blocks and proved its value by sending capacity houses to Capitol Theatre.

"Secrets of Paris" Sold 80 P. C.

Word comes from the offices of C. C. Burr, who with Whitman Bennett produced the famous melodrama "Secrets of Paris", taken from Eugene Sue's novel, "The Mysteries of Paris", that fully 80 per cent of the territory had been sold long before the picture was finished. The cause for this is attributed to the fact that the numerous exchange men that daily come to Mr. Burr's office were so impressed with excellent stills that were being sent daily from Mr. Whitman's studio in Yonkers.

The following territories have already been sold: West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania to Joseph Skirboll, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Ohio and Kentucky to William Skirboll, of Cleveland, Ohio; Entire New England States to Sam Moscow, of Boston; Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey to Robt. Lynch, of Philadelphia; California, Arizona and Nevada to G. N. Montgomery, of Los Angeles; Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico, Utah and Southern Idaho to M. A. Klausner, of Denver, Colo.

Continuity on "Secrets of Paris" will be completed this week, it is reported, and distribution of prints will immediately begin.

"What's Wrong With the Women"

Written and Produced by Daniel Carson Goodman

Note—At the time of the writing of this advertisement bookings had hardly started in territories where "WHAT'S WRONG WITH THE WOMEN" had been sold. A last moment wire gave a list five times as large as published below but owing to lack of time, it was impossible to include the telegraphic list among those shown here. The answer is—"WHAT'S WRONG WITH THE WOMEN" is going over like a house afire everywhere, with Exhibitors clamoring for bookings. Note the class of theatres who have booked "WHAT'S WRONG WITH THE WOMEN."

Big First Run Week Recorded; North's Stunt Aids Premier

The current week goes down into independent history as one notable for its many premier showings of independent productions. Warner Brothers' Harry Rapf production, "Rags to Riches," held up the bill at the Capitol in New York, while a few miles northwest the L. Lawrence Weber-Bobby North special, "The Curse of Drink," was being given its premier at the Adams Brothers' United States Theatre in Paterson, N. J., where the picture had broken all house records up to Thursday. Indications then were that this phenomenal business would hold up with more than a strong likelihood that a new house record would be established.

From virtually every key city in the country this week came reports of big openings of independent pictures. Several last minute switchings were necessary, but, on the whole, the first run situation indicated a change that should be encouraging, for it proved again the contention of keen showmen that exhibitors want box-office pictures regardless of who had them. Phil Goldstone's "Deserted At The Altar", followed C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's "More To Be Pitied Than Scorned" into B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre, where the latter last week played to the biggest gross recorded at that house since Keith assumed the bookings there.

Bobby North, upon getting the Paterson opening date, recruited his forces about him and proceeded to lay out exploitation plans to put over "The Curse of Drink". He had constructed a special float, depicting a full size engine. The miniature was identical with fender, boiler, etc. Securely planted on a truck chassis the float was first sent around New York, functioning in the same manner that an engine functions, clanging its way through busy streets. Satisfied that the stunt attracted attention and aroused talk, the float was sent to Paterson.

In Paterson the float took the natives by storm. There the float was ornamented with a banner announcing the engagement at the U. S. Theatre. As the float chugged its way down the streets of Paterson, thousands gathered about it, children following it all around the town, with the sidewalks lined up with curious expecting to see a circus parade. The stunt attracted newspaper attention and must be considered an important fact in the draw of the picture.

Matt Reilley, of the Victory Theatre, Providence, R. I., is given credit for having secured the biggest gross on Producers' Security Corporation's Dorothy Gish special, "The Country Flapper", the picture playing to a capacity business. The exploitation done on the picture proved a strong business getter, the gross for the week almost touching the remarkable record hung up at that house by Arrow's "Ten Nights in a Barroom" last December.

The big Delmonte Theatre in St. Louis, which was formerly owned by Famous Players-Missouri Corporation, last week completed a week's run of "Rich Men's Wives", Ben Schulberg's first special for the Al Lichtman Corporation.

The Commodore, one of Brooklyn's most commodious neighborhood theatres, has booked "Rich Men's Wives" through Al Lichtman Exchange of New York, of which Sam Zierler is the franchise holder.

Gross bookings on "Rich Men's Wives" to date have reached an unusual figure. Film men are of the opinion that seldom does a new distributing organization like the Al Lichtman Corporation get off to such an auspicious start with a first release. Ben Schulberg and Al Lichtman are expected to make a tip-top working combination, Ben on production and Al on distribution.

From Milwaukee comes word that "Rich Men's Wives", B. P. Schulberg's first picture for the Al Lichtman Corp., will play a percentage booking at the Garden. The distributor is guaranteed a flat sum and then both distributor and exhibitor will split equally over a certain gross. The engagement is for a week.

Manager Rielley, of the Victory, of Providence, R. I., is one exhibitor who has learned the box-office value of meritorious independent productions, for with the use of such pictures he built out of a conceded lemon stand one of the best paying propositions in New England. He has booked "Yankee Doodle, Jr." for a premier showing at his house the week of October 9. He is lining up city and state officials to put over the picture.

"What's Wrong With The Women?", the Equity special, added another feather to its cap this week when that feature was booked for a day and date showing at the Beacon and Modern Theatres, Boston.

"The Broken Silence," Arrow's latest Northwest, is doing a land-office business in Chicago, judging from reports. This past week it held up well at both the Terminal and Portage Theatres.

B. S. Moss and Keith circuits this week booked Phil Goldstone's picture, "Deserted At The Altar", at their metropolitan houses.

None of the Exchangemen would comment on the movement on foot in New York to organize exhibitors into one big centralized booking agency.

Press Books Show Many Good Changes

Gone, apparently, is the day of the useless press book, if the observations of this department mean anything. It is pleasant to report that the independent press agents are confining their efforts toward turning out press books that mean something to exhibitors. Take, for instance, the press book Bobby North has just published on his first big release of his fall schedule, "The Curse of Drink." This book is about as complete as this department has come across in many a day, and contains everything any exhibitor would want in the way of helps and suggestions in putting over any picture. Nat Rothstein, who has always turned out wonders, has published a gem on Equity's "What's Wrong with the Women?"

Lyn Bonner has turned out an equally nifty book on the First Preferred Pictures Corporation production, "Rich Men's Wives." This issue is rich with material of help to the exhibitor. It contains exploitation ideas galore and the wonder of it is that these suggestions are all practical and the kind that, backed by a good picture, should mean heavy box office business. The same can be said of Esther Linder's book on C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's special, "More to Be Pitied Than Scorned."

Warner Brothers, whose publicity department ranks among the best to be found anywhere, are turning out a press sheet that will be jammed with novel exploitation material, together with accessories that are unique and business-getting. C. C. Burr, of Affiliated Distributors, Inc., is about to release a book on Johnny Hines' picture, "Sure Fire Flint," that is a bird from every angle. Arrow Film Corporation's publicity and exploitation forces have been working overtime turning out books on the many Arrow releases. This firm has always turned out books with practical ideas and publicity that any live editor would welcome.

Max Cohen on Conditions

Max Cohen, of Monopol Pictures, Inc., has just returned from a ten-day trip on the road and reports that business is good. The Monopol Three Star Series of short subjects featuring Wallace Reid, Lillian Gish and Dorothy Gish has been sold for the following territories:

Greater New York, Producers Feature Service; Eastern Pennsylvania, Dave Starkman, Philadelphia, Pa.; Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, Vimy Film Corporation, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Northern Illinois and Indiana, Griever Productions, Chicago, Ill.; Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, North and South Carolina, Savini Films, Atlanta, Ga., and Canada to Canadian Exhibitors Exchange, Ltd., Toronto, Canada.

Bachmann Vacations

J. G. Bachman, treasurer of Preferred Pictures, Inc., and the Al Lichtman Corporation, is away on a week's vacation. Up in the Maine woods.

BURTON KING
Director-Showman whose latest picture, "The Streets of New York," Arrow Film Corporation will release.

Fewer Titles; More Comedy— Harry Cohn

TITLES should not be "forced" into a comedy, and the action itself, if it is a good comedy, should be sufficiently funny to stand up without this aid, is the opinion of Harry Cohn, producer of the popular Hallroom Boys' Comedies. He announces that he is carrying out this belief in the production of the comedies on the new series.

Since the beginning of production on this new series, Mr. Cohn has had worked into them fewer titles than ever before, and such titles as are in are a definite part of the action, and are there not only because they are funny, but because they help out and belong there.

Each of the comedies already on the new series, "Still Going Strong," "The New Mama," "A Tailor-Made Chauffeur" was run in two coast theatres before being sent East for distribution.

"Rich Men's Wives" Sold for Mexico

"Rich Men's Wives," the first of the Schulberg-Preferred Pictures for release through the Al Lichtman Corporation, has been purchased for Mexico by German Camus & Co., of Mexico City. The deal was closed with Felipe Mier, local representative of the Mexican importers. This is the third deal to be closed in the last few days on "Rich Men's Wives."

Warner Completes "Flaming Hearts"

James B. Warner, the new cowboy star, has completed "Flaming Hearts." This is the second of the Franklyn E. Backer series of unusual Westerns adapted from well-known magazine stories. Mr. Warner will immediately commence production on the third five-reeler of the series, "Crimson Gold."

"What's Wrong With the Women" Establishing New Booking Records

A four weeks' run for the Daniel Carson Goodman production, "What's Wrong With the Women?" is the latest big booking to be accorded this Equity picture. Mr. Goodman's production has been booked by Progress Features, which controls the rights for California, in the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles, to run for one month beginning October 28. On the same date, Progress Features reports, the picture will open at the California Theatre in San Francisco, one of the big first-run houses of that city.

These West Coast bookings are only a few of the first-runs which are being accorded "What's Wrong With the Women?" in every territory where it has been sold. Sam Zierler, of Commonwealth Film Company, recently booked the picture at the Cameo Theatre for its New York first run. In Philadelphia, where the rights are controlled by the Masterpiece Film Attractions, the feature ran day and date in two Stanley Theatres, the Palace and the Arcadia. In both of these theatres "What's Wrong With the Women?" created phenomenal box-office records and was ranked as one of the most talked of productions of the year.

Ben Amsterdam, of Masterpiece, also reports first-run bookings in Reading, Pa., and in Chester, Pa. In the first named city the picture will open at the Lyric Theatre and in the latter at the Washington Theatre.

Full week's runs will be given the picture in St. Paul and Duluth in two prominent first-run houses. F. & R. Film Company, controlling the rights for this territory, report the booking of the Aster Theatre in St. Paul and the Lyric Theatre in Duluth. In Boston, Sam Grand, president of Federated Film Exchange, of New England, reports that the picture will be shown in two first-run houses, the Modern Theatre and the Beacon. The Victory in Providence, the Strand in Lowell and the Orpheum in Malden will also play the picture. Other theatres to show "What's Wrong With the Women" in the New England territory will be the Durrell in Cambridge, the Imperial in Pawtucket, the Plaza in Salem, and the Capitol in New Bedford.

ESTELLE TAYLOR
One of the many stars who appear in C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's "Only a Shop Girl," now being produced.

Arrow Gets King's New Melodrama

Following several weeks' negotiations, Arrow Film Corporation this week acquired "The Streets of New York," a new Burton King special, from the State Pictures Corporation of New Jersey, for distribution in the independent market. This increases the total specials that Arrow has acquired for distribution to four, the others being "Night Life in Hollywood," which had its premier showing at Atlantic City, N. J., several weeks ago; "Lost in a Big City," which Blazed Trails Productions, Inc., is now making at Gloversville, N. Y., with virtually the same cast that appeared in "Ten Nights in a Bararoom," and "Jacqueline," a James Oliver Curwood feature, which Dell Henderson is producing at Fort Lee, N. J. Negotiations are under way for other specials.

Much interest will be manifested in the Arrow announcement for the reason that it gives exchangemen and exhibitors a comprehensive idea of just what that company will have to offer this coming season. Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, who closed the deal for "The Streets of New York," is particularly enthusiastic about the future of the independent market, and realizing the demand of exhibitors for big independent pictures, he is lining up the best available features for distribution through his organization.

Several companies, one of them a program releasing firm, were bidding for "The Streets of New York." The picture is said to represent the best work of Burton King, who is reported to demonstrate his ability to make a picture that gives every promise of being a box-office hit. The cast is one that is replete with established names. Edward Earle plays the leading role, while opposite him will play Barbara Castleton. Others in the cast include Dorothy Mackail, whose work in this picture, says Director King, is a revelation and demonstrative of the excellent ability of this star, who ranks among the most promising of the new players of the screen.

The picture will be given its premier presentation at Frank Hall's million-dollar State Theatre in Jersey City, N. J., during the week of October 22.

Weber-North to Boom "Notoriety"

When Will Nigh's first feature production for L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North is ready for distribution, it will find that progressive firm of independent producers ready to meet the demands of exchangemen and exhibitors for one of the most prosperous box-office careers any independent production has yet enjoyed. For three months Weber & North have been concentrating on the release of their first Will Nigh special. While the director himself was perfecting the artistry and strength of the picture itself, the producers and distributor were paving the way for 100 per cent. co-operation with the exhibitor and the local distributor, after the picture has been disposed of.

The first step in strengthening their organization was taken when Sam Sax, recognized as the leading sales manager in the independent field, was engaged to give every assistance and co-operation to the state right buyer and exploiting Weber North's release. The field staff was further enlarged by assignment of William Kraft, as Mr. Sax's assistant and as advertising manager. Expert publicity co-operation was assured by the engagement of Charles Cohen, one of the leading exploiteers in the field, to put over Weber & North's productions.

Independent exchangemen throughout the country received the news of the independent release of "Notoriety" as well as the forthcoming Will Nigh releases with enthusiasm. It was first thought that Weber & North might accept the offer of a national distributor to release "Notoriety" nationally, but this was definitely denied when "Notoriety" was announced as an indepedent state-right offering.

Open Bible Picture Outside New York

After six weeks spent by Weiss Brothers in an effort to secure a Broadway showing of their Biblical spectacle "After Six Days", the Artclass organization has decided to forego their metropolitan plans in regard to the production for the time being and open the picture out of town. With this in view, arrangements will be consummated this week for extended engagements of "After Six Days" in Indianapolis and Minneapolis. It is expected that the film will be placed at the English Opera House in Indianapolis and in the Metropolitan Opera House in Minneapolis for long runs. Weiss Brothers hope, following the completion of these engagements, that the theatrical situation in New York will improve sufficiently enough for them to secure a leading Broadway theatre.

In an effort to secure a metropolitan premier for "After Six Days", Artclass Pictures Corporation made bids for the Astor Theatre, the Metropolitan Opera House, The Gayety, The Cohan and Harris and several other leading houses. Due to the large number of theatrical attractions requiring houses in the city, film offerings are practically shut out, and it is understood that the new Fairbanks' film, "Robin Hood", is in the same plight with Weiss Brothers' picture.

Picture-Arts Sales Corp. Is Newest Concern

The Picture-Arts Sales Corporation, Inc., a newly formed independent distributing company, this week announced the release of a series of five-reel pictures. These pictures feature Lon Chaney, Elaine Hammerstein, Dorothy Phillips, Hobart Bosworth, Rupert Julian and others. The pictures are "Two Men of Sandy Bar," by Bret Harte, starring Hobart Bosworth; "The Palace Beyond the Winds," starring Lon Chaney and Dorothy Phillips; "The Co-Respondent," starring Elaine Hammerstein, adapted by Ralph Ince; "The Bugler of Algiers," by R. H. Davis, starring Rupert Julian; "Fast Company," starring Lon Chaney and Franklin Farnum; "From Broadway To a Throne," with Carter De Haven; "The Sundown Trail," starring Monroe Salisbury, and "The Terror," by Raymond Wells, with Jack Mulhall and Virginia Lee. They are all re-issues.

Dell Henderson and Great Cast Start Work on Curwood Northwestern, "Jacqueline"

Dell Henderson, who several weeks ago completed "Sure Fire Flint" for C. C. Burr, started production this week on the next Northwest picture that Pine Tree Pictures Company will make for distribution through Arrow Film Corporation. Production started at the old E. K. Lincoln Studio in New Jersey. One of the best casts of names ever selected for an independent production of this sort has been lined up. The picture being made is "Jacqueline", based on the story by James Oliver Curwood.

Heading the cast is Lew Cody, who starred in Cosmopolitan's "The Valley of Silent Men," also a James Oliver Curwood story, and who has just completed "Secrets of Paris" for Burr and Whitman Bennett. Marguerite Courtot, who has starred in such pictures as "The Unbeliever", "The Perfect Lover", with Eugene O'Brien, and "Teeth of a Tiger", will play opposite Cody. Paul Panzer, one of the screen veterans, will appear an important role.

Others equally well known both to exhibitors and public, include Sheldon Lewis, who has a tremendous following and who for the past few years has been appearing on the vaudeville stage. Kate Bruce, a well known "mother" of the screen; J. Barney Sherry, Master Joe Depew, one of the cleverest child-actors in the business; Effie Shannon, who has just completed "Sure Fire Flint", and Charles Fang, a funny Chinese player.

Edria Fiske, thus far unknown, but who was selected from the ranks of inter-city beauties who participated at the recent Atlantic City pageant, will also appear in this feature, which is expected to be ready for release some time late in November.

Burton King, who is working on "Skylock of Wall Street" at the Ideal studio at Palisades, N. J., expects to have that production completed by the middle of October. On Wednesday night of this week the big scene, that of a Jewish wedding, was taken. The cast is an ideal one, including Dore Davidson, Zena Keefe, Gene Burnell, Edward Earle and Maurice Costello.

Will Nigh, who is directing for L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North, will not start on his second feature until the latter part of this month. He is casting for the picture, however. His first feature, "Notoriety," will be shown for the first time in Boston next Tuesday.

Every studio in New Jersey is working full time. Several companies planning production had to hold up their plans temporarily pending the completion of productions now under way.

Production has commenced at the Tilford studio in New York on "The House of Solomon," in which the character actor, William Strauss, plays the leading role. This is a story of Jewish life. Miss Ruth McNamara also appears in the cast.

Unity Pictures, Inc., who recently produced "Why Do Men Marry?" now has in preparation its second offering, "A Woman's Story." The story will be told in diary form, according to announcement made to this department.

Plans for the production of the second Johnny Hines picture are well under way and production is expected to be started late in October. Dell Henderson, who directed "Sure Fire Flint" and is now working on "Jacqueline," will in all probability direct this second production, which C. C. Burr will supervise.

Doris Kenyon, who played lead opposite Johnny Hines in "Sure Fire Flint," will shortly open in a new play that Don Marquis, author of "The Old Soak" and a prominent columnist, has written. Because Miss Kenyon is in Philadelphia this week appearing in "Up the Ladder," rehearsals on the new show will not begin until next Wednesday. The new play will open either in Atlantic City or New London and then come to New York. Miss Kenyon will work in pictures while playing New York.

Gustav Seffertitz, now appearing with Marion Davies in "When Knighthood Was in Flower," is working at the Tilford studios in New York on Thomas Dixon's new picture, "The Beast." Seffertitz is playing a comedy role.

Betty Blythe has commenced on the second Whitman Bennett production, entitled "The Darling of the Rich." Miss Blythe recently completed her first picture, "How Women Love," for Mr. Bennett. She will be ably supported by an all-star cast, including Leslie Austin, her leading man; Montague Love, Gladys Leslie, Julia Swayne Gordon, Charles Gerard and Jane Jennings. Bennett will supervise production, while Kenneth Webb will direct.

If the present plans of Whitman Bennet do not miscarry and the next Betty Blythe feature is completed by the first of November, as planned, Kenneth Webb will have established the record of having made three consecutive pictures in as many months. He will have done "How Women Love" for Bennett and "Secrets of Paris" for Bennett and C. C. Burr. The latter picture will be released this month.

Vera Gordon will shortly start production on a new picture for which several distributors are dickering. Her latest picture, "My Best Friend," distributed by the Warner Brothers, is now being generally distributed.

Several independent producers this week opened negotiations with A. H. Woods, manager of Pauline Fredericks, for her services. Miss Fredericks is now appearing in a Chicago theatre. There is only a small chance of Mr. Woods accepting the proposition, which is far from being a tempting one for any star.

Maclyn Arbuckle All Set

Maclyn Arbuckle has added new laurels to crown of successes. His big series of special features are in the hands of Producers Security Corporation which states there has been an insistent demand for them. The series consists of four famous stories by four of the best known writers in the world.

The first is "Squire Phin", by Holman Day. Then follow: "Welcome To Our City", by George V. Hobart; "Mr. Potter of Texas", by Archibald Clavering Gunter, and "Mr. Bingle", by George Barr McCutcheon. All four features are in five reels.

Luchese Will Open Baltimore Exchange

BALTIMORE, Md.—(Special)—Exhibitor circles here this week were thrilled with their own importance when the fact became generally known that owing to the abundance of business done in this territory, this city had developed into quite an exchange center. This importance was further intensified when news leaked out that Tony Luchese and Oscar Neufield, owners of the popular De Luxe Exchange of Philadelphia, together with well known business men, had formed a corporation which would maintain distributing offices in Baltimore and in Washington.

The new exchange, which has been incorporated as the Progress Pictures, Inc., will open on Monday, Oct. 2, and will occupy its own three-story building at 420 East Lexington street. Another exchange will later be established in Washington, according to information given this department.

Progress Pictures, Inc., is made up of M. Raymond Roberts, C. O. Langwell, a leading packer owning ten packing plants in various parts of the country; Clarence Boie, a leading Baltimore attorney, and Tony Luchese and Oscar Neufield, both of Philadelphia. The exchange, like the successful De Luxe Exchange of Philadelphia, will specialize in the distribution of pictures handled by Arrow Film Corporation.

Among the first productions that Progress Pictures, Inc., has contracted for are the following Arrow products: "Night Life in Hollywood," "Ten Nights in a Barroom," "The Innocent Cheat," 12 Eddie Lyons' comedies, four Neva Gerber features, four Peter B. Kynes, two Grace Davisons, two James Oliver Curwood's Northwesterns, "Jacequeline," the new special on which production started last week; "Chain Lightnig," "Western Justice," a new western; "Lone Horseman," and "The Deceiver."

At the opening Messrs. Luchese and Neufield will act as hosts to exhibitors in this territory. Plans now being made call for the presence in Baltimore of prominent film folk from New York, including Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, and others.

Northwest

Barney Rose, traveling representative for the Seattle Arrow Exchange, is batting 1,000 out in the territory these days. He is lining up splendid bookings for the fall product. Prints of "My Wandering Boy" are due at the Seattle office this week.

Ed. Davis, assistant manager of the Seattle branch for Arrow, has bought himself a nice car to celebrate Arrow Month. Mr. Davis covers considerable ground, making the suburban districts. He reports tbat proprietors of theatres in the Japanese district take very kindly to "Ten Nights in a Barroom."

L. K. Brin is starting an energetic billboard campaign. He will paper tbe city thoroughly with 24-sheets of Warner Borthers Screen Classics, very attractively gotten up to simulate a shelf of "Best sellers." The campaign will be launched at once.

Two bigh powered salesmen have been added to Mr. Brin's Kwality staff. They are Glen Moore, who will handle the State of Oregon, headquartering in Portland, and John Brotbers, who will cover Colorado and Utab, under the supervision of E. J. Lipson, branch manager in Denver. Mr. Brin handles the entire Warner Brothers output for the Northwest.

In accordance with the Al Lichtman policy, Al Rosenberg, manager of De Luxe Feature Film Co., Lichtman Exchange for Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana, has leased a twenty-four sheet billboard across Virginia street from his Seattle exchange. "Rich Men's Wives" now occupies the "centre of tbe screen" while a large hand points to headquarters of the Lichtman Exchange. After tbirty days the second release will be posted, and so forth. Al believes in letting 'em know he has the product.

Prints of two specials are expected early in October at the Seattle Educational Exchange. "Man vs. Beast" is the title of the two-reel special, and the first special reel "The Enchanted City." Tbe latter will for the first time depict scenic sets taken from famous paintings.

Jack Lannon, president of Lannon-Sheffield exchanges, sustained cuts and bruises about his arms in an automobile accident near Olympia, last week. The car was also damaged. Both are convalescent.

St. Louis

Official announcement was made here this week that Exhibitor Film Distributors Exchange has taken over the physical distribution of the pictures of Fine Arts Picture Corporation. P. J. Collins, manager for Fine Arts, will be in charge of the office with Johnny O'Brien and Ernie Ellenberg on the road.

Exhibitors Film Exchange is controlled by exhibitors in this territory, who pool their buying power for the purpose of taking over the distribution of independent pictures. This guarantees a proper exhibition showing of indepondent pictures in this territory.

Spryos Skouras, head of Skouras Brothers Enterprise in this city, is in New York. He is negotiating for a new theatre. This firm is handling the distribution of the Warner Brothers' output here.

Sam Werner claims to have dropped something like $18,000 in Federated Exchanges of America, Inc., but he is hopeful of winning that back within the next year.

Business at the theatres in this territory is increasing encouragingly well. The syndicate control of theatre situation is unchanged, but the demand for good independent pictures is still improving.

The only complaints hereabouts are exhaugemen with anything but quality stuff. There is so much good stuff in the market here that the junk dealers are about ready to call it "quits."

W. H. Leahy, representing Harry Houdini Enterprises, Inc., of New York, was in St. Louis last week in the interests of Houdini's new picture, "The Man from Beyond." The picture will in all probability be handled locally as a road show proposition.

John A. Walsh has succeeded Lew Bent at the local Enterprise Distributing office, Bent having gone over with Educational.

Pittsburgh

Work has been started on the new Seltzer Film Building, to be located at 1014 and 1016 Forbes street, Pittsburgh. The contract calls for the completiou of the building by January 1, 1923. Work started September 15.

"Bill" Finkel, who is now back at the Pittsburgh office of Harry Lande's chain of three exchanges, is now supervising sales and publicity at all three branches. He is making Pittsburgh his headquarters, however, making weekly trips to Cleveland and Cincinnati.

Bookings on Al Lichtman's latest picture, "Rich Men's Wives," continues to come in in heavy fashion, according to Joe Lefko, manager of the Lichtman-Federated Exchange here.

Fred Herrington, secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania, is authority for the statement that independent pictures are beiug given at least a 1,000 per cent. better showing in this section tban they got two years ago. And Fred ought to know.

If present plans materialize, C. C. Burr's Johnny Hines' feature, "Sure Fire Flint," will be given a premier showing at one of the Rowland-Clark houses here.

"Secrets of Paris," which Gold Seal Productions, Inc., has acquired for distributiou in tbis territory, is slated for a showing here the early part of next month. Joe Skirboll is authority for the statement tbat his exchange will exploit independent pictures as they never were exploited before in this territory.

Columbia Film Exchange will in all probability move into the new Seltzer Film Building. The progress of this enterprising exchange has been the talk of film folks in this territory. It has won a warm place in the hearts of exhibitors, who gave it a reliable, up-to-date and serviceable exchange with pictures that have been cleverly exploited.

H. C. Simeral Company, Inc., has started the exploitation campaign on the Jack Hoxie westerns, which Mr. Simeral recently purchased from Arrow Film Corporation.

The Warner Brothers ballyhoo automobile is slated to visit Pittsburgh the latter part of this month. Joe Skirboll is planning a rousing reception for the ballyhooers, who, according to reports received, are creating a whole lot of curiosity in Warner pictures.

Judging from dates, November will be an independents' month at the downtown first run houses, for among the pictures that are reported to be booked for first run showings are the following: "Rags to Riches," "Shadow," the next Al Lichtman special, "Sure Fire Flint," "Secrets of Paris," "The Double-O," and "More to Be Pitied Than Scorned."

Federated Film Exchange here has acquired the rights to the entire output of Russell Productions, Inc., of Chicago.

KENNETH HARLAN
Clever leading man, who has been signed by Ben Schulberg for Preferred Pictures.

Minneapolis

Fred Cubberly of the F. & R. Exchange announces the following pictures will be booked as road shows: "Main Street," "The Beautiful and Damned," "The Little Church Around the Corner," "A Dangerous Adventure," "Rich Men's Wives," "Ching, Ching Chinaman" (title changed to "Shadows"), "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," "Poor Men's Wives," "Wbat's Wrong With the Women?" "I Am the Law," "Ten Nights in a Barroom," "Rags to Riches," "Brass," "Little Heroes of the Street," "A Mansion of Aching Hearts," "Are You a Failure?" "The Girl Who Came Back," "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" "Isobel," "Kazan" and "Confession."

G. Ralph Branton, formerly of that enterprising regional journal, Amusements, who has joined Fred Cubberly, was the recipient of hundreds of letters and telegrams of congratulations this week from exhibitors and friends in the business. Branton will be a big asset to the F. & R. Exchange.

Bert L. Hatfield of Wisconsin Film Corporation and the First Film Company of Minneapolis has announced the acquisition of the local rights to the Producers' Security Corporation feature, "The Country Flapper," starring Dorothy Gish.

"Rags to Riches" is slated for a premier showing at Blue Mouse late this month.

Dallas, Texas

Southern States Film Company is specializing and laying stress on its western pictures. It is releasing the William Fairbanks, Neal Hart, Pete Morrison and J. B. Warner pictures.

Ben Y. Cammack of Southern States Film Company is in the market for big features and would like to hear from distributors of such features.

Admission prices in most of the small town houses have come down and the move seems to have been a good one, according to exhibitor returns filed at some of the independent offices here.

Abe Warner of Warner Brothers was in town last week, this being his last stop en route to the Coast, where he will remain.

R. D. Lewis Film Company has taken over the business and quarters of the Quality Film Company at 1810 Main street. The quarters will be enlarged and generally renovated.

Atlanta

Phil Goldstone visited this city last week and renewed old acquaintances hereabouts. Mr. Goldstoue is very well known in this territory, and he prolonged his stay several days. Mr. Goldstone came here to sell rights to his Richard Talmadge series and "Deserted at the Altar." He succeeded in selling the rights to these pictures to Enterprise Distributing Corporation. Mr. Goldstone is on his way to the Coast, but he will make every exchange centre while en route.

Arthur C. Bromberg on his return from New York to Atlanta made known that he had spent something like $70,000 on productions that he will distribute in the Southeast. These productions will be distributed through his Atlanta, Charlotte and New Orleans offices.

The new productions acquired by Mr. Bromberg while in New York include the following: "Ten Nights in a Barroom," "Night Life in Hollywood," "Lost in a Big City," four Peter B. Kynes, two Grace Davidsons, four Neva Gerbers, six William Fairbanks, six Jack Hoxies, "Chain Lightning" and others.

These productions, in addition to four James Oliver Curwood pictures, says Mr. Bromberg, will be exploited on an elahorate scale.

Mr. Bromberg will strain every effort to build a short subject department which he hopes will be second to none in the country. He already has purchased "The Graphic," a new screen magazine, the two-reel special, "Man Versus Beast," "The Enchanted City" and others.

Ned E. Depinet is making a tour of the cities wherein Consolidated Film Corporation maintains offices. He was here last week. He is looking forward to a big improvement in business.

John W. Mangham of Enterprise Distributing Corporation is back at his desk following a trip to the West.

"I Am the Law," the C. C. Burr-Edwin Carewe production, did such a remarkable business at the Strand Theatre here last summer, despite the intense heat that prevailed during the run, that the management of that house played a return date on the production last week and mopped up again. This production is the best seller ever handled by Enterprise Exchange here.

Kansas City

A. H. Blank has taken over the western Missouri distribution of the new Roy Stewart starriug vehicle, "The Sagebrush Trail."

Crescent Film Exchange here has announced that it is now prepared to talk business on the Warner Brothers' features, "Rags to Riches," "Little Heroes of the Street," "Main Street," "Brass," "A Dangerous Adventure," "The Beautiful and Damned," "Your Best Friend" and "The Little Church Around the Corner."

Abe Warner, while in Kansas City recently en route to the Coast, was the guest of Al Kahn of Crescent Exchange, and visited, together with the popular local exchangeman, the various exhibitors in this city. Mr. Warner explained the national advertising campaign that the firm has under way.

Mrs. Rose Wilson of Blake Theatre, Webh City, Mo., is a booster for the Crescent Exchange. Recently Mrs. Wilson was in need of a sure-fire box office bet and after looking over all that Film Row had to offer, finally hooked "The Heart of a Texan," with Neal Hart. The picture broke the house record, showing that Mrs. Wilson is quite a showwoman.

A. A. Fenro is a new salesmen who has joined the Standard Film Exchange of Kansas City. He is covering Missouri in a Ford selling William Fairbanks. Jack Hoxies, Franklyn Farnums and Pete Morrisons.

Lelia Redwing, an Indian clairvoyant, is being used in conjunction with a ballyhoo that Richards & Flynn Exchange is staging hereabouts.

With the advent of cooler weather business at the various theatres took a jump.

Standard Film Company has taken over the distribution rights to the William Fairbanks picture, "Hell's Border."

V. N. Steinberger is the new Enterprise representative in Kansas, handling "I Am the Law" and "Flesh and Blood," both of which are being exteusively shown in this territory.

The Warner pictures are in for a big boom here, for it is said that the Kansas City Post is about to start a series of articles written by well known business men. These articles have been inspired by the first Warner release, "Rags to Riches."

"Rags to Riches" will make its local bow at either the Doric or Liberty Theatre in Kansas City, according to information unearthed here by the local representative of the Independent Department of Moving Picture World.

New England

J. L. Roth, manager of the Federated Film Exchange of Boston, is a happy film man these days, for since the advent of the new season it has been a case of breaking one record after another with his exchange.

There is some talk heard in reliable circles that a new Progress Film Exchange will soon open its doors in New Haven, Conn. The exchange will be located in Meadow street, New Haven's film colony.

Herman Rifkins of Eastern Feature Film Corporation announces ten special productions, twelve Second National features, six assorted dramas, comedies and westerns, twenty-six educationals, scenic and travelogues and twenty-six two-reel westerns for release through his exchange this seasou.

Sam Grand's first three big specials are announced as being Equity's "What's Wrong With the Women?" C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's "More to Be Pitied Than Scorned," and North-Weber's "Notoriety," the Will Nigh special.

Harry Segal of Pioneer Exchange is telling all New England that this is the first birthday of that exchange. And he is celebrating it by moving into larger and more commodious quarters.

Pioneer Exchange will book the star of the Lee-Bradford special, "Determination," Gene Burnell, in conjunction with showings of that picture in the New England territory.

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation of New York, was a visitor to Film Row last week and met exhibitors as well as discussed business with several exchangemen. 'Tis rumored here that Doc's visit here had some connection with the establishment of the Progress Exchange here. It is rumored here that the firm name of Lightning Photoplays, Inc., will be changed to Progress Pictures Exchange.

J. S. Jossey, special representative of Arrow, is in Boston aiding in the reorganization of Lightning Photoplays, Inc.

Matt Riley of the Victory Theatre, Providence, R. I., did a sweeping business on "The Country Flapper" the Dorothy Gish picture, clever exploitation helping considerably.

Philadelphia

Lou Berman announces his releases for the coming season as follows: "Your Best Friend," September; "Rags to Riches," October; "A Dangerous Adventure," November; "The Beautiful and Damned," December; "Little Heroes of the Street," January; "Brass," February; "Main Street," March; "Little Church Around the Corner," April, and "Broadway After Dark," May.

Tony Luchese of De Luxe Film Exchange is boosting Arrow's "Night Life in Hollywood" aud C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's "More to Be Pitied Than Scorned," both of which have been booked by Stanley for showings over its circuit.

John F. Gill, formerly with R-C Pictures Exchange, Philadelphia, has opened the Imperial Exchange here. In his introductory announcement, he says that his motto will be "honesty, courtesy, efficiency and service." He is well known among exhibitors and with proper box office pictures should have no trouble making a success of his exchange, which is located at 1302 Vine street.

The Arcadia Theatre, Reading, Pa., will stage the premier showing of Ivan Abramson's "Mother Eternal," with Vivian Martin, next week. This picture is being handled by the Graphic Exchange.

Baby Ruth Sullivan, who plays the baby role in "Mother Eternal," will make personal appearances in conjunction with the showing of the picture in eastern Pennsylvania.

"Rich Men's Wives" opened at the Aldine Theatre here on Monday, Sept. 25. This is the first Al Lichtman production which is being distributed locally through Ben Amsterdam's Masterpiece Exchange. With a good break in weather the picture went big at the opening.

"What's Wrong With the Women?" served as a good criterion for independent pictures here, for last week it played day and date at two first run downtown theatres, the Palace and Arcadia, both Stauley houses.

Los Angeles

S. O. Picture Corporation, of which J. H. Goldberg is the manager, has started his campaign of exploitation on the Warner Brothers' product.

Supreme Film Company of California, Inc., has acquired the rights to the new C. C. Burr-Whitman Bennett special, "Secrets of Paris."

Howard W. Stebbins, manager of Supreme, has issued his annual announcement embodying his releases for the forthcoming year. The Supreme Exchauge now ranks among the best exchanges in the country.

Progress Pictures Exchange has closed a contract with Arrow Film Corporation whereby it will release virtually all of the Arrow features. Negotiations are now under way whereby Progress will handle "Night Life in Hollywood."

Harry D. Buckley, who took the initial print of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robiu Hood" to New York, is a well known independent exchangeman of Los Angeles with a host of friends among the exhibitors here.

Lessers' All-Star Features Exchange announces the following 1922-23 releases: Al Lichtman productions, "Flesh and Blood," with Lon Chaney, "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" "More to Be Pitied Than Scorned," "Yankee Doodle, Jr.," "The Sage Brush Trail," "The Unconquered Woman" and others.

The Federated short subject department announces the following pictures for 1922-23: Hall Room Boy Comedies, Monte Banks Comedies, Federated Thrill, Joe Rock Comedies, Sunrise Comedies, Federated Screen Review, "Out of the Inkwell," Burr Novelty Review, "Funny Face Doll Comedics," Sunrise Burrud Novelty Scenics, Irving Cummings two-reel Mounted Police stories, "Miracles of the Jungle," Adventures of Tarzan," "Thunderbolt Jack," and "Star Ranch," two-reel westerns.

Royal Robes

Women patrons especially will be interested in one of the costumes worn by Gladys Hulette in the Burr-Whitman Bennett production of Eugene Sue's famous novel which is being screened under the title "The Secrets of Paris." It consists of the robes which were worn by the Marchioness of Ely at the coronation of King Edward VII of England.

With Entire Country Sold, Warners Start Selling Public Campaign

With the entire series of the seven Warner Brothers productions sold solid throughout the country to first run theatre owners and prominent exchangemen, Harry M. Warner announced this week that a sweeping campaign has been inaugurated to sell these pictures direct to the public.

Mr. Warner's two-fold plan is to interest the motion picture public in the meritorious value of each picture, and to aid exhibitors booking the feature to derive the maximum box-office results. In order to drive home the entertaining phases of the pictures, one-quarter of a million dollars has been appropriated to be used in motion picture "fan" magazine advertising, according to Mr. Warner.

"Our efforts from now on will be centered in selling the entertainment values of our pictures direct-to-the-public," said Mr. Warner. "As has been announced our pictures have been purchased by the most prominent theatre owners and exchangemen in the country. To aid both these men and exhibitors who book our pictures, we have planned to acquaint the public with what I believe to be the greatest array of attractions that have ever been produced by an independent organization.

"In the past, producers and distributors have been content to sit back and wait for results after their pictures had been disposed of. They felt they had nothing further to do than to continue producing more pictures. They forgot the exhibitors and exchangemen that purchased their pictures, and the result was that their expectations and ballyhoos about smashing box-office returns were all knocked into a cocked pit.

"They failed to realize that the public must be sold in order for the exhibitors to get a fair return on their investment. They failed to realize that by aiding the exhibitors they would firmly entrench themselves in the estimation of theatre-owners. They were selfish and narrow-minded in that they neglected to see and to take advantage of the future possibilities of their other pictures.

"And when the time came for these producers and distributors to dispose of other productions, they found that their propositions were lukewarm—no one was willing, and as a matter of fact, is willing to do business with dead concerns. Inasmuch as we realize these things, inasmuch as our future and the future of theatre owners depends on money-making attractions, we are bending every cog in our publicity and advertising machinery to make known to the public the exceptionally meritorious pictures we have to offer.

"In this respect we will effectively put over two very vital things, namely, a firm foundation for our future product, and more than satisfied theatre owners. This goes both ways, for after all the public pays the toll and makes this wonderful industry of ours what it is today.

"Our campaign is not mere talk. It is an actual fact. And those pessimists who always read and take matters with a grain of salt will be firmly convinced when we show them what results have been obtained by selling our series of pictures direct to the public".

The series of seven pictures to be advertised include "Rags to Riches" and "Little Heroes of the Street", both featuring Wesley Barry; "The Beautiful and Damned", featuring Marie Prevost; "Brass", the Charles G. Norris novel also featuring Marie Prevost; "Main Street", the Sinclair Lewis novel; "A Dangerous Adventure", starring Grace Darmond, and "Little Church Around the Corner", written by Marion Russell.

Second National Starts On Its Second Year

With five pictures booking, two of them released in the past thirty days in pursuance of the plan to provide exhibitors with at least two new pictures each month in the current season, Second National Pictures Corporation this week enters upon the second year of its career as an institution devoted exclusively to the distribution of independent productions of the best types.

Through the summer months the three pictures released early in the year, according to officers of the corporation, were booked more extensively than had been expected under the conditions.

Starts Work on Karr Picture

LOS ANGELES — (Special) — After signing a contract with Franklyn E. Backer, president of East Coast Productions, to distribute his product in the State-right field, Bruce Mitchell departed for the West Coast. He has just sent word that work on the first of the series of two-reelers starring "Fatty" Karr has begun.

Franklyn E. Backer is also in receipt of several letters from West Coast exhibitors congratulating him on his and Mr. Mitchell's decision to star a "fat man comedian," the vacancy left by "Fatty" Arbuckle never having been filled.

Goldburg Buys Wm. Fairbanks

That there is always a demand for Western features has always been the contention of Arrow Film Corporation, and this belief, they point out, is fully proved in the rapidity in which the recently announced series of William Fairbanks productions have been secured by the independent exchanges throughout the country.

The latest organization to secure this splendid series of Western features, produced by Ben Wilson, is Big Feature Rights Corporation, who have secured the pictures for Kentucky and Tennessee.

Opens in Philly

PHILADELPHIA.—(Special)— "Rich Men's Wives," B. P. Schulberg's first release through the Al Lichtman Corporation, opened for a week's run at the Aldine, Philadelphia, on September 25. Ben Amsterdam, the Lichtman franchise holder in Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey has succeeded in landing this run in a city whose first-run situation is practically "sewed" up.

Great Activity

The Producers Security Corporation reported great activity in the State right field this week.

The Dorothy Gish special "The Country Flapper" was sold as follows:

Sam Zierler of Commonwealth Films, Greater New York and Northern New Jersey rights; Nu Art Films, Buffalo, Northern New York; Wisconsin Film Corporation of Milwaukee, Wisconsin; First Film Company of Minneapolis, Minnesota, North and South Dakota; Pearce Films of New Orleans, Louisiana and Mississippi; Eastern Feature Film Company Distributing Company, New England; Joseph Merrick, Southern California and Arizona, from his Los Angeles office, and Northern California and Nevada from his San Francisco office.

James Morrison in "Only a Shop Girl"

Expressions of congratulation have been pouring into the offices of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation this week since the announcement of the names of players assembled for the cast of "Only a Shopgirl," second of the "Six Box Office Winners" series.

With only one or two exceptions every territorial buyer of "More to Be Pitied" and the other five pictures on the series has wired, telephoned or written Jack Cohn, at the New York distribution offices, or Harry Cohn, at the West Coast production center, commenting on the extraordinary strength of the cast, and the consensus of opinion is that it is not only the biggest cast ever assembled for an independent picture, but unusual for any feature production.

In addition to this, since the cast announced, including as it does, Mae Busch, Estelle Taylor, Wallace Beery, Tully Marshall, Clair Dubrey, Willard Louis, and Josephine Adair represents absolute territorial holder and exhibitor choice, as selected from a list of possibilities for the case lined up and submitted to them by the producers, there is unusual enthusiasm felt by everyone concerned. This is from actual knowledge beforehand of what these players can bring to the box-offices.

James Morrison, popular young leading man, well-known for his work in "The Little Minister," "Dangerous Age" and "Shattered Idols," and William Scott, who has played in many feature productions, among them Goldwyn's "A Voice in the Dark," have been added to the cast since the initial announcement, making it even bigger and stronger than before.

Independent Corporation, Court News

St. Louis—Incorporation papers of the Mid West Prod. Co. will probably be filed at Jefferson City this week. It will be capitalized at $150,000. St. Louis financiers have agreed to put up the money. The company is making a serial "The Eyes of Mystery" at Creve Coeur lake.

Los Angeles—The Exclusive Features, Inc., which asserts it was given the exclusive agency for the sale and distribution of pictures and negatives by the Selig Polyscope Company, Inc., has filed suit against the latter asking for an injunction and an accounting.

New York—Suit has been filed in the Supreme Court by Morante & Fowler against the Clark Cornelius Corp. for $9,248 on a bill of exchange issued May 24, 1922.

Albany—Amalgamated Exch. of America, Manhattan. Capital, $200,000. Incorporators, C. Kranz, G. M. Davidson, H. Grossman. Attorney, H. & M. Frank, Manhattan.

Dover, Del.—Maytan Pictures. Capital, $150,000. Incorporators, L. L. Mayer, Bklyn., A. Guttormson, F. F. Lorne, J. Transet, J. Disroste, Manhattan. Attorney, Registrar & Transfer Co.

Spokane "September" Drive Made Holiday Through Combination of All the Houses

SPOKANE, with its usual hustle, put the September idea over in the form of a concerted drive. All of the houses in town co-operated in a "Go to theatre" week, opening on Saturday, August 26, with a parade in which every house in town co-operated. The parade was organized by the exchange men and put over in conjunction with the theatres and the business societies, such as Kiwanis, Rotary, Lions and the Chamber of Commerce Club, each of which made a speaker from the theatres the chief oratorical guest for the luncheon the week preceding the drive.

Local papers were hooked to the idea, some of them coming in with contests, and the parade was viewed by thousands in spite of the fact that an unusually hot day brought a thunderstorm which wet down the floats and their occupants. The parade went right through the storm and the spirit shown was not without its moral effect.

Among Those Present

The committee in charge consisted of Ray A. Grombacher and James E. Vesey, of the Liberty; E. Clark Walker, Pantages; Dr. H. S. Clemmer and Hugo C. Lambach, Pantages; George Terhune, Rex; C. E. Stillwell, Casino; E. C. Schaffer, Class A; Charles Packeritz, Empress; O. W. Newton, Rialto, Hillyard and Major Laird and J. L. Johnston of First National. Johnston was in general charge of the event.

The attractions for the week, the number of days played being indicated in parentheses, were: Liberty, "Crossroads of New York" (4), "The Song of Life" (3); Clemmer, "If You Believe It, It's So" (4), "Rose o' the Sea" (3); Pantages, "The Idle Class" (7); Castle, "The Sea Lion" (7); Class A, "Smilin' Through" (second week); Rex, "Last of the Mohicans" (3), "The Idol Dancer" (4); Lyric, "Bar Nothing," "Sand," "A Splendid Hazard," "Double Speed," "While New York Sleeps," "Trust Your Wife," and "The Big Town Round-Up" (daily change); Majestic, "Sky High" (3), "Unseen Forces" (1), "Not Guilty" (1), "Scrambled Wives" (1), "Dangerous Business" (1), and "Moran of the Lady Letty" (1); Empress, "Heart of the North" (1), "Lessons in Love" (2), "Old Dad" (2), "Yes or No" (2), and Auditorium, "School Days" (7).

Putting It Over

An airplane used by the Casino flew over the city distributing 20,000 general programs, while each house put out at least 5,000 individual announcements, these being used by the stores as package inserts. Slides were used in all houses for two weeks in advance, and all stores used a number of window cards.

A ballyhoo band was sent around town on a truck at noon each day of the special week and the "Chronicle" was tied to an impersonation contest, fifty dollars from the general fund being offered as prizes, and the First National gave an independent $50 for the best floats, to the same paper.

Two three-page hook-ups were run in the "Press," and the "Spokesman-Review" gave ample space on the general principle that it paid to help advertisers as liberal as are the theatres. Harry Eagles, of Paramount exploitation; Mrs. John T. Little, a society matron, and W. E. McMillen, of the Universal Exchange, were the judges.

Winning the Laurels

Dr. Clemmer took first prize with a float on which was seated a prize beauty being shot by a girl cameraman standing on a mountain top at the other end of the platform. The Rialto, Hillyard, took second with a canoe of paper roses paddled by a crew of six little girls, and the Rex got third place for an "Idol Dancer" float.

Grombacher commandeered twenty-two automobiles to carry the impersonators, and calling attention to the Liberty, and the Casino had a huge "Monte Cristo" float, and Pathe, Hodkinson, Universal and the Alexander Laboratories also contributed floats, and so did all of the participating theatres, the Rotary and the Ad Club.

To help along the aviator dived into the river to escape landing in a crowd when hail stopped his engine, and after dodging a broken neck narrowly escaped drowning.

It was a lot of trouble, but it gave Spokane business a boost that will last well into the season. It is the best September stunt yet to be reported, and Johnston deserves credit for his adroit handling of the affair.

Business is largely what you make it. It is as much the reflection of the public mind as it is a mirror of economic conditions. Talk and act as though good times were here and you'll see good times. Hang crepe and you will have ample cause for mourning. Cheer up and help make good business better.

Ain't It Awful?

A few weeks ago we got hold of a nice display for "Nanook of the North." As there was no town mentioned, we sent it back to Pathe for identification.

They returned word that the house was the Liberty Theatre, Spokane.

Meanwhile another paper had placed the Liberty in Los Angeles.

We mentioned the fact in the caption, forgetting that a cross-eyed man never makes a good oculist.

Then Frank L. Browne, of the Liberty Theatre, Long Beach, Calif., rises to ask:

"Did you pull a boner, or didn't you think Long Beach was among those present?"

It was a boner. The very pretty display was from Long Beach and not from Los Angeles or Spokane.

The Herald was right. They used the proper caption.

FIRST NATIONAL'S FLOAT IN THE SPOKANE PARADE

John L. Johnston, of First National exploitation, was the director general of the big "September" demonstration, and naturally he saw to it that his company put up a good turnout even though this fine display did not win a prize.

Police Reserves to Handle Stunt Crowd

It was necessary to clear a section of Broadway with mounted police reserves when the Fox press agents announced that "Monte Cristo" would give away real money to advertise the performance of the play at the Forty-fourth Street theatre. The "money" was in the form of tokens which, when countersigned by an impersonator of the hero, could be cashed at the box office.

These tokens were placed around the street in front of the theatre and long before the announced hour the street was so crowded that vehicular traffic had to be diverted and the police had difficulty in keeping pedestrian lanes open.

The stunt brought at least a quarter of a column in every New York paper. This is an excellent record for New York.

You will find the stunt described on Page 217 of Picture Theatre Advertising.

Reward Circular

A. G. Stolte, of the Des Moines Theatre, offered $1,000 reward for the apprehension of the pearl smugglers sailing with "Hurricane's Gal" on the Tahiti Belle, further information to be had from the Des Moines Theatre. It's not a new idea, but it was the first time Stolte had used it and it worked well for him.

Jazzed Paramountown

A. L. Snell, of the Imperial theatre, Gadsden, Ala., knows a good thing when he sees it, and he knew that the Paramountown short reel would help all of the Paramount pictures he would play through the season, so he worked harder on this short subject than he generally does for a feature.

He told everyone he knew of the coming of the subject and he persuaded Mrs. Snell to tell all of her women friends, and Master Snell told all the kids. This was all done in the three weeks prior to the showing.

For the run he dressed his boy in women's clothes and had him sketch the Paramount stars shown in the reel, working on a trestle above the lobby. When a picture was drawn the name of the star would be written in backward. The likenesses were so good that most of the stars were recognized before they were labeled.

He was careful not to have the boy work too long at one time, for fear the crowd would be held outside instead of going into the house, so after each picture the youngster came off his perch and let the crowd disperse, then climbed back to collect a new crowd.

The cash outlay was only $2, but there was an immediate return in sold tickets and a drive on Paramounts that will last well into the season.

A First National Release

TWO MEN AND A GOAT FOR "HURRICANE'S GAL"

J. K. Johnson, of the Rialto Theatre, Omaha, persuaded two of the American Legion Boys to make up as the Chinaman and Hurricane's Gal in the play of that name, as already recorded. This shows how the stunt looked to the man who happened to be on the streets.

Home Brewed Devils

Oscar White, of the Rex theatre, Sumter, S. C., seldom gets a picture pre-release, but he did get "While Satan Sleeps" so far ahead that there was no paper available for the lobby. To correct this lack he had four devil's heads painted, two for the one sheet frames and two larger ones for cutout stands, and he did not have to worry about the paper.

The exchange loaned him the picture for an advance showing to ministers and betterment organizations and their personal endorsements were so strong than he took extra advertising space to get them all in the paper.

The entire campaign cost him only an additional $10.60 and the business was sixty per cent. above the average. He slightly anticipated the September campaign, but he got the same results, and got it early.

Crossroads Angles

The man who wanted a job "with a uniform" was used by the Cozy Theatre, Topaka, Kans., for "The Crossroads of New York." They made him a teaser ballyhoo man, and he carried a telescope to help him look for the job. When the play opened, he went around with a sign telling that he had the job and people could find out how he got it by visiting the Cozy.

Several dozen crossroad signs were made up of one inch stuff with compo board arms and scattered through the residential districts, and a store got up a display of styles "direct from the 'Crossroads of New York.'"

It all had a helpful effect upon the business.

A First National Release

AN UNUSUALLY ELABORATE DISPLAY ON "THE SILENT CALL"

This was planned by A. R. Lynch, of the Lyric Theatre, Jackson, Tenn. The entire lobby is masked in with greenery and the display is carried out to the sidewalk. The cage on the right contains a police dog with the warning that it is dangerous to pet the animal.

Built Up on Jackie

Most managers have used the barrel or garbage can for Jackie Coogan in "Trouble," but they have used just one, or at the best, one of each.

A. R. Lynch, of the Southern Enterprises, built the idea up to its proper dimensions by dressing his lobby with a pile of barrels and boxes with the familiar cutout. It gave many times the effect and sold Jackie to a larger percentage of possible patrons—and you can sell almost all of your patrons if you advertise young Mr. Coogan properly.

Caught the Cops

A stunt worked by A. L. Snell, of the Imperial theatre, Gadsden, Ala., for "I Am the Law" will also serve for "In the Name of the Law" in any fairly small place.

He photographed the entire police force in individual pictures and pasted these to cards with "Who am I?" at the top and "I Am the Law". These cards were placed in shop windows and attracted considerable attention until the rest of the advertising came along.

A First National Release

THE SORT OF HATS THEY WEAR AT THE CROSSROADS

Ruth Wright, of the Cozy Theatre, Topeka, persuaded a milliner to make a display of the last word in fall hats with a background of tall buildings. The street does not look like New York, but the window looks unlike any other in town and it SOLD. That's the idea.

If you cannot get the use of a camera, you can at least show slides of the leaders, and the stunt will put the picture over for excess receipts.

Painted a Big City for a Display of Hats

New York and the fashions are firmly linked together in the feminine mind. The manager of the Cozy theatre, Topeka, is a woman, Ruth Wright, and she was quick to see the value of the connection.

She persuaded a leading millinery concern to make a display of the very latest styles in hats and contributed a backing supposed to be New York to carry out the idea of "The Crossroads of New York."

The painting is not going to be framed for preservation, and, to say the least, it is crude, but the big point is this: During the showing it was the most prominent window in the entire city, and it sold both hats and theatre tickets.

The moral is that it does not pay to hang back because you cannot equal the work of the best scenic artists, but to go ahead and do the best you can. If it makes money for you it's good, no matter how poor it may be, and this simple window stunt did more to sell this First National attraction than would a half page in the newspapers.

The Lieber Raffles Picked Good Winner

Ralph Lieber, of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, put on a Raffles for Guy Bates Post in "The Masquerader," pinning it to one of the local papers. The reward for the discovery of the masquerader was at first $50 but was advanced day by day until it reached $100 when the identification was made by the wife of a service man whose husband had just been discharged from one of the military hospitals.

This not only gave a blow-off story of unusual interest, but was good for a second day human interest story as well, which made a ten-day run for a hundred-dollar stunt which not only gave the newspaper a good circulation feature but which provided the house with columns of free advertising.

The stunt was worked along the familiar lines, save that in all the stories care was taken to explain that the story of "The Masquerader" was not that of a Raffles, which lugged the Circle prominently into all of the newspaper work.

Prizes for Doubles Helped 'Masquerader'

When Guy Bates Post in "The Masquerader" appeared at the Stillman theatre, Cleveland, the manager pulled a clever stunt to tie up to the title and the idea of the story.

All persons who imagined that they looked like some prominent man were invited to send their photographs to the Contest Manager without naming the person they were supposed to suggest. If the manager recognized the picture as looking like that of some well known person, the entrant was given a pair of tickets for the performance.

Some really striking likenesses were turned up and these were made the basis of some newspaper stories which pulled about 100 inches of space; about five columns.

To help out, the Press ran a dog story to the effect that a double for Tris Speaker got out on the ball field and ordered the men around before the impersonation was discovered. This was a simple matter with the newspaper back of the idea, and it made good reading.

A Big Diana Contest Helped Cosmopolitan

Howard Price Kingsmore has adapted the beauty contest to "The Young Diana" in the Kansas City territory in which he is Paramounteer.

When he worked it for the Electric theatre, Joplin, Mo., he interested both local papers in the voting contest. The leaders were given tryouts before a motion camera for the three nights prior to the showing of the Cosmopolitan picture, three of them registering a complete set of emotions each of the three nights, and the entire set of nine were run off as an added attraction to the showing of the Marion Davies feature.

Gone Above

John D. Howard, Paramounteer in Detroit, has been brought into the New York office as assistant to Harold B. Franklin, manager of theatres.

Leon J. Bamberger, has been called in from Toronto to assist Claud Saunders, vice Walter Lindlar.

Norman Dixon, of Cincinnati, has been made manager of the Empire theatre, New Bedford, which is in the nature of a promotion, though we don't believe we should like to be promoted to New Bedford, even from Cincinnati.

Oscar Kantner replaces Howard and Harry Swift goes into Cincinnati in place of Dixon. Both are playing return dates with the Paramount exploitation.

A First National Release

JACKIE MUST OWN MORE SUITS THAN A STOCK ACTOR

This is the 27,749th "original" suit to be used for advertising purposes. This time it bobs up in Marshalltown, Ia., where it made good business for the Strand Theatre with "Trouble." It was not Trouble at all to make them come in once they saw the suit. Note the cutout.

Slowed the Run on Appeal from Patron

Major I. C. Holloway, of the Rialto theatre, Columbus, Ga., made an unusually thorough campaign on Orphans of the Storm, and played the attraction to unusual business.

For his lobby he copied one of the lattice lobbies shown in these pages early in the Summer and, as it was his first lattice, it helped more than a little. He did a lot of work on the screen during the run of Foolish Wives, to take advantage of the crowds, and gave a special showing to a few persons who could help the run of the film through word-of-mouth advertising.

The original schedule called for the picture to run in two hours, but three women patrons voiced complaints at the speed, and he cut down the speed and advised them by special delivery that this had been done.

Called a Cop

For "I Am the Law," A. C. Crute, of the Lyric theatre, Huntsville, Ala., used a fake policeman with the title of the picture lettered on his back. This man paraded the streets and then went out to the ball game in the afternoon.

A fake dispute was staged between the umpire and a player on the home team, and just as blows seemed imminent the cop came galloping across the field and stopped the supposed scrap. Then he turned his back to the stands and the sold spectators howled their delight. Thereafter any real dispute between player and the arbiter resulted in cries of "Bring on the Law," and the crowd went home thoroughly sold on the title.

Mr. Crute used a number of more familiar stunts, but this has real novelty.

Crowned Box Office for His Dictator

J. M. Edgar Hart, of the Palace theatre, El Paso, played up the military angle of "The Dictator" with an unusually good lobby even for him.

From General Howze, Commandant of Fort Bliss, he obtained a collection of relics of various Mexican flurries and these were displayed around the lobby, each of the stacked rifles being of a different model.

For side pieces cutouts were worked into painted profiles and the lamp post on the left and the tower on the right were both illuminated. There were stands of arms on the side walls, which do not show in the cut, and the top of the box office was an immense crown, with lights for jewels.

The display of arms was a courtesy in acknowledgment of the aid the Texas hustler gives the recruiting service. The post officials at Fort Bliss appreciate the assistance Hart gives them and several times they have aided him in his exploitation stunts, as, for example, the radio perambulator he used last June.

Let George Do It

When he played "Hail the Woman", W. A. Byers, of the Liberty theatre, Greenwood, S. C., took a leaf from other towns and gave an advance showing to prominent women.

Then he went over and cut his newspaper advertising down, yet he did a forty percent increase on the smaller advertising cost, for the women persuaded the editor to run their signed statements.

A First National Release

ROCKING THE BOAT SOLD BUSTER KEATON IN ASTORIA

This is one of the animated stunts from Thomas C. Gridley, the operator-exploiteer of S. Danz's Liberty Theatre, Astoria, Ore. Two profile waves, a cutout boat, a three-sheet cutout and a motor to rock the boat are the chief ingredients.

Hit the Censors

When A. C. Cowles, of the Rex theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., opened his campaign for "Hail the Woman," he made the personal endorsement his chief angle, calling attention to the fact that this was the first personally endorsed picture since "The Old Nest." This was backed up by the letter of the Atlanta Committee on Better Pictures, referred to last Spring.

Then fifty double passes were sent as many influential women, the passes being good only for the opening day, and their personal advertising was of no little value.

The net result was not only extra business, but the local papers played it up strong and one of them took a whole-hearted slam at the censor advocates with this picture as the text of the editorial.

Plain Lies

A. B. Hill, of the Arcade theatre, Jacksonville, put over "If You Believe It, It's So," by setting into his lobby a stand of twenty cards, each about three feet high and each making some impossible statement, ending with the play title. One read "Ex-Kaiser elected head of the American Legion" and another told that John D. Rockefeller pawned his watch to get the price of a gallon of gasoline. These statements helped plant the title idea, and so put up a good business.

Another stunt was printing a poem on small window cards and putting them out. The poem was new and clever, and a lot of people came to the theatre to ask for a copy. You can find your own poem or write Mr. Hill, who probably has a few to spare. The big point is to get it out sufficiently far in advance to let it sink in.

Talked to Kiwanis

Max Doolittle was a guest at the Kiwanis Club luncheon at Sioux Falls lately and addressed the members on the new exchange Paramount about to open in that centre, telling of the number of persons to be employed and intimating that Paramount's move would also bring to the town exchanges for other brands of film, for which Paramount also should receive the credit.

Getting all this before a representative body of business men is real exploitation.

A Paramount Picture

HOW J. M. EDGAR HART WENT GUNNING FOR BUSINESS

Through the courtesy of the Commandant, Gen. Howze, of Fort Bliss, the lobby of the Palace Theatre, El Paso, was converted into an arsenal for this Wallace Reid production. Note the crown over the box office with electrically lighted jewels in the rim.

BEFORE AND AFTER A PARAMOUNT EXPLOITEER WORKED ON THE PARK THEATRE LOBBY

It cost just five dollars to make over the front of the Park Theatre, Branford, Conn., and it came back on the run of the first attraction played. Russell Moon, of the Saunders staff, was the magician who worked the change and who proved that he knows that a good exploiteer does more than merely advertise his own pictures. He has made a permanent improvement in the house.

Paramount Exploiter Creates a New Lobby

John P. Dibble, of the Park theatre, Branford, Conn., was a picture showman in the days when he had to travel around to find enough business and film was run through the machine into a gunnysack when it did not run all over the place.

Then he settled down and opened the Park theatre, but he did not read this department and he did not keep his house abreast of the times. Lately he experienced a change of idea, he booked in a Paramount service and called in Russell Moon, one of the Paramounteers, to help him put over "Don't Tell Everything."

Moon found a house with signs written in crayon on wrapping paper, with torn and ragged posters and a rather dingy front. He told Mr. Dibble that for about five dollars he could improve the lobby, and he got the five.

Most of it he spent for white paint and the rest for black, for two sections of iron grating which serve to close the house, were left standing during show times and were red with rust. He painted these black and the rest of the lobby white, doing the job himself.

From back stage he rustled up some old frames, painted these and put them in place, doing away with the hand-made signs and getting the effect shown on the right.

It made such a hit with the patrons that it encouraged Mr. Dibble to charge half a dollar for "The Sheik," his second Paramount, and he got it to capacity.

Five dollars made a new house of the old and brought business that never could have been won through the old methods. Mr. Dibble is now a convert to the new mode.

Not Very Far

It cost only two dollars to sell "The Crimson Challenge" to the patrons of the Odeon theatre, Savannah. Part of this was spent to drape the marquise and box office in bunting of the proper color. The rest was put into a pointing fist reading "To Death Valley," the place of "The Crimson Challenge—1/100 mile." The finger pointed directly to the box office and fairly pushed them in. The count-up showed a twenty per cent. advance.

Eddie Collins Has a New Lobby Frame

Eddie Collins, of the Rialto Theatre, Dennison, Texas, has to be careful of his boss' pennies if he wants to show a profit, and Eddie never was a drunken-sailor on exploitation ideas. He wants something for what he invests.

That is how it happened that Eddie was moved to invent a new snow lobby when he played "I Am the Law." He blew himself to five dollars' worth of compo board and lumber and made a circular frame with a jagged inside edge large enough to take in a three sheet. This he painted white and sprinkled with fake snow, setting the six sheet back of it, and he had a snow lobby with plenty of room on either side. It is an attention-getting frame, and he can repaint it and use it for a number of other titles before it finally is cut up into something else.

Make one up and put some lights in back to illuminate the sheet you use behind it. Do that and you'll want to hand Eddie a cigar, for he has hit something both good and inexpensive.

HOW THE LOBBY ON THE LEFT WAS DONE OVER TO THE ZULU GLADE TO ACCENT THE OPENING

The lobby of the Rex Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., is narrow and deep. A. C. Cowles put water color signs on the oil painted walls for the coming of "The Dictator" and then, the night before the opening, he added the thatched box office and the palm lined vista to get a tropical effect at a purely nominal cost. The palms are interspersed with bamboo. Sand was put down on the floor to complete the illusion and it ran business up forty per cent.

Lem Stewart's Word

Several new words have been offered to Lem Stewart as descriptive of the repellant advertisement. Only one duplication is found in "dud," which is offered by Leon J. Bamberger, Claud Saunders' assistant, J. W. Sayre, and George E. Drew, of Seattle, each of whom offer an alternative word.

Mr. Drew's alternative word sounded like the winning bet until Max Rosenfield, the Golem man, told us what it meant in Yiddish. Then he was fired out of the contest.

J. W. Sayre, Seattle publicity man for Jensen and Von Herberg, offers "dudtractor," a combination of "dud" and "detractor." It has its good points.

Bamberger's second word is "miscarriage," which is simply applying an existing word to a new meaning.

J. M. Edgar Hart, of the Palace Theatre, El Paso, advances "repellant," which like the above is not a new word but a new application.

The real word has not yet been developed. What's the matter with you chaps? We want a coined word; not an adaptation like "dud."

THIS FLASHY LOBBY WON AN EIGHTY PER CENT. INCREASE

Charles H. Amos worked it for the Strand Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., getting his inspiration from the lithographs which he used to decorate the design. It cost only $25, and as the material can be used repeatedly the real cost is smaller.

Eddie's Visitor

Miss Jean Grace Hyman is making a visit at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward L. Hyman, arriving September 18.

That's why Eddie is wearing the smile that won't come off. Eddie was hoping that the arrival would be a boy, so he could train him as his successor as manager of the Mark-Strand, Brooklyn, but he insists that she is the finest youngster ever born in Brooklyn. That's one Hyman production other exhibitors cannot copy.

Invite Grandma

All over the South the matinee for Grandmothers is cleaning up all the available coin for "Grandma's Boy."

Hook it to your newspaper. Let the suggestion appear to come from them that the mothers had their turn on "The Old Nest" or "Over the Hill," and that now it seems to be coming to Grandma. Come right back with a hearty endorsement and promise to see the paper's idea get over. Let the publisher print a coupon and take the credit, contenting yourself with the real money and the publicity you can get from the stunt.

Whatever else you do for the Lloyd comedy, use this, and start it early enough to get all the talk you can.

A Scenario Too

Since Louisville devised the local movie contest to advertise "The Crossroads of New York", the stunt has been worked in a number of places, always with good results.

The latest refinement comes from W. M. Smith, of Tulsa, Okla.

Smith knows there are fifty persons who think they can write plays to each one who wants to act in them, so when he had the First National attraction at his Rialto theatre he advertised for a prize script, making the local paper the arbiter. That more than doubles the value of the stunt.

Did It Anyway

When all of the Schenectady papers refused to fall for the stunt of giving away a collie puppy to advertise "Sonny", William Shirley, of the Strand theatre, bought a puppy and paid for the space to put the idea over.

It attracted so much attention that the chances are the Schenectady editors will not be found asleep at the switch next time Shirley has an idea. Next a baby, a collie puppy is about as cute as they come, and the exploitation possibilities are wonderful.

HERE IS A HOME-MADE TWENTY-FOUR SHEET BETTER THAN THE GOLDWYN PAPER

The paper on the right is hand painted by D. C. Brown, of the Griffin Theatre, Owen Sound. He wanted a second 24 for his display, but did not want to repeat the lithograph, so he pasted up white paper and had his artist work in the road map idea as suggested for the lobby in the plan book. He used bright colors and got an effect that brought people to a dead stop while they puzzled over the design. It's good.

Kisses from Bebe

Max Doolittle, the Paramounteer out of Milwaukee, got up some cards for the Lyric theatre, Madison, S. D., for "Nice People", which pulled no end of business from a fair crowd.

Ordinary candy kisses were stapled to a card headed, "A kiss from Bebe Daniels, one of the stars of 'Nice People'" and adding the information that it was Paramount Week. The cards were distributed by a girl in a red coat and a picture hat with a black mask added to give a mysterious touch to the costume. An ordinary Hotchkiss stapler was used to tack the kisses to the cards.

Using Jay's Stuff

Jay Emanuel will have to look to his laurels. George Schade, of Sandusky, has found out what Jay discovered long ago, and he is as much sold on the idea of novelties as is the man who runs the Bargain Basement for the Metro exchange in Philadelphia.

Lately Schade had a drive on jumping frogs for "The Seventh Day", and now he has been caught using shimmy dolls for "The Half Breed". Just what the shimmy doll has to do with the First National release is not apparent, but the dolls, which cost less than ten dollars a thousand, were a profitable investment according to Mr. Schade.

Novel Fashion Film Told of "The Storm"

Making a special film fashion show for "The Storm" was only a part of the campaign of George E. Bradley, Universal exploiteer, for the Columbia Theatre, Seattle. Bradley not only put over a novel idea, but he worked it to draw out every ounce of exploitation push.

First of all Bradley sold one of the department stores on the idea of a film fashion show to be run on a miniature screen in a window of the store. It was to use the store products and the store name. That was Class A, but Bradley wanted to get it Class AAA, so he wrote a continuity in which Mannette, heroine of the picture, was supposed to come to Seattle to buy her wedding finery.

A local prize beauty was engaged for the part of Manette and was shown arriving in Seattle in boots and parka, entering the store and then inside trying on everything from bathing suits to evening dresses, with some real clothes in between.

Enough outside stuff was written in to get a good ballyhoo, and the inside stuff was taken in the window of a local florist, the department store having no space large enough.

From seven o'clock until well after midnight half of Seattle fought to get up to the plate glass window, and when the model came out in a one-piece bathing suit the reserves were needed to club the baldheads home.

Later on the same crowd—plus—piled up in front of the department store to see the completed picture, and when it was all over the Columbia had a complete set of records, all brand new.

Bradley admits that he is good.

Makes Two Killings With One Exploit

Remember the good old days when press books used to tell you: "Get an old stage coach and——"?

Fred V. Greene, who is exploitation chief for Universal, remembered too, so instead of saying "Get one," he advised a Brooklyn theatre that there was one over in New Jersey which they could use to advertise "In the Days of Buffalo Bill." Now Brooklyn and New Jersey are on opposite sides of New York, and it is not in Fred Greene's makeup to sneak a bus through the big town. He bannered it with "Ask your local theatre manager when he will play 'In the Days of Buffalo Bill,'" put an Indian and a couple of cowboys aboard, laid out a route that would give the fullest publicity and got so much attention that a policeman asked for their parade permit. He let them go when they explained they were merely delivering the prairie hack to Brooklyn, and the delay served to permit a couple more thousand persons to see what it was all about.

Then they went over to the Parthenon Theatre, Brooklyn, and helped sell the first episode.

Paid Fifty Boys; Got One Hundred

When M. F. Estes, of the Beacham Theatre, Orlando, Fla., decided to put over "Grandma's Boy" with a ballyhoo, he advertised for fifty boys who might want to see the picture free for a little work.

About a hundred boys turned up. Mr. Estes gave fifty of them Harold Lloyd spectacles and banners reading, "We are on our way, etc.," and told them to parade the town until show time.

Not to be cheated out of the fun, the other boys fell in behind and acted as honorary escort to the paid fifty, and by the time they got back to the theatre the ranks had been swelled to a hundred and fifty. The lobby was blanked in with compo board, and on this were cutouts and a picket fence design, while two six-sheet cutouts were used at the sides.

The total cost was $19.60 and the excess receipts were above $200.

He located it in Jersey and sent it over to Brooklyn, ballyhooing most of New York en route for "In the Days of Buffalo Bill," the Universal serial. You read a lot about "Get a stage coach," but Greene says, "We'll get you one." Lots better.

Doubled Business on Grandma Matinee

E. C. Kingman, of the Rialto Theatre, Macon, Ga., just doubled his ordinary business on "Grandma's Boy" through a single stunt.

He knew that if the picture were seen, it would be his own best advertisement, so he stressed a free matinee for grandmothers just before the regular matinee showing. Kiddies could come, if they paid, but they had to come with their grandmothers, or wait over. He also had a nine ad hook-up page with ten tickets to each merchant to present to grandmothers.

There was a crowded house, about one-third grandmothers and two-thirds youngsters, and by eight o'clock that evening Mr. Kingman changed the S. R. O. sign to "Try and Do It."

The stunt brought him yards of newspaper publicity, gave him something to talk about on the screen, and a word-of-mouth advertising that was worth all the rest put together, for the best advertisement for the Lloyd comedy is a person who has seen the picture.

GETTING A UNIVERSAL TITLE AROUND THE TOWN

Fred V. Green, Universal exploit head, devised this scheme for "Human Hearts," at the Strand Theatre, Far Rockaway. The boys rolled the hoops all over the place, including the crowded bathing beach and the boardwalk.

Free Mat Service for Contest Idea

Because of the success in several cities of an identification contest on First National stars with masks painted across the eyes, the First National publicity department has prepared a set of mats which will provide the smaller towns with the cuts at small cost. Most of the small town newspapers do not have casting boxes, but they can be sent to the nearest city for casting and will still cost but a fraction of the engraver's charges.

The idea of the contest is to award prizes for the best identification of the stars, the pictures being run as a whole, in series, or to work in with a commercial hook-up as the fancy of the exhibitor may dictate.

An identification of Paramount stars sold several million tickets last year. The addition of the masks will make this contest still more interesting, though we will bet a cigar against a cigarette stub that no one experiences any difficulty in identifying Jackie Coogan.

Doubles for Post

When Guy Bates Post visited San Francisco, in the interest of "The Masquerader" at the Tivoli, he gave less than twenty-four hours' notice, and the press agent had to do some quick thinking. After a brief pause the agent rushed out and inserted an advertisement in all of the morning papers offering "attractive compensation" to the man who looked most like the star, to be decided by photographs presented at the theatre that morning.

Meanwhile the newspapers carried an announcement that he was stopping at a certain hotel, so one crowd rushed over to the hotel to see what chance they stood, and a larger one stormed the theatre, with the result that even over in Oakland they knew all about "The Masquerader."

For Duplicators

Lem Stewart illustrates the tips he sends Southern Enterprises managers. He uses a gelatine duplicator and finds that by drawing the pictures with an indelible pencil he can get a fine result, and it helps a lot to get attention. Lem believes in doing everything he can to get the most attention, even where the managers are practically certain to read the dope. It's good policy.

Four Glorias

Any normal man would be content with one Gloria Swanson, but when L. R. Towns, of the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, played "Her Gilded Cage," he offered prizes for four Glorias.

For side lines on this he displayed the prizes in four windows, advertised that the Gloria hat, which formed the second prize, would be duplicated and sent Miss Swanson, and worked the photographic hook-up in that the local photographer made free pictures of all entrants—and sold them extra prints where he could. The photographs were made the feature of the lobby display.

Getting four extra angles to one stunt is doing pretty well. We wonder if Mr. Towns ever tried to grow grass on an asphalt pavement. We'll bet he could

OF COURSE NICE PEOPLE WEAR THE SAME SORT OF HATS THAT WALLACE REID AFFECTS

At least, this was the contention of Amile Vogel, St. Louis Paramounteer, who tied the largest clothing store in town to the display. The teaser got so much interest that the sidewalk in front of the store was crowded when the fatal noon hour arrived, and they stuck around to see the live model put on the various styles of hats manufactured by the concern. Of course while they were waiting they had been looking at the clothing displays in the other windows.

EMERGENCY CARDS FOR THE HELEN LYNCH CONTEST

When the supply of the regular First National posters was delayed, W. S. Clarke, of the Strand Theatre, Cincinnati, made his own display cards and captured preferred position on ten of the best stands in Cincinnati, where posters never get in.

Made Public Beg to See 'Smilin' Through'

It's old stuff to the old-timers, but Jack Jourdaine, of the Selba Theatre, Central City, Ky., made it work like new.

The town is largely railroad interests, and the strike had hurt. Jourdaine was paying a pretty fair price for the Talmadge knockout and he wanted to bounce it over the top.

He started his campaign by the general remark that he could not afford the biggest productions until times got better. At the same time he set his plans to have someone get up a petition that he play "Smilin' Through." He figured that he could get four or five hundred signatures.

When he found that there were eight hundred names on the list he cheered up not a little, so he mentioned the petition in a display ad and asked if the people of Central City really wanted the best in photoplays.

Of course they shouted an affirmative, so presently he announced that he had booked the picture, giving the date. After that local pride simply had to function, and he not only made money but found himself in a better strategical position in reference to other big First Nationals.

Baxter's Idea

Earl R. Baxter, of the Liberty Theatre, Darlington, S. C., has worked something new on the familiar summons.

The only trouble with the summons is that it generally requires printing on both sides, which runs the cost up. Baxter had them printed on the regulation 8½ by 11-inch sheet, with the summons taking two-thirds and the docket front the remainder. This was folded so that the docket appeared outside. The cost of the paper is less than would be the cost of the second printing. The docket is printed on the lower third of the sheet, which is then folded so that in turning the page you come on the summons.

Then Baxter used a second impression on the back to red ink the fact that "Reported Missing" was even better than he had hoped for.

The summons is one of the earliest stunts and still is one of the best. Now it is cheaper to produce and that should further advance its popularity.

Good Stunts for "The Storm" Drive

Starting two weeks in advance, the Merrick Theatre, in the Long Island town of that name, got over some capital ideas for "The Storm."

The best puller was a popularity voting contest done with the local paper for boys and girls between 7 and 16 years of age. Storm outfits consisting of a raincoat, hat, rubbers and umbrella, all donated by a local concern, were the prizes.

A thermometer with varying weather conditions was put up and each day the "mercury" was built up with chalk until the day of the opening it reached "The Storm" at the top of the tube.

Another good stunt was the use of a transparency picture of the forest fire with a flasher on the light to make the flames more vivid and to give the value of motion.

Saved the Tallow

Two tallow candles, each six feet high, were the star lobby stunts at the Mary Anderson Theatre, Louisville, for Norma Talmadge in "The Eternal Flame." The wick was a wire which terminated in a small bulb in the place where the flame should have been, and a rapid flasher was cut in to give the effect of a flickering light.

The bulb was dipped red, but a better effect can be gained by dipping in red, then scratching some of it off and dipping again in a light amber.

Twenty thousand telegrams, presumably from Miss Talmadge, were distributed though the city by the Postal Telegraph, which split the cost with the house.

Prizes for Poets

Offering prizes for the best rhymed acrostics on "A Fool There Was" is the way the Capitol Theatre, Altoona, put over the Fox release. Several thousand replies were received, most of them indicating from their text that the contestant had seen the play, though there was no stipulation as to attendance. The contest was open to all and the story was repeatedly given in the newspapers.

Growing Up

Adding to the free matinee stunt, the Rialto Theatre, Richmond, Va., offered free admissions to all kids to Paramountown and several school kits to the boys and girls to make the best signs reading "We are going on a trip through Paramount Land at the Rialto." There was no parade, but banners had to be worn to the theatre—and the kiddies came from all parts of the city. Get it?

Max Doolittle Is Convict Promoter

Paramounteers are supposed to help managers make money even when it may not be through the medium of Paramount pictures. More than once a Paramounteer has gone out of his way to put something over for a local house on the big proposition that the exhibitor was a Paramount patron and therefore entitled to all the help a Paramounteer could give, but his job recently put Max Doolittle in the guise of agent for a bunch of bandits recently. Max was in Sioux Falls, lining them up for Paramount Week, when there was a jail delivery and capture. The Paramount Princess went out and got news pictures of the capture of the convicts and Max framed up this display in a 140 by four to help get it over. This added three pretty hard-looking stars to his gallery, but he knew that the showing would help put over "Her Gilded Gage," and he went to it. Max missed a bet by not hooking the gilded cage to the steel cages. There was a fine chance to put the convicts in gilded cages, but Max had to work fast, while the film was drying, and he at least rolled a lot of extra money into the box office and helped confirm the management in the belief that Paramount pays profits.

Smiling for Norma

Working over an old scheme, the Apollo Theatre, Janesville, Wis., adapts the stunt originally used for "The Ten Dollar Raise" to "Smilin' Through." It hooked the local paper to a smile week with season tickets for one, two and three months for the prizes. These were to be awarded to the employes of any store included in the hook-up who possessed the most pleasant manners. Nineteen advertisers, including two theatres, came into the stunt, and all of them took space in the paper to work the "Smilin' Through" slogan into their announcements. It gave a contest value to a hook-up page, aroused local interest and helped circulation. It is simple, and yet it is very effective.

Uses Same Copy for Two Week Run

Jimquin is not actually engaged in management now, but he hangs out around the headquarters of the West Coast Company, in Los Angeles, where his brother is one of the busiest bees in the hive, and when they had to put over "Monte Cristo" without very much help, they asked Jimquin to get busy. That was meat and drink to Jim, and he framed up a good selling copy in 140 lines by three, working in such cuts as he could rustle up, but selling chiefly on the appeal of the familiar title. It was not until the second week that he pulled a Jimquin. The copy was pulling and he felt he could ride on it again, so he simply crayoned "second week starting" across the face of the display and kept it running. For a third week he made a change in pace and reproduced a radio advertisement, clinging to the head of the Count for a sort of trade mark, and he produced a very readable advertisement, but we like best that second week idea, for a one time. It gives more emphasis to the holdover than could be gained from almost any other form of display, and it is to be commended to others who hold over and who like their initial display.

Striking Design Obscures a Title

Harry H. Kich, of the Ohio Theatre, Indianoplis, sends in a sample of his advertising for Mae Murray in the Tiffany production of Mae Murray in "Broadway Rose" and wants to know what we think. This is 200 lines by four columns, rather deep for its width, but sized to give the best results with the figure of the star, and the picture of Miss Murray in a new dancing costume is always the best seller. Generally speaking it is well laid out, but in striping the panel to get a heavy effect, the title has been partly buried. This is not as hurtful in the case of Miss Murray as it might prove in case of most stars, for the pose is equivalent to the name, and you cannot overlook the pose, but we think the artist would have done a little better with a dark vignette backing running from the reverse base up to the circle, but shading off from there so that the head was against the white ground. Here the hair provides a relief and the head would show better against plain white than it does with the lined panel. White would then give the best possible display to the star and her support. The reverse circle works well because it is large enough to get the lettering over, and although the title might have been raised a little, the "Broadway" is too large to be lettered in for a much better display in the space. The white panel, with its type insert, refers to a special stunt for the opening and reads: "To our patrons. Monday matinee we will say it with flowers. Every patron will be presented with a beautiful Broadway Rose." This is a good idea, though we have noted that most of the roses you find on Broad-

Faulty Proportions Waste Good Space

Here is another example of the innate depravity of Los Angeles' artists. This time it is the Kinema which is the offender. The Grauman spaces are so poor that we have stopped using them. This Kinema space is 145 lines by four, and yet so much space is wasted on cut and reverse that the program has to be run in six point unleaded, and you need a magnifying glass to read it. There is some good stuff listed, but that panel down in the southwest corner of the space might as well have been mere black ink for all the good it does. In eighty square inches of space the artist cannot put over a twelve letter title decently and he probably thinks he has done a good job. He has no more appreciation of proportion than a child has of the theory of relativity. He not only wastes his own salary but most of the money put into advertising space, and yet he is doing no more than the rest of the Los Angeles' artists. They are all pretty much alike. In the scene cut there is a suggestion of a man and woman racing before a stampeding herd of cattle, but rotten drawing almost obscures the cattle and you have to look at the space carefully to tell that they are there. A lighter line would have brought up the details and might have sold interest in the story, but Los Angeles' artists apparently do not know what light lines are.

A First National Release

TOO MUCH INK

Makes Ford Agent Help Sell Seats

If you will look twice at the large cut on this page for "Across the Continent," you will realize that only one is a theatre advertisement. The other is the advertisement of the Ford agent in Pueblo, Colorado. When Harry E. Gardner, of the Rialto, saw the Ford angle in the Wallace Reid play, he generously offered to loan the Ford agency a cut with which to illustrate their hook-up advertisement, and he was careful to give them the same one he was going to use. Of the two we think that the Ford advertisement sold more seats to the Rialto than the house copy; not that the house copy is poor, but because the agent had so much more to say about it in his direct appeal to Ford owners. The hook-up includes the loan of a car for lobby display and this is alluded to in the advertisement, persons interested being advised to go and look the coupe over. The house took 125 lines by three and the agency went fifteen lines deeper. The use of the same cut is the big point in the display, since it works from one to the other and helps both spaces. Mr. Gardner, by the way, is following Sivitz into Los Angeles. He writes that the altitude is getting hard on him and he thinks that the Coast will be better, so he is setting sail for Los as the first point of call. He has nothing in sight, but he can no more keep out of theatre management than he can avoid eating, and he will probably be heard from soon. He sends in some more examples of his chatty advertisements, but writes that these were cut out by the higher ups after he had been running them only three weeks. They were fine business makers and we think the bosses made a mistake in ordering them out.

Once More

The 12,654,847 kid matinee to be given on Jackie Coogan in "Trouble" was worked by the De Luxe theatre, Utica, after the newspapers had firmly refused to be coaxed into another impersonation contest or a newsboys' parade. They even told Nathan Robbins that he could do with a Boy Scouts turnout, but the Press fell for the Orphans and one more mark was added to the long list. The only new angle was the standing out of the pay patrons until the parade had been let in and given the best seats.

Got Double

When he planned to send up an aviator to advertise "Hurricane's Gal" at the Strand theatre, Milwaukee, Manager Weisfeldt gave a secondary angle to the stunt by sending up a sob sister who was doing a series of feature stories for her paper on odd employments.

She had to do a story a day and the jobs were going rapidly, so she and the publishers were glad to get a real novelty to write about, and she simply had to mention the First National in her story to tell what it was all about. Just another case of making two blades of grass grow where one formerly parked, but it shows that Weisfeldt knows all about intensive farming.

Straight from the Shoulder Reports

A Department for the Information of Exhibitors

Edited by A. Van Buren Powell

Sincere exhibitors are sending these tips to help you book your show. Their reports are printed without fear or favor. If a picture is good, bad or ordinary, you will find it out here. Turn about is fair play; let these exhibitors guide your bookings, and in turn let's hear from you.

American Releasing

THE GREAT ALONE. Did best business of any three days since early last spring. A fine picture. Regent Theatre, Blackwell, Oklahoma.

JAN OF BIG SNOWS. Worst Curwood picture we have ever run. Story good, photoplay fine, but did not pull at all. Attendance, poor. J. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

MOONGOLD. Was sent to us broken and incomplete, so that we never saw the end of it; it caused great disappointment. Some had seen it and said it was good. L. C. Fenn, Elivah Theatre, Chinook, Washington.

Associated Exhibitors

GRANDMA'S BOY. A knockout. Oh, boy, grab this one quick! The best comedy of the present season. Advertising, extra heavy; started a month in advance. Patronage, small town. Attendance, extra good. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

WHEN THE DEVIL DRIVES. Very good, well accepted by everyone who saw it. Directing and photography above the average. Advertising, ones, threes, slide, 11x14, no extra exploitation. Patronage, better class. Attendance, good. J. A. Wadsworth, Republic Theatre, Great Falls, South Carolina.

F. B. O.

DUKE OF CHIMNEY BUTTE. A fairly good Western that will go better in the big towns where Stone is better known. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair. Wm. E. Tragsdorf, Trags Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

GAY AND DEVILISH. Very good picture. Doris May liked here. Advertising, newspaper, handbills and posters. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, fair. W. H. Hufford, Lincoln Theatre, Petersburg, Indiana.

First National

BITS OF LIFE. Certainly unworthy of Neilan, from whom we are entitled to expect more. People walked out literally by dozens. Gives impression of having been thrown together without method or forethought. Advertising, usual newspaper, lithos, lobby, etc. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, unsatisfactory. J. J. Wood, Redding Theatre, Redding, California.

DEUCE OF SPADES. An average Charles Ray picture which pleased 90% of patrons. Advertising, newspaper, handbills, posters. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, fair. W. H. Hufford, Lincoln Theatre, Petersburg, Indiana.

DEVIL'S GARDEN. Patrons well pleased. Advertising, ones, threes, photos, slide and press. Patronage, neighborhood. Attendance, capacity. Edw. W. Werner, Windsor Theatre, Canton, Ohio.

HALF BREED. Very poor. Too many sub-titles, poor direction. Mary Anderson could not act. Slow action throughout. Advertising, sixes, threes, ones, slide, newspaper. Patronage, all classes. Attendance, good. A. Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

HALF BREED. A splendid story and good cast that failed to register because of poor directing. Could have been made an extraordinary attraction. Attendance, fair. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre, Jerome, Idaho.

ONE ARABIAN NIGHT. Not a small town picture. My people did not appreciate it. They began leaving on the fourth reel. The settings and photography above the average. Advertising, two newspapers, ones, three, photos, slide.. Patronage, small town. Attendance, poor. E. T. Dunlap, Dunlap Theatre, Hawarden, Iowa.

A PERFECT CRIME. Clean comedy drama. Good program picture. Five reels. Advertising, lobby display and newspaper. Patronage, general. Attendance, poor. Smith & Correll, Portland Theatre, Casselton, North Dakota.

THE SCOFFER. A picture of absorbing interest. Pleased here. Worth booking. Advertising, posters and press. Patronage, small town. Attendance, poor. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

STRANGER THAN FICTION. A good program picture that pleases the masses as well as the classes. Advertising, regular. Patronage, neighborhood. Attendance, fair. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

TWIN BEDS. You can't beat this one for a comedy. It's a scream from start to finish, not a big drawing card, but pleased all those who saw it. You can boost it as strong as you like. Advertising, regular. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, fair. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

WOMAN IN HIS HOUSE. A very good picture, lots of truth. Pleased 100%. Advertising, six sheet, three sheet, slide, photo. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, good. D. D. Purcell, Muse-U Theatre, Cortez, Colorado.

Fox

EVER SINCE EVE. Good Shirley Mason comedy drama. Why don't they give her something heavy? Advertising, ones, threes, slide. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, good. Chas. F. Johnson, Plaza Theatre, Punta Gorda, Florida.

FOOTFALLS. This picture will not appeal to small town patronage. It may to some, but I don't know who it would be. Advertising, too much. Patronage, neighborhood. Attendance, fair, but I wish it had been very poor. H. L. Fox, Tokio Theatre, Morehouse, Missouri.

FOOTFALLS. Not what it is cracked up to be. Director seemed to be lost so he fumbled about trying to develop his plot and lost the punch. We play this subject again tonight and on advice of several we shall eliminate second reel entirely. Advertising, ones, threes, sixes, 11x14, etc. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair. H. S. Mitchell, Opera House, Windsor, Nova Scotia, Canada.

LITTLE MISS SMILES. A very good comedy drama that pleased 90%. Mason does her bit at our theatre. Advertising, ones, photos, slide. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

PLAY SQUARE. Not very good. Got a poor print which was not all there. I guess it didn't finish right. Worst house in six months. Hardly anybody pleased. Attendance, about 50%. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

ROUGH DIAMOND. Mix still going good. Favorable comments. Step on it. Cannot disappoint. Advertising, ones, threes and lobby. Patronage, mixed Attendance, good. E. L. Wharton, Orpheum Theatre, Glasgow, Montana.

ROUGH SHOD. A splendid Western with plenty of pep. Jones draws good. Advertising, ones, threes, sixes, slide. Patronage, neighborhood. Attendance, good. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

SHACKLES OF GOLD. Truly a good picture in my opinion. Farnum is hard to equal. This one is extremely interesting. Play it by all means. Advertising, sixes, threes, slide, heralds. Patronage, neighborhood. Attendance, good. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

TROOPER O'NEIL. Very good, but not the type of picture for Jones. Will please. Advertising, regular. Patronage, neighborhood. Attendance, fair. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

Goldwyn

ALWAYS THE WOMAN. A long ways from being a pleasing picture. Patrons did not like it. No story, too much padding. Advertising, newspapers, posters, slide, photos. Patronage, highest class. Attendance, fair. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

BUNTY PULLS THE STRINGS. One hour and forty-five minutes of agony Action too slow for small town patrons. One half of the audience had departed for home by the end of fourth reel. Might do in the cities, but small town men lay off it. Film in good shape, fine cast. All wasted on such a story. Advertising, ones, threes and window cards. Patronage, small town. Attendance, poor. C. C. Johnson, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

CABINET OF DR. CALIGARI. Why did Goldwyn ever allow his name to be placed on this specimen of junk? Absolutely rotten. Showed this stuff in face of strong opposition; a few came out. As the reels unwound the audience departed. Business killer at the time we are trying to popularize movies. Advertising, ones and threes. Patronage, small town. Attendance, poor. C. C. Johnson, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

DUST FLOWER. A very clever story. Miss Chadwick is very popular here. Advertising, lobby, newspaper, billboards. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, fair. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

MAN FROM LOST RIVER. Good picture, but last reel was drawn out. Should have been made in five reels instead of six. Advertising, photos, one sheet, slide, two newspapers. Patronage, mostly farmers. Attendance, fair. Chas. Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York.

WHEN ROMANCE RIDES. Very pleasing. Miss Adams is not known here. Advertising, lobby, newspaper, billboard, handbills. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, fair. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

Wid Gunning, Inc.

THE BOOTLEGGERS. It has a million dollar title, and it sounds big, but it is no good. Patrons expected to see real bootlegging and some real action. Poor acting and just to be frank not a single good comment on it. Advertising, advance slides, ones and threes and photos. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, good. Enterprise Theatre, Glenalum, West Virginia.

Hodkinson

FREE AIR. Very pleasing picture, had only one kick, seemed to go good. Advertising, regular. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. Leslie Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, California.

FREE AIR. A good comedy that draw. Advertising; newspaper and front. Patronage; mixed. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

LIGHT IN THE CLEARING. This picture might of been all right had it had continuity but it was so haphazardly thrown together that one had hard work keeping the thread of the story in mind. Advertising; posters. Patronage; rural. Attendance; fair. B. A. Aughinbough, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

MAN OF THE FOREST. A good western that drew fair houses. Advertising; lobby and newspapers. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

MYSTERIOUS RIDER. Nothing mysterious about this but the name. In fact, we can not recall that the chap who bore this title even did much riding. Why do they make them? It looks like quantity production instead of art. No plot, no action, but a fist fight, nothing worth remembering. Just a picture like the magic lantern man used to show. The name of Zane Grey was the excuse for this one. Patronage; rural. Attendance; fair. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewiston, Ohio.

NO TRESPASSING. This should be rated as a special to your patrons. It is supposed to be a program picture, but it outdoes itself and every one that will see it comes out and tells the manager as they did to me, that you certainly have a fine picture. Miss Castle is well cast and her gowns and settings have been well selected.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre, Saranac Lake, is satisfied with our reports "as is" because he has traveled a lot and knows most of the towns you report from.

W. B. Aspley, who takes a most helpful attitude in writing his hints, thinks, however, he and some others would get lots of use out of references to the population of each reporting town, and sort of people the house draws from.

It has also been suggested that report blanks be fixed up to allow a report for the whole week's shows on one sheet.

This is your tip exchange, and the more it can help you the better everybody will like it; now you give your ideas on betterment. It's all for the cause of better tips and better pictures.

VAN

Advertising usual, wished I had spent $100.00. Patronage; better class. Attendance; poor, big rain. M. F. Schnibben, Opera House, Florence, South Carolina.

WAY OF A WOMAN. A little old, but good, and the star puts it over. Hodkinson tries to help the exhibitor by not robbing him for the picture. Advertising; newspaper, one sheet, photos, slides, etc. Patronage; country town. Attendance; fair. H. V. Harvey, Palace Theatre, Dixon, Calif.

Metro

THE FOUR HORSEMEN. Excellent picture, but not as wonderful as I expected it to be. If you can get it at the right price, take it. Advertising; twenty-four sheet, threes, ones, photos, window cards, slides and programs. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

FACE BETWEEN. A rather thin story for five reels of footage. Well enough acted and directed, and for a program picture it could not be severely criticized. Advertising; usual. Patronage; health seekers and tourists. Attendance; fair. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

HOLE IN THE WALL. A mystery story that is pretty well done and seemed to give good satisfaction. Alice Lake is both pretty and clever, and the balance of the cast is good. Advertising; usual. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. E. W. Collins, Liberty Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

PEACOCK ALLEY. Mae Murray does wonders in this picture. It's really one of the best bets of the season. Advertising, posters, papers and bally-hoo. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. J. Carbonell, Monroe Theatre, Key West, Florida.

SEEIN'S BELIEVING. A good program picture. Pleased, all but the ending. All my patrons feel as if they could make a better ending for it. Advertising; usual. Attendance; very good. Patronage; all classes. M. F. Schnibben, Opera House, Florence, South Carolina.

THEY LIKE 'EM ROUGH. Viola Dana. Excellent drama in which a husband used cave man tactics to make his flapper wife do as a good wife should do. Miss Dana played her part splendidly and the large audiences were all pleased. Wm. Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Paramount

ACROSS THE CONTINENT. One of Wallace Reid's best. Theodore Roberts is great as Wallie's papa. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. W. F. Harding, Princess Theatre, Mt. Doro, Florida.

AFTER THE SHOW. This picture will please 90 per cent. of your patrons. Advertising; lobby and daily paper. Attendance; good. A. R. Workman, Coliseum Theatre, Marseilles, Illinois.

THE BACHELOR DADDY. One of Meighan's best. A good clean feature for the kiddies to see. Pleased everyone. Advertising; regular. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

CHICKENS. A very weak picture without a story. The very poorest that I have had from Paramount. Advertising; ones, threes, sixes, slide, newspaper. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre, Skamokawa, Washington.

DICTATOR. One of the best Reid features. Excellent box office attraction. Attendance; very good. Stanley Chambers, Miller Theatre, Wichita, Kansas.

FOOL'S PARADISE. One of the best of DeMille's pictures done in the best style. A wonderful audience appeal and if you can buy it right, is one to get. Price too high here and conditions do not stand price advance. Attendance, fair. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

FOOL'S PARADISE. A wonderful picture that delighted our people. Class 100 per cent. Again we doff our cap to Cecil B. DeMille as the greatest showman of them all. Advertising, extensive campaign. Patronage, high class. Attendance, good. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

FORBIDDEN FRUIT. I have nothing but praise for this picture. One of the best I have ever run. The settings are wonderful and the stars do great work. There was not a single kick and many saw it twice. It is a real pleasure to run a picture of this kind. Anyone who has overlooked this one has sure passed up a good bet. Advertising, sixes, threes, ones, slide, newspaper, heralds. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre, Skamokawa, Washington.

FOREVER. It's hard to diagnose this one. For instance, every "highbrow" in the town came, people who scarcely ever attend, drawn thither by Wallace Reid and Elsie Ferguson, that type of patron thought the picture great, most artistic, etc. The regular "movie fan" didn't like it at all. Personal opinion. It is very well produced and everything in the way of acting and direction is in evidence, you have to stretch your imagination to quite an extent to think of the "dream meetings of Gogo and Mimsey," but in towns with a very discriminating patronage, I advise to play it; it will go over and you will do well. I did. In farming and manufacturing communities I can't see how it is possible for this picture to please. They get important rental for this, and that must be taken into consideration. Advertising, heralds, mailing lists, house programs, etc. Patronage, health seekers and tourists. Attendance, very good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

FOREVER. I did not like it personally, but pulled the biggest house in two months with carnival in opposition. Advertising, lobby, slide, heralds, one sheets. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, good. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Oklahoma.

FOREVER. A picture which will not make you any money in a small town, but a master production of its kind. Not sorry we played it, but finished under the boards at the end of the run. Advertising, two column eight inch, two papers. Patronage, rural town. Attendance, poor. Arthur E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

FOR DEFENSE. Ethel Clayton weeps again; however, this picture is better than most of her vehicles. Advertising, newspapers, slide, photo, posters. Patronage, all classes. Attendance, fair. J. Kenrick, Strand Theatre, Ithaca, New York.

FRONTIER OF THE STARS. A very good picture that will please the majority. Advertising, ones, threes and slide. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. J. F. Schlez, Columbia Theatre, Columbia, North Carolina.

A GAME CHICKEN. Not what I expected and business was way off after first night. It's a weak sister, in fact all of the later Realarts have been weaklings. "Bobbed Hair" was the poorest picture ever made. Advertising, regular. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, fair. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

A GAME CHICKEN. A badly presented picture. No more like Cuba than England is. Advertising, posters and papers. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair J. Carbonell, Monroe Theatre, Key West, Florida.

A GAME CHICKEN. This will please most any audience. It has an excellent story; splendid cast and a title that lends itself to all sorts of exploitation. Advertising, usual, also game-cock in cage in lobby. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, hurt by heavy rains. W. C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

GET RICH QUICK WALLINGFORD. A splendid picture in every respect. A credit to the industry. Pleased 100 per cent. Advertising, programs, ones and threes. Patronage, tourists and health seekers. Attendance, good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

GHOST IN THE GARRET. Very good. Pleased 100 per cent. If you want a comedy that will keep your house roaring, book it. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall Theatre, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

GHOST IN THE GARRET. An old picture, but one that pleased on Friday night nearly 100 per cent. Dorothy Gish seemed well cast. Advertising, regular. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair. H. S. Stansel, Ruleville Theatre, Ruleville, Mississippi.

GILDED LILY. A very good picture. Everyone liked this one. Advertising, slide, three sheet, photos. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, fair. D. D. Purcell, Muse U Theatre, Cortez, Colorado.

THE GOOD PROVIDER. A good true story in which there is a good moral. Good feature, only just a little long. Advertising, regular. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, fair. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House Theatre, Belvidere, New Jersey.

THE GOOD PROVIDER. Very good picture to fair crowds. Advertising, newspaper, lobby, billboards. Patronage, general. Attendance, fair. Palace Theatre, Wichita, Kansas.

Send reports on handbills, dollar bills, doctor's bills or any paper handy. Never mind what they come on—but be sure to keep 'em coming.

GREAT IMPERSONATION. Pleased 100 per cent. Acting, scenery and story were all excellent. Do not be afraid to boost it. Advertising, regular. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair. A. La Valla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

GREAT IMPERSONATION. Unusually good feature that brought praise from more patrons than anything run in a long time. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre, Jerome, Idaho.

GREEN TEMPTATION. Kosloff's support of Betty Compson in this production makes it a good picture. It's different and builds up suspense at it goes. Photography is a little too dark in some scenes. Advertising, two column eight inch, two papers. Patronage, rural. Attendance, fair. Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

GREEN TEMPTATION. Betty Compson scored again and everybody pleased. This type of feature will help exhibitors. Advertising, extra billboard and newspaper display. Patronage, general. Attendance, good. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

THE HEART SPECIALIST. A dandy little picture that gave universal satisfaction. Better than average program stuff. Advertising, usual. Patronage, high class. Attendance, fair. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

HEART SPECIALIST. A very fair program picture, and you can advertise that in this Mary Miles Minter does excellent work. It needs a good comedy to make a really entertaining bill, so I put in a "Buster Keaton" and everyone was pleased. Advertising, ones, threes, programs, mailing list. Patronage, health seekers and tourists. Attendance, good. Dave Seymour. Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

HEARTS TO LET. Very mediocre entertainment. The poorest one of Johnstone's I have shown to date. Patronage, small town. Attendance, poor. Wm. E. Tragsdorf, Trags Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

HER OWN MONEY. Ethel Clayton does her part, but the story was not of the best, being weak and uninteresting. Advertising, regular lobby. Patronage, general. Attendance, light. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

Selznick

CHANNING OF NORTHWEST. Received many compliments. Patrons seemed well pleased. We need more good Northwesterns. Advertising; ones, threes, photos, screen, slide and press. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; overflow. Edw. W. Werner, Windsor Theatre, Canton, Ohio.

REPORTED MISSING. A corking good picture at a good price. Liked better than those you pay five times as much for. Advertising; threes and ones, newspaper and dodgers. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; capacity. C. W. Jennings, Francis Theatre, Victoria, Virginia.

REPORTED MISSING. Very good. Negro part can't be beat. Pleased 90 per cent. Advertising; ones, threes, sixes, cards, heralds, slides. Patronage; best. Attendance; good. M. K. Harris, Liberty Theatre, Franklin, Kentucky.

United Artists

DREAM STREET. Wonderful attraction. Went over with a bang (for July Fourth show). My patrons well pleased. Advertising; newspapers, ones, threes, sixes. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY. A sugary picture; sweet story, nice acting. Mary Pickford with her curls pleases the women and the girls. Other classes walk out on it. Not a picture for the ordinary movie house catering to all classes. Story and action and settings high class—too much so. Mary is her wonderful, curly-headed self Patronage; general. Attendance; poor, Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

Universal

AFRAID TO FIGHT. One of the best pictures I have ever played. Be sure to book it. Advertising; ones and threes, 11x14, slide. Patronage; general. Attendance; good. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

DANGEROUS LITTLE DEMON. I heard Marie Prevost was fast becoming a popular star. This picture certainly must not be up to her standard, if such is the case. Nothing to it for us. Nothing to hold interest of crowd. Advertising; three sheets. Patronage; rural. Attendance; fair. D. B. Rankin, Co-operative Theatre, Idana, Kansas.

DELICIOUS LITTLE DEVIL. Why "lay off this"? It drew the biggest crowd of the season for us and pleased as well as "Fascination" or "Peacock Alley." We say "go to it." Advertising; program, slides and lobby. Nothing special. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; best of season. W. H. Pike, Majestic Theatre, Las Vegas, Nevada.

DELICIOUS LITTLE DEVIL. You'll disappoint a few with the way Murray and Valentino act, but you'll get the business. We had carnival opposition. Advertising; heavy. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

FALSE KISSES. A good picture, but title hasn't anything to do with the story. Miss Du Pont well liked here. Advertising; three sheets, photos and handbills. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. J. E. Gurbord, National Theatre, Grand 'Mere, Quebec, Canada.

THE FOX. Something different. Pleased 85 per cent. Scenes good, photography par. Some places too mechanical, not natural. Will please your western admirers. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

MAN TO MAN. An excellent western, pleased as well as "The Fox." Whenever we advertise Harry Carey we get them in. His pictures invariably please. Advertising; three sheets, heralds. Patronage; rural. Attendance; good. D. B. Rankin, Co-operative Theatre, Idana, Kansas.

NO WOMAN KNOWS. Title very poor and misleading, no chance for exploitation. Picture and story good. Audience pleased. Advertising; one sheet, photos, newspapers, etc. Patronage; country town. Attendance; fair. H. V. Harvey, Palace Theatre, Dixon, California.

Vitagraph

FLOWER OF THE NORTH. Rather poor although Curwood's name puts them over here. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

MY WILD IRISH ROSE. A splendid production. Stood them up three nights and had to hold over in order to accommodate crowds. Played against strong opposition, "Monte Cristo" included, but it didn't matter. The kind of picture people want, book it and mop up. Patronage; transient. Attendance; good. Crown Theatre, Mobile, Alabama.

Comedies

BETTY'S HUSBAND (Arrow). One of the worst series of comedies I have used. Positively not a laugh. H. F. Wendt, Rivoli Theatre, Defiance, Ohio.

COPS (First National). Buster Keaton two-reeler. Twice as good as "Paleface." One of his best. Advertising; usual. Patronage; best. Attendance; good. J. A. Flournoy, Criterion Theatre, Macon, Georgia.

MY WIFE'S RELATIONS (First National). Here is probably Buster Keaton's best comedy this year. Plenty of laughs. Advertising; two one sheets, slides and programs. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

Every exhibitor sending reports is making for himself a reputation as a fine spirited fellow, willing to share the tips his experience gives him. Join the good fellows. SEND REPORTS.

PISTOLS FOR BREAKFAST (Pathe). A laugh a minute. Harold Lloyd reissue. Get this one reel comedy if you want your patrons to have a good laugh. Advertising; one sheets. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

STRIKING MODELS (Educational). This is a two-reel Al Christie comedy. It is without a funny situation in it. Consider it the most salacious thing ever sent us. We returned it unused. First time we did this in eight years. Patronage; rural. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

SUNSHINE COMEDIES (Fox). Don't see how an exhibitor can get along without playing one of them at least every week. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

Serials

ADVENTURES OF TARZAN (Weiss Bros.). Here is fifteen weeks of the poorest stuff ever called a continued story. The patrons came around and congratulated me when I showed the last episode. Boys, there is nothing to it, so don't pay your good money. It won't draw after the fourth episode. Advertising; special. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good at first, awful finish. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

Short Subjects

TOM SANTCHI TWO-REEL WESTERNS (Pathe). I alternate these with the "Holman Day two-reelers." The Santchi series are liked best, but both are good fillers. Advertising; fillers. Patronage; transient. M. Oppenheimer, Lafayette Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

State Rights

BLUE BLAZES (Arrow). Good western, the kind that gets the boys who carry the dinner pail, and they represent 80 per cent. of my bread and butter. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, De-Queens, Arkansas.

GOD'S COUNTRY AND THE LAW (Arrow). Better than the general run of Curwoods. If more money were spent on a production, could get better admission prices and better patronage. Mrs. J. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

SMILIN' JIM (Arrow). Good five-reel western comedy drama. Farnum plays double. Pleased all. Advertising; ones, threes, sixes, photos. Patronage; middle class. Attendance; fair. Wm. Thatcher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

TWINKLE LITTLE STAR. A most satisfactory children's picture, that seemed to please everyone. A fairy story play. Pleased 100 per cent. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. H. S. Stansel, Ruleville Theatre, Ruleville, Mississippi.

Consensus of Published Reviews

The Galloping Kid

(Ed (Hoot) Gibson—Universal—4,783 feet)

M. P. W.—The picture has a rare effect of smoothness and consistency.

N.—This is going to please them.

F. D.—Thoroughly pleasing bit of entertainment.

E. H.—Slow moving, slight story and conventional plot are only saved by some unique scenes of cliff dwellings and exteriors of well planned ranch.

T. R.—Here is a speedy "western" of unusual character.

(Hope Hampton—First National—7,500 feet)

M. P. W.—Wide appeal . . . Beautiful new color photoplay.

T. R.—By all odds the best picture in which Hope Hampton has appeared.

F. D.—Easily the best picture Hope Hampton has made; color work magnificent.

N.—A thoroughly satisfactory production founded upon a worth-while story, incorporating a popular theme.

E. H.—It held its audiences from the first foot to the final fade-out in rapt and earnest attention.

A Girl's Desire

(Alice Calhoun—Vitagraph—4,950 feet)

M. P. W.—It is wholesome throughout, just frivolous enough to keep the audience in constant good humor, and with sufficient satire regarding the nouveau riche to please the ordinary citizen.

N.—This is a big improvement over Alice Calhoun's recent starring vehicles.

E. H.—Comedy and drama of a pleasing and entertaining vein.

T. R.—An entertaining society comedy drama that affords several laughs and proves to be thoroughly enjoyable all the way through.

F. D.—Without anything very unusual in the way of situations, except for a surprise at the finish this just about manages to get over.

Love Is An Awful Thing

(Owen Moore—Selznick—6,500 feet)

M. P. W.—It is constant fun, inducing deep seated laughs that are motivated by sheer nonsense, delightful nonsense. It's ocular laughing gas. And it'll knock 'em for a row of ecomiums.

E. H.—A mirth-provoking and thoroughly enjoyable piece of screen fiction.

F. D.—Another good comedy and wholesome entertainment, but not up to the pace set by "Reported Missing."

N.—This bubble foams with breezy incident, giving Moore a happy role which he plays in a mocking manner.

T. R.—Laughter riots through every foot of this film.

The Woman Who Came Back

(Evelyn Brent—Playgoers—5,106 feet)

M. P. W.—The story adapted to the screen depicts, not always convincingly, the story of a woman who went lotus-eating but eventually reformed when the war came and the man who had always loved her returned home totally blind.

F. D.—English production presents complicated though interesting romance.

E. H.—A highly emotional film with a distinctly English flavor.

N.—This is a valuable box office feature as those who read the book will undoubtedly want to see the screen version.

T. R.—As this picture stands it must be listed as rather mediocre entertainment.

Caught Bluffing

(Frank Mayo—Universal—5,000 feet)

M. P. W.—An intensely interesting screen story.

F. D.—Frank Mayo has a very suitable story in this and one that gives him a particularly appropriate role.

N.—A full quota of romantic moments, a few thrills and some hefty infighting.

E. H.—This is one of the best Mayo pictures since "Dr. Jim," and "Afraid to Fight."

T. R.—There is plenty of excitement and thrills running on schedule time during the showing of "Caught Bluffing."

Top o' the Morning

(Gladys Walton—Universal—4,627 feet)

M. P. W.—Pleasing Irish story, that follows familiar lines.

F. D.—Entertaining drama with laughs; has many elements that will appeal.

E. H.—A very pleasing little society drama.

T. R.—Light, wholesome amusement.

N.—All in all, this picture ought to get by as light entertainment, suitable for the average fan who likes his pictures clean, wholesome and not too complicated as to story.

"Rags to Riches"

Warners Offer a Human Interest Knockout That Promises Gold Mine for Exhibitors

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

When a production is supplied with values that attract man, woman and child, it is worthy of more than ordinary attention. Such a production is Harry Rapf's "Rags to Riches," which is the first of the Warner 1922-23 releases. It is a quality picture with a quantity of entertainment value that will be as highly appreciated on Broadway as it will be on Main street. It is human because every move of every actor is genuine, because the scenic background is minus that exaggeratedly luxurious sort found only in fiction, because the story is simple, dealing with simple folks the world is ever happy to know are among the living; because it is photographically well done and, last but not least, because we see Wesley Barry in the role of an honest-to-goodness lad, not the dream boy of some author with a vivid imagination.

If your patrons are the sort who love to have comedy served with the melodramatic, this is what you want; if they want thrills to come with a picturization of every-day events in life, this has them; if they are the kind that sit in envy of happy lovers this one won't disappoint. In fact, here's one production—and it's just that—that has everything. You can rip the picture to pieces, you can take character for character, "shot" for "shot" and move for move, and when you've completed your analysis you will have found that it's a great picture.

Surely, it's the best that the enterprising Warner Brothers have handed out. Here you have something genuine. There is much of the humor of "Penrod," the melodrama of "Ninety-and-Nine," the home atmosphere of "The Old Homestead," the thrills of "The Fast Mail," the heart interest of "Over the Hill" and the exploitation possibilities of "School Days." Take all these elements together, roll them up into one ball and you will have an idea of the possibilities and the qualifications of "Rags to Riches."

Here's a production that is that big and that promising to warrant cancellation of any contract in order to show it at the best houses anywhere. Wesley Barry never appeared to better advantage. In this picture he is human—not a comedian. He is just the kind of boy you and I love. He typifies Young America and he is kept down to earth at all times. He is wonderful. Niles Welch comes within an ace of running away with the picture, for as Dumbell he is a wow. He is manly and the kind that will make your women patrons take a second look. Ruth Renick as the girl is beautifully splendid, her work being so realistic that you feel like hopping out of your seat and taking a couple of socks at those rubes who make life so miserable for her. Russell Simpson as the sheriff gives a wonderful character study as does also Dick Sutherland as "Bull." Here's a heavy character man who can lay claim to being the ugliest man in the movies and beat Wally Long and "Bull" Montana in the marathon for the same honors. Eulalie Jensen, Mrs. Mina D. Redman and Richard Tucker all do meritorious work.

The outstanding thriller in "Rags to Riches" is a sensational escape from a railroad train passing over a trestle followed by a plunge by Barry and Niles Welch to the depths below. This is one of the finest thrillers conceived for screen entertainment and literally throws the spectator out of his seat. Directorially, it is a credit to Wallace Worsley. The photography throughout is good. But it's the story, the direction plus a good, hard-working cast that make "Rags to Riches" the best production ever submitted by Harry Rapf. And he has every reason for being proud of it. Whatever the Warners grossed on "School Days" they should double on "Rags to Riches."

"The Trail of the Axe"

Dustin Farnum in Average Melodrama Distributed by American Releasing Corporation

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

"The Trail of the Axe," starring Dustin Farnum, is an average attraction with a melodramatic plot centering around the logging industry. The suspense varies in its success, as there is so much familiarity in what happens, and the outcome is obvious from the start.

Dustin Farnum as the hero, heads a gang of lumbermen, most unreliable of whom is his drunken brother. Once the fact has been mentioned that the logs must be kept moving or the works will be impaired, the spectator feels sure that the brother will start something villainous. A romance concerning the two men and the girl is introduced here without much novelty. The climax anticipated through most of the picture is slow in coming, and the scene of the explosion is really the beginning of the interesting part of the story. In the last part the action and spectacular value is considerably greater and the picture leaves a more favorable impression than created at the start.

Farnum is assisted by George Fisher in the unpromising role of the brother. He and other members of the cast including Winifred Kingston as the girl help substantially to make the scenes interesting.

The Cast

Dave Malkern	Dustin Farnum
Betty Somers	Winifred Kingston
Jim Malkern	George Fisher
Doctor Somers	Jos. J. Dowling

Story by Ridgewood Cullum.
Scenario Not Credited.
Direction by Ernest C. Warde.
Length, 4,320 Feet.

The Story

Dave Malkern's dissolute brother Jim adds to the troubles of Dave's lumber camp, Dave having given him a job there. Dave is eager for him to reform because of Jim's engagement to Betty Somers, whom Dave secretly adores. Jim's continued backsliding forces Dave to eject him, whereupon Jim plots to dynamite the sawmill. In the confusion a giant log pinions Dave, who heroically escapes and traces Jim to Betty's in time to save him from the fury of his workmen. However, Dave cannot turn his own brother over to the law, so allows him to escape, while Betty at last realizes where her true love lies.

"The Man She Brought Back"

Drama of Mounted Police on Reformation Theme Made by Playgoers Pictures

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Reformation of a coward is the theme in this picture of the Northwest Mounted Police which Playgoers has produced. Minus the moral argument, the story would be more plausible, but the sentimental appeal would not be as great. Therefore, in consideration of the popularity of this type of attraction in many localities this fault may seem inconsequential.

Most of the action is out-doors in a snow country and concerns the attempts, unsuccessful and successful, of a police recruit in trailing his man. His failure because of being attacked by four men in ambush presumably, registers as cowardice and it is this angle to the story that will not be acceptable to all. The rest of the action hinges upon the recruit's determination to prove that he is worthy of the ranks of the Royal Mounted and to the love of the woman who is waiting for him. Since he will at no point in the story be regarded as a coward by some, the argument is weak. However, the picture is entertaining and the emphasis upon ideals and sentiment will have a strong appeal to some.

Earle Fox handles his trying role splendidly. One of the finest performances is given by Frank Losee, a commanding figure as the old philosopher whose teachings have an important bearing on the plot.

The Cast

John Ramsey.....Earle Fox
Margo .....Doris Miller
Fenton.....Frank Losee
Major Shanley.....Charles Mackay
Songatawa.....Donald Russ
Sergeant Hawkins.....Harry Lee
Bruce Webster.....Frederick Burton

Story and Scenario by Jasper Ewing Brady Direction by Charles Miller
Length, 4,792 Feet

The Story

John Ramsey seeks adventure in the Northwest by joining the R. N. W. M. P. But there is a cowardly streak in him which, however, does not show itself during his months of training. He wins the heart of Margo, daughter of the commander of the Division. A guard is killed by a member of a smuggling gang. John is given a chance to "get his man" and win his stripes, but he fails and is discharged in disgrace.

Margo's faith in him wavers for a time, but courage comes to him. Then, alone and on his own responsibility, he goes out after his man—and comes back with two—one the murderer, the other the smuggler leader.

Exploitation Angles: The comeback angle will be the best to use on this story, telling how Ramsey falls down, and not telling too many particulars of his fight back.

"Face to Face"

Quiet, Effective Treatment of Murder Mystery in Playgoers' Attraction

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

A murder mystery without melodrama is the unusual achievement of this Playgoers' feature, "Face to Face." The quiet, unsensational manner in which the riddle is solved creates keen interest and reflects credit upon the director. It should appeal to a discriminating class of patrons.

Naturalness in the performance seems to be the contribution of everyone in the cast. Marguerite Marsh has an interesting role as the friend of the family who follows her intuition and is able to solve the mystery. She handles it with intelligence and poise. Besides that she is exceptionally pretty. Coit Albertson has an important but rather stilted role and shows a sensitiveness in his interpretation that gives individuality to the part.

It is more in the manner of handling the subject-matter than in the story that the merit lies. It has a conventional opening without much promise of unusual developments, but before long the style of presenting the drama becomes impressive and the solution of the mystery a matter of i teresting speculation. The explanation of the murder, when it does come, is not entirely convincing but this is largely offset by the entertainment value of what precedes.

The Cast

Helen Marsley.....Marguerite Marsh
Jack Weston.....Coit Albertson
J. W. Weston.....Richard Stewart
Grace Weston.....Edna Holman
Martin Hartley.....Joseph Marba
Bert Manners.....William Kendall
Cleo Rand.....Frances White

Story, Scenario and Direction Not Credited.
Length, 4,587 Feet.

The Story

Bert Manners is being tried for the murder of John Weston. Evidence is against him. Helen Marsley school chum of the dead man's daughter and in love with his son, Jack, does some investigating. In the midst of the trial she rushes into the courtroom with evidence that shows how Manners shot at his own reflection in a mirror. A letter found in Hartley's room, written by Weston to his son, explains his suicide and gives the location of certain bonds. Hartley confesses to stealing the bonds and keeping the suicide secret so as to hide his theft.

Exploitation Angles: Play up Miss Marsh and then sell the unusual type of detective story. Painting the lobby and other mirrors will give point to the title with proper lines.

"June Madness"

Metro's Vehicle for Viola Dana, a Frivolous Comedy-Drama of the Popular Type

Viola Dana as the high-strung heroine in frivolous comedy-drama has set a style in pictures that is distinctively her own, and "June Madness" is a good example. Where light, spirited entertainment is popular this Metro feature will be a good investment.

It should be easy to capitalize on certain scenes showing the star in some of her most flashing moods. Nuptial altars have been deserted before, but seldom as effectively from the comedy standpoint as by this determined young heroine who gets herself a black eye in the process. Her defiant march down a public street afterward is an audience-getter. This has already been proved. Jazz plays a prominent part in the setting and the cabaret scene features Miss Dana, if not as a great dancer, at least as a great entertainer. The dance ends with an informal charge into the arms of the orchestra leader and the picture ends with a more successful altar in view.

Harry Beaumont, the director, has moulded the material to fit the star, he has made the comedy snappy and the production attractive. Good lighting and alluring settings are the rule. Bryant Washburn heads a cast of well-defined types and gets more comedy than might

She meets Ken Pauling in his car, after a few minutes of being pursued by the curious public, and goes to the cafe where his orchestra plays. Hamilton Peeke, reporter on a scandal sheet, is keeping track of her movements and persuades the manager of the cafe to feature her in a dance, as the premiere danseuse is absent on that particular night. Clytie does the dance, then her mother appears! She announces that she is going to marry Ken, and after a few hectic adventures she does so. Peeke promises not to expose her, for a consideration.

"The Man Who Played God"

United Artists' Production, Starring George Arliss, is One of Screen's Finest Achievements

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Excellent from every angle is "The Man Who Played God," George Arliss' latest production for United Artists. Whether considered from the standpoint of star, story, cast, direction, technique, artistry, acting or general entertainment value, and doubly so because of its fine moral effect, this picture is a credit to the screen.

Here is a picture that should please any type of audience and cause them to feel better for having seen it. Probably no picture has a greater or better balanced amount of the various elements which go to make up fine screen entertainment. There is a striking theme based on an unusual idea and developed with a minimum of explanation along straight-forward lines. There are strong dramatic values, pathos, and clean-cut ingenious comedy naturally developed and not just dragged in. It is all in keeping with the sincerity which is evident throughout the picture.

It will probably surprise many to see George Arliss cast as a lover, but he does it exceedingly well. His is the love of a man of mature years who is willing to sacrifice himself in the belief that by so doing he will bring greater happiness to the woman he loves. Throughout the picture his acting is superb and he is assisted by a highly competent cast. Ann Forrest is attractive and portrays with great depth of feeling the role of the wife who continues to worship her husband even after she believes he has changed and ceased to love her. Effie Shannon gives a fine performance as the hero's sister, and Edward Earle is well cast as a youthful lover. Ivan Simpson is especially fine as a very lovable old family retainer, and Margaret Seddon and J. D. Walsh, as an elderly couple, contribute a pathetic scene that will tug at the heart strings. Little Miriam Battista and smaller Mickey Bennett ably furnish the delightful humor of childhood which supplies the comedy element.

The use of lip-reading by the hero, when he loses his hearing, furnishes a unique touch which greatly enhances the interest; in fact, the theme is built on it. For it is by this means that he comes to believe that he is a burden to his wife, and later it is by the same means that what he reads on the lips of others less fortunate than himself brings about his regeneration through service to others.

Great credit is due to Harmon Weight for the manner in which he has directed this production. Art Director Clark Robinson and Photographer Harry Fischbeck have also done effective work, beautiful but unobtrusive, and which in a picture with a less absorbing theme would command greater attention from the spectators.

If you have in your town any persons who are hostile or lukewarm to the screen you can safely invite them to see this picture with the assurance that they will go away praising it for the absolutely clean and high-class manner in which it is handled and the lesson it teaches that in bringing happiness to others you bring happiness to yourself. Without losing its value as entertainment, it is a picture with which you can attract clergymen and welfare workers and civic bodies, and which will prove excellent in schools and churches as well.

Length, 5,855 feet.

The Story

John Arden, a musician at the height of his glory married Marjorie Blaine. Soon thereafter while about to give a private concert two anarchists throw a bomb at two royal guests who are present. The concussion causes Arden to lose his hearing. Returning home, he learns lip reading and what he reads on the lips of a guest leads him to believe he is a burden to his young wife. He decides to take his own life but is saved by Carter who attracts his attention to flowers in the park opposite. With the aid of field glasses he reads what the wayfarers on the benches are saying, finds they are worse off than he and starts to help them. This service to others brings about his own regeneration. His wife who has temporarily left him returns, but again his lip reading makes him believe that she sticks to him from duty, not love. In a church where he has gone to inspect a new organ he learns the depth of his wife's love and a fall brings back his lost sense of hearing.

Warner Brothers' "Rags to Riches" constitutes a genuine tribute to all who took a hand in its making. It is one of those rare quality pictures that should go over in any kind of house, for it is made up of incidents that are so realistic and heart-rending that they make their appeal to the masses. Wesley Barry is at his best, while Niles Welch does a bit of acting that ranks him among the cleverest leading he-men of the screen. Harry Rapf's production is a credit to the producer and brilliantly directed. Wallace Worsley can proudly refer to it as one of his best pictures. The story is a strong one, with a capable cast that tells it intelligently.—R. F.

Neal Hart in Conventional Western Melodrama Made by William Steiner

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

A square-shooter, a wicked rancher and a stolen girl are the important and familiar figures in this Western produced by William Steiner and starring Neal Hart. While the picture is somewhat slow in starting, it swings into more interesting action as it proceeds and toward the last has some good suspense.

The need of fresh material for Neal Hart Westerns has been more or less apparent recently. In this the star is handicapped by the same lack. Given a more original story, his likeable personality and sincerity which are a great aid in steering this vehicle toward popular favor, would prove a big force.

Sheep-raising on a Western mesa is the trend of the argument. There are a number of effective scenes, some good riding in which Hart and his splendid horse take high honors and enough dynamiting and shooting to promise at least a few moments of real excitement.

The Cast

The Story

Table Top Ranch is a sheep ranch owned by Kate Bowers. Some of the neighboring ranchmen desirous of making trouble object to her raising sheep, in spite of an early agreement made with them by her father. John Marvin stands up for her and gets into a fight with Palque Powel, a bully who pretends to be in love with Kate. Powell sets a dynamite trap in Marvin's path, but does not succeed in injurying him. Marvin regains consciousness in time to rescue Kate from the marauding ranchers, and after a brave fight rounds up all the villains and wins her for himself.

"Do and Dare"

Thrills, Beauty and Fun Splendidly Combined in Fox Western With Tom Mix

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

For thrills and beauty it would be hard to improve upon the opening reel of "Do and Dare," which is Tom Mix as everybody likes him. This is not a slur on the rest of the picture as it is all fine entertainment. But the first part is so exhilarating and spectacular that it stands as a striking example of an excellent Western thriller.

It requires only an ordinary imagination to live again the dangers and romance of the days of Buffalo Bill while watching these particular scenes. Tom Mix and his faithful Tony hardly win less admiration than the famous hero of the West. With the wide slopes and valleys as a stage and a troupe of splendid riders, the star's dashing riding is a spectacle that is a wonderful cure for boredom.

Burlesque plays an important part in the remainder of the film. South American politics underlies the action and furnishes the inspiration for many clever subtitles. Mix's dare-deviltry is unusually entertaining because of the light manner in which everything has been handled. He is, of course, the guileless American in the midst of intriguing officials. His amiable performance is contrasted by the tragic mien of the others. These contribute splendid support and the direction is excellent.

"Do and Dare" will be appreciated by anyone who likes thrills, action, and fun.

The tale is that of a young westerner who is gripped by the fires of romance when he hears of the adventures of his forbear, Kit Carson Boone, the pioneer and scout.

Urge on by his emotions the youth soon finds himself in an airplane carrying a military message to the leader of a revolution in the southern continent. What happens to him when he faces a firing squad and later the most beautiful senorita east of the Andes is pictured in what follows.

Exploitation Angles: Play on the steadily growing popularity of the star, and sell hard the new angles of the story, giving emphasis to the fact that this is decidedly different from the conventional western type with which his name is best associated.

"Under Two Flags"

Spectacular Universal-Jewel Film Presents Priscilla Dean in Stirring Melodramatic Story

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Once again has Ouida's stirring romantic novel, "Under Two Flags," been made into a motion picture, and small wonder, for this melodramatic story of the love of a half-caste French-Arabian "daughter of the regiment" for a self-exiled Englishman is excellent screen material. This time, Universal has used the story in a Jewel production, starring Priscilla Dean, which is high in entertainment value.

Director Tod Browning has made an excellent production. He has followed the novel closely, taking full advantage of the stirring dramatic situations, picturesque background of Algiers, the interesting character development, and the stirring climax in the wild ride of the girl across the desert to save the man she loves.

The role of the girl, Cigarette, provides Priscilla Dean with one of the best opportunities of her screen career and she gives a fine portrayal, bringing to the part the spontaneity and quickly changing moods of the child of the desert as created by the author. Effective, too, in the contrasting opposite role of the slow-moving deliberate English soldier who has shouldered the blame for a brother's crime, is James Kirkwood. Stuart Holmes is well cast as the villainous colonel and Ethel Grey Terry portrays with dignity and charm the role of the English Princess, and John Davidson gives a good performance as the suave and polished but deceitful Sheik. The subordinate characters are all capably handled.

Pictorially, the production is attractive, the fierce ride of Cigarette across the desert at night on a white horse, closely followed by a horde of Arabs, is especially fine. There is a tendency toward over-stressing the details in building up the story in the early reels, which slightly retards the development, but this serves to heighten the terrific climax, where Cigarette, at the end of her wild ride, throws herself between the firing squad and her lover and receives the bullet intended for him. There are times also when an additional sub-title would make the action clearer, but as a whole, the picture provides excellent screen entertainment and should prove a hit with the majority of audiences, especially those liking stirring, thrilling melodrama.

The settings are spectaular and effective, one representing a view of the city of Algiers, while there are numerous striking scenes in the streets, bazaars and cafes of this Oriental city.

Exhibitors will find this production offers excellent exploitation possibilities, and in addition to containing a Sheik element, it is based on a novel which is a classic of romantic literature, which has been widely read for more than a generation.

Length, 7,407 feet.

The Story

With the French Legion in Algiers is Cigarette, daughter of the regiment, a half-breed girl. A stranger comes on the scene and joins the legion but declined to give his right name, or tell anything about himself. He is the only one who ignores Cigarette. This piques her and in trying to attract him, she loses her own heart. The arrival of the Princess Corona who was a friend of the stranger in the past arouses Cigarette's jealousy. A neighboring sheik who has formed an alliance with the French is attracted to Cigarette. Mistrusting him and believing there is a plot against France on foot, she goes with him to his harem, learns the details, also that the stranger through the influence of the villainous colonel and the Sheik has been convicted for treason. Then begins her wild ride across the desert at night culminating in the saving of Algiers for the French but in her own death at the hands of the soldiers, when she throws herself in front of her lover.

Exploitation Angles: "Under Two Flags" has been played on practically every stage in the country. It is as well known as Uncle Tom and will have the same general appeal. All you have to do is to announce the title and stress the bigness of the production, but you must do this thoroughly to get your best return.

A fine production from every standpoint is "The Man Who Played God," a United Artists' production, starring George Arliss. Its unique theme, fine acting, strong drama, and fine photography and settings, combined with excellent humor and pathos, should interest any type of audience. In addition to its high entertainment value, it is a picture with which you can attract to your theatre those who are hostile or lukewarm to the screen with the assurance that they will like it, and it will secure praise from clergymen, welfare workers, civic bodies and schools because of the fine moral it points, that in helping others you bring happiness to yourself.—C. "The Better Man Wins"

Sanford Production, Starring Pete Morrison, Has Entertaining Story

"The Better Man Wins" stars Pete Morrison in a Western that holds the interest because of a convincing story. It has picturesque scenery, a sympathetic cast and variety of mood. It makes no effort at being an elaborate production, but has the dimensions of the average Western with perhaps more than the average appeal.

The story is a smooth-running romance until the vamp motive enters. From then on it is a test of feminine charm, whether the cowboy hero will be faithful to his old sweetheart or will be won over by the modern cave woman. The story is interestingly told with Dorothy Woods and Grace Crosby giving realistic performances of the two contrasting roles. Pete Morrison is a sincere type, well suited to his part. A cabaret scene toward the close, where the hero gallops in on horseback and rescues the girl from unhappy surroundings, is a flash of picturesque melodrama that gives the final punch.

"Pink Gods"

Fine Settings and a Thrilling Climax Are Features of Paramount Film

Reviewed by T. S. daPonte

Penrhyn Stanlaws has put a lot of artistic beauty into "Pink Gods." The settings are exceptional, from a standpoint of artistry, and are entirely in accord with what one might expect in a production directed by him.

The gowns of the women are in the latest mode, and will hold much interest for feminine fans, and they are displayed to the best advantage on actresses so capable of wearing them gracefully as Bebe Daniels and Anna Q. Nilsson.

Acting of the entire cast is to be commended, especially that of Miss Daniels, Miss Nilsson, James Kirkwood and Raymond Hatton, whose roles, naturally, were outstanding features, as theirs were the principal parts.

The theme gives ample scope for settings of magnitude as well as lavishness, and the director has taken full advantage of both opportunities. At the end the story works up to a climax that holds the full interest, but there are stretches before this is reached that seem somewhat too long drawn out, and lacking in action.

The dynamite explosion that wrecks the underground palace near the end of the film is a notable piece of work, and the wrecked edifice gives a realistic impression of what had been a building of rare magnificence.

The Cast

Lorraine Temple.....Bebe Daniels
John Quelch.....James Kirkwood
Lady Margot Cork.....Anna Q. Nilsson
Jim Wingate.....Raymond Hatton
Louis Barney.....Adolph Menjou
Mark Escher.....Guy Oliver
Col. Pat Temple.....George Cowl
Dick Cork.....Arthur Trimble

The Story

John Quelch, owner of vast diamond mines, comes to know Lorraine Temple, whose craze for diamonds is so strong that she will go to any length to obtain them. Quelch invites her to his underground palace, and shows her a fortune in gems. She makes advances to him, but he repulses her, telling her he had only brought her there to show her the error of her way. At that moment an explosion in the mine wrecks the palace, and injures Mrs. Temple so that she dies within a few moments, but before her death she thanks Quelch for the lesson he has taught her.

Exploitation Angles: Sell Miss Daniels on the strength of her hit in "Nice People," and get interest in the name of the producer, whose work will appeal to a class of persons not particularly interested in pictures. Play this art angle strongly.

"The Girl Who Ran Wild"

Universal Picturizes Bret Harte's Delightful Story, "M'liss," With Gladys Walton

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Universal has taken one of Bret Harte's character studies of the West in the days of '49 and developed it into a picture that will be enjoyed by many. On the stage the story was known as "M'liss." The picture's greatest charm is the prevalence of the author's individual point of view and a feeling of authenticity about it that is conspicuous because it is often lacking in Westerns.

"M'liss," the girl who trusted no one, is amusingly played by Gladys Walton. In picturing the defiant characteristics of the girl, Miss Walton has been directed to exaggerate at times and affect an extreme manner of hardness that seems unnatural. However, her charm and sincerity counts greatly. Similarly the strength of the author and his words as quoted in the subtitles hold, regardless of anything else.

One of the original angles and one that provokes some delicious comedy is the silent feud between "M'liss," the outcast, and Clytie, the coyest of village belles, both in love with the schoolmaster. It culminates in the scene where "M'liss" expresses her supreme contempt by demolishing the doll that reminds her of Clytie. The school-room scenes are entertainingly done. Vernon Steele, as the schoolmaster, has the quiet strength and humor that makes his character real, and the others, too, have been cast with an appreciation of the picturesque quality of the original characters.

The Cast

M'liss.....Gladys Walton
"Bummer" Smith.....Marc B. Robbins
The Schoolmaster.....Vernon Steele
Calaveras John.....Joseph Dowling
Johnny Cake.....William Burress

Adapted from "M'liss" the Story by Bret Harte
Scenario by Rupert Julian
Direction by Rupert Julian
Length, 4,506 Feet

The Story

"M'liss" is suddenly made an orphan when her father is murdered by the brother of the girl's mother. Her uncle's friends, Calaveras John and Johnny Cake, agree to take care of the girl. This proves difficult, as she resents all of their advances as well as every other person's. Finally the new school teacher attracts her enough to influence her to get an education. She finds that Clytie, the village coquette, is in love with him. After being convinced that he loves Clytie she tries to run away, but does not go far and the schoolmaster finds her. When he proves in the town saloon that he loves "M'liss" by fighting the man who is about to take her away, she is finally convinced of his sincerity.

"The Long Chance"

Melodramatic Picture Based on a Story by Peter B. Kyne is Presented by Universal

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

A Peter B. Kyne story, with the same title, furnishes the basis for "The Long Chance," a Universal feature presented without stars, but featuring Henry Walthall, Marjorie Daw and Ralph Graves. It develops into a melodramatic thriller in the later reels, with plenty of action and considerable suspense and should prove satisfactory to audiences liking this type of picture.

The earlier reels move along at a leisurely pace, enlivened by bursts of action. The outstanding figure in the production is Henry B. Walthall, cast as a professional gambler who silently loves and serves a woman who loves another. In the end, he gives his life for the daughter of this woman, though his sacrifice proves to be needless. Walthall gives a good performance in this role. Marjorie Daw is attractive to look at and capably portrays a dual role, while Ralph Graves is satisfactory as a youthful and impetuous lover.

The story is laid in the Mojave desert and nearby, giving opportunities for fine backgrounds and an effective sand-storm scene. The photography is high class. There is a lot of killing in this film, which starts with a murder and ends with the gambler and the spy killing each other in a running fight, while the murderer is killed by an Indian.

Length 4,331 Feet

The Story

John Corbaly and Carey, who is known as "Boston," discover a valuable lode of gold. In a fight over its division Carey kills Corbaly. Mrs. Corbaly, who waits at home for her husband's return, is silently loved by Hennage, a gambler. Twenty years pass, and when Mrs. Corbaly dies she leaves her daughter Donna in Hennage's care. A young mining engineer comes to the town, falls in love with Donna, rescues her from some thugs and she learns to love him in return. Information which Hennage obtains from a garrulous drunken spy causes him to believe that the young engineer is not sincere in his love, and that the attempt to buy the mine is backed by ulterior purposes on the part of someone else. The young chap convinces him that he is sincere and starts out to locate the mine. He is followed by the spy and shot. The real party who desires the property appears on the scene and proves to be the man who murdered Corbaly. He is killed by an Indian servant and Hennage in a running pistol duel kills the spy and is himself killed.

Excellent entertainment is provided in the Universal-Jewel production, "Under Two Flags," starring Priscilla Dean. It is a colorful melodrama laid in the picturesque surroundings of Algiers, with many striking scenes and an unusually thrilling climax where the girl, after a terrific night ride across the desert pursued by Arabs, saves the life of her lover as he is facing a firing squad, by receiving in her own breast the bullet intended for him. The star has one of the best roles of her career and is assisted by a fine cast. If your audiences like romantic melodrama with fine acting, stirring action, beautifully produced, they will like "Under Two Flags."—C. S. S.

"Barbed Wire"

Thrilling Drama and Clever Love Story in Aywon Pictures, Starring Jack Hoxie

Reviewed by C. W. McCarty

A thrilling drama of the old West, with Jack Hoxie as the star, making the most of his ability to ride and fight—that, in brief is "Barbed Wire," a picture which shows some of the enmity that existed between the cattlemen and the farmers in the early days of the West. A clever little love story, which runs through the picture, makes it all the more interesting.

The climax to the action comes when a horse is brought into the courtroom to be identified and Hoxie leaps on it and rides through a window to safety. The story comes to an end when Hoxie and the villain meet in a life-and-death struggle on the edge of a high cliff. And, of course, there is the girl who won Hoxie's heart, and is the hero's reward.

Length, 5,000 feet.

The Story

Jack Harding defies a villainous gang by fencing in his claim with barbed wire. Headed by Bart Moseby the gang plans to get him. Harding hides in his sweetheart's room to overhear their plans but is double-crossed by one of them who commits a crime and leaves Harding's hat and gun as evidence. To save her son at the trial, Harding's mother holds up the court while her son leaps from the window to his horse. A fight between Harding and Moseby follows, ending in the latter's death and Harding's freedom.

News and Reviews of Short Subjects and Serials

Second of the "Our Gang" Comedies Heads Pathe Schedule for October 8

Another one of the series of "Our Gang" comedies, the new kiddie and animal series, entitled "Fire Fighters" heads Pathe's schedule for week of October 8. Tne first one of this series "One Terrible Day" was shown at the Capitol Theatre in New York and receives great praise from both the daily press and trade journal reviewers. "Fire Fighters" contains the same cast including Sunshine Sammy, tough little Jackie Conlin, freckled Mickie Daniels and a number of other four-footed friends.

The Hal Roach comedy for the same week is "The Upper-Cut" featuring Paul Parrott assisted by Jobyna Ralston. In trying to convince his girl that he is a fighter he bluffs with clothes store dummies and is accidentally forced into a real prize fight. There are a lot of clever comedy situations and many laughs in the burlesque prize fight which follows. Will Hays' recent visit to Hollywood occupies a considerable portion of Screen Snapshots No. 10 and serves to introduce several stars including Harold Lloyd, Bebe Daniels, William Desmond, Eric Von Stroheim, and Baby Peggy. Other scenes show Jack Pickford and his new bride, also Mary and Douglas and Charlie Chaplin. Lon Chaney is also shown making up for various types of characters.

Pathe Review No. 176, released October 8 has a beautiful subject showing summer ruled over by the goddess of the season. It is described as "An Interpretive Idyl in Motion Photography." The raising of pheasants, manufacture of chinese dolls, a novelty in clay and a color section dealing with the sacred grotto at Lourdes, France, complete the reel.

Fox Selects Six Varied Subjects to Inaugurate Educational Series

A wide variety of subjects marks the first six of the new series of Fox Educationals which were released to exhibitors beginning September 24. They are "Alligator Hunting and Farming," "Thrills and Spills," "Volcanoes of the World" "Water Sports," "The Story of Ice" and "Ancient Rome."

"Alligator Hunting and Farming" is an unusually thrilling subject which was filmed in the wilds of Central America and the everglades of Florida, one of the scenes shows a hand-to-hand combat between a man and a big alligator. Another very thrilling number of this series is "Volcanoes of the World" filmed during aeroplane flights over Aetna, Popocatepetl, Vesuvius and other volcanoes in all parts of the world.

"Water Sports" and "Thrills and Spills" show sports, and daring feats on water and on ice and snow, while "Ancient Rome" is said to be unusually complete from a historical standpoint. "The Story of Ice" which is colored is notable for the beauty of the photography.

Fox Film Corporation announces that great interest is being shown in this series of Educationals by educators throughout the country, many letters of congratulation being received from heads of colleges and high schools.

Mr. Fox has also received congratulations and commendation for the inauguration of this series from men prominent in public life such as Secretary of Labor Davis, Secretary of Commerce Hoover and former Governor Alfred E. Smith, of New York.

Among the prominent educators who have enthusiastically commended this series are: Professor Wilson, Director of Vocational Education in New York; Mrs. Helen Jaeger, Assistant Director of Domestic Art, Board of Education, Buffalo; J. Stanley Durkee, President of Howard University, Washington, D. C.; A. H. Ward, Head of Harris Institute Library, Woonsockett, R. I.; George D. Gossard, President of Lebanon Valley College, Anneville, Pa.; Wilfred H. Ringer, Head of Gloucester High School; R. J. Baldwin, Director of Michigan Agricultural College; Lee L. Driver, Director of Education, Harrisburg; J. T. Giles, Supervisor of High Schools of State of Wisconsin; and Prof. Murphy, of Regis College, Denver, Col.

Work Begun on Sixth Comedy on New Educational-Christie Fall Schedule

With the announcement of the fourth and fifth of the series, the enlarged program of Educational-Christie comedies for 1922-3 season is well under way. "Ocean Swells," a story about life on a houseboat, featuring Neal Burns and Charlotte Merriam, supported by Bebe Blackburn, Sylvia Ashton, Don Bailey and Henry Murdock, is the fourth of the series. The fifth, "Choose Your Weapons," is a satire on the Graustark type of story, Bobby Vernon is featured, supported by Charlotte Stevens, Earl Rodney, Maude Truax and Lincoln Plumme. The sixth in this series is under way, but has not been titled.

The first two of this series, "That Son of a Shiek" and "Pardon My Glove" have already been released and "Let 'Er Run," featuring Dorothy Devore, and "Ocean Swells" are scheduled for October release. At the Granada Theatre in San Francisco, for what is said to be the first time a prologue was used for a comedy, this was done in connection with "That Son of a Sheik." From D. L. Hill, manager of the Pickford Theatre in San Diego, comes the report that this picture is a knockout and that Christie has certainly set a mark to shoot at in this one. Neal Burns and Viora Daniel are featured in this.

The other September release, "Pardon My Glove," featuring Bobby Vernon and Vera Steadman, is a college and prize-fight story.

Used a Prologue

Another good showman who realizes the value of a good short subject as a business-getter is the manager of the Granada Theatre, San Francisco, who staged a special prologue in connection with the showing of the Educational-Christie comedy "That Son of a Sheik," and the experiment proved a decided success.

At the same time, in Akron, Ohio, because experience had shown him that there is strong box-office pulling power in Christie comedies, C. P. Murphy, manager of the Strand Theatre, used electric signs on both sides of his marquee to advertise that he was showing this brand of fun-makers.

Frank L. Brown, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Long Beach, Cal., also used his electric sign to play up a short subject, the Metro comedy "A. Ladies' Man" starring Bull Montana.

When you have a good short subject, and there are a lot of them available, don't be afraid to exploit and advertise them—you won't regret it.

Release Date Set for "Speed"

Pathe announces that "Speed," the newest serial starring Charles Hutchison will be released beginning October 22. This serial was produced by George B. Seitz and it is declared that it lives up to its title with plenty of clean-cut thrills and fast-moving action.

Lucy Fox appears in the role opposite the star. She has already appeared in Hutchison serials and made a good impression both because of her beauty and ability and proved a good second to the star in the stunt scenes. The heavy role has been intrusted to Harry Semels who has had similar roles in several previous Seitz serials. Others in the cast are John Webb Dillon, Cecile Bonnel, and Winifred Verina, the latter the winner of a beauty contest in New York.

Prominent Minister on Fox Staff

A prominent member of the Fox Educational division, who has been associated with it since its inception, is the Rev. Dr. Lincoln H. Caswell, who is pastor of the Crawford Memorial Church, New York. He first attracted the attention of the industry by his address against censorship before the legislative committee at Albany.

Dr. Caswell is an enthusiastic believer in the value of the motion picture and uses them in his church. He was prominent in staging the thirty-day demonstration of the power of pictures at the Methodist World Conference in Des Moines in 1920 and later at Ocean Grove, N. J., and his work has established him as an authority on motion pictures in the church field.

F. G. BECKER

Producing a series of two-reelers starring little Arthur Trimble.

Ethel Barrymore in "Snapshots"

Ethel Barrymore, one of America's greatest actresses, who is just about to begin a New York engagement in a new play, is shown in Starland Revue No. 13, released by F. B. O. on October 15. Another well-known actress also seen in this number is Nora Bayes, the musical comedy queen.

A baseball game between the N. V. A. and the colored actors in "Shuffle Along," scenes from the Broadway play "The Torch-Bearers" and views of rehearsals of the Greenwich Village Follies, are also included in this number.

Semon Comedy Based on Novel Idea

Larry Semon's newest comedy for Vitagraph is "The Sleuth" which is said to differ widely from this star's usual line of work. It is described as a story of the unexpected; everything happens but the very thing for which the spectator is looking. As a result of trying it on two or three audiences which were able to anticipate some of the action, it is believed that it is now impossible for the audience to tell just what the star will do in the next scene.

Unique Record

Educational reports the establishment of a unique record for its short subjects at Loew's State Theatre in Newark. This house was opened last December, and ever since, for forty-five weeks, a two reel Educational comedy has been on the bill. In addition several other Educational short subjects have been shown in that theatre.

"Snub" on Broadway

Rialto Theatre, New York, has booked Snub Pollard's first two-reel comedy "365 Days" for week of October 1. While single reel subjects featuring this popular Pathe comedian have been shown on New York's main street on several occasions, this booking marks his Broadway debut in comedies of greater length.

Fox Offers Lee Kids in a Reissue

Those clever youngsters, Jane and Katherine Lee, have been brought back to the screen by Fox Film Corporation in re-edited versions of some of their former successes. The pictures have been edited by Ralph Spence and cut down to two reels. The first of the series is called "A Pair of Aces," and is made up of situations and bits of business culled from several of the original features.

Jane's Welsh Rarebit dream furnishes considerable of the fun. While slumbering uneasily in her luxurious bed, she goes through a series of startling adventures, including a balloon ascension in which she takes a parachute drop.

Newsy Notes

M. G. Iharra, of the Liberty Film Company of Havana, Cuba, has signed a contract with Arrow Film Corporation for the Cuban rights to "Nan of the North", a serial starring Ann Little.

The various companies on the Mack Sennett comedy lot are preparing for an increase in production which is to begin shortly. It is said that several new faces will be seen in the Sennett comedy casts, including many players who are already well known to picture theatre audiences.

Director Robert Eddy has started work on the eighth of the series of twelve Plum Center comedies at the Paul Gerson studios in San Francisco. These comedies are headed by Dan Mason and released by F. B. O. The newest picture deals with a business rivalry between Pop Tuttle and Nosey Nichols. Wilna Hervey is leading woman, and A. H. Geihler, formerly Los Angeles representative of Moving Picture World, furnished the scenario.

"Topics of the Day", in a current issue, comes out as a champion of the transient motorist in a section entitled "Fair Play on the Highway".

Charles Urban, president of the Kineto Company of America and the Urban Motion Picture Industries, will return to New York on September 30, after a six weeks' business trip to Europe. This will complete his eighteenth trip across the Atlantic.

The first of the series of "Our Gang" pictures distributed by "Pathe" entitled "One Terrible Day," and also this company's series of Johnny Jones comedies, are being booked by first run houses throughout the country.

"Blazes" will be the third of the new series of Mermaid Comedies which Jack White is making for Educational. Lige Conley and Elinor Lynn are featured. It is being directed by Del Lord, and will be released in October following "The Steeplechaser."

Helen Howell, recently of the Alt and Howell comedy company of Hollywood, is playing a prominent part in the eighth of the series of Plum Centre comedies which Paul Gerson is making for F. B. O.

Lee Moran recently returned from a location trip in the hills near Los Angeles where be is working on his newest Century Comedy, "Camping Out." Al Herman is directing.

Joe Plunkett, manager of the Strand, New York, has booked the first Fox comedy starring Lupino Lane, entitled "The Reporter."

Hunt Stromberg has completed the second of the series of comedies starring "Bull Montana" which Metro will distribute. It is "A Punctured Prince." Hugh Fay is directing and Maryon Aye is leading woman.

Pathe is preparing special exploitation aids for the two Will Rogers' two reelers which it will distribute, "The Ropin' Fool" and "Fruits of Faith." The former is scheduled for release October 29.

Alf Goulding is directing Baby Peggy in "Peg of the Movies," a Century comedy for Universal release. The little star appears as a country girl who breaks into the movies.

The National Motion Picture League in its latest bulletin listed the Lloyd Hamilton comedy, "The Speeder," and "Toonerville Trials," both Educational releases, as "Family Films" recommended for all people of all ages.

Max Asher, the well-known comedian, has been engaged to appear in Century Comedies in the near future.

"The Skipper's Sermon," one of the Toonerville Comedies, and "The First Flivver," the third release of the Tony Sarg Almanac, have been scheduled by Educational for October release.

Urban Movie Chats No. 34

Among the interesting views in this Chat are some that show the big work that is undertaken in the making of certain moving picture productions. For instance, the remains of Babylon are seen—a Babylon built especially for the movies—after the story of the play has taken the actors on to some other location. A Japanese fishing village that has sprung up on the California Coast for the sole purpose of figuring in a film, is an interesting view, as well as a light-house which has served its purpose for some production and was then abandoned.

They fight one of the great battles of the World War all over again for the camera man to "shoot at," and the ruins of an Aztec city, which was built and thrived only within the space of a few weeks, look to be as old as any which might have been in existence at the time of the Spanish conquest.—T. S. daP.

"The Steeplechaser"

Educational is releasing a rather elaborate comedy with considerable action, in this Jack White Production in two reels. The subject-matter and the English atmosphere carries more of an appeal than the comedy. In places the humor seems thin and the purpose divided between plot and burlesque. Horse racing and the usual intrigue among the gamblers is the subject, with Lige Conley in the Chaplinesque role of the jockey and Jimmie Adams as the villain without a disguise. One of the most enthusiastic members of the cast is the horse and whenever he is in the foreground there is no difficulty in keeping interested.—M. K.

"Screen Snapshots No. 10"

The outstanding feature of this single reel magazine dealing with film people and distributed by Pathe is the meeting of Will Hays with the picture colony in Hollywood. This serves to introduce many celebrities including Harold Lloyd, Bebe Daniels, William Desmond, Eric Von Stronheim and Rupert Hughes. Another section of interest to fans shows Jack Pickford and his new bride Marilyn Miller together with Mary and Doug and Charlie Chaplin. Lon Chaney is shown demonstrating his wonderful ability in making up for character roles. This is one of the most interesting of this series.—C. S. S.

"White and Yellow"

Jack Mulhall has the featured role in Universal's new series of "Tales of the Fish Patrol," adapted from Jack London's stirring stories having the same title. This two-reel picture inaugurates the series and considerable of the footage is used for introducing the series. There is a good running fight in the night between two boats which serves to introduce what should develop in later numbers into a charming romance. Considered alone, this picture is somewhat lacking in the stirring action to be expected from London's stories which contain excellent material that will probably appear to better advantage in later numbers. As it is, this number is quite like the opening episode of a serial except for the fact that the suspense is not carried over to the next story.—C. S. S.

"The Pirate"

Lupino Lane's unique skill as a comedian scores again in this Fox release in two reels. As a minstrel in Venice he is a ragged romanticist, realizing the narrow line between pathos and humor, that always marks the work of the most successful comedian. He submits to a generous amount of ungentle treatment and gets some very ludicrous effects by contortionist stunts. The scenic backgrounds are another point of appeal. Watery streets, graceful porticos and picturesque costumes furnish an attraction that does not frequently accompany comedy. The last scenes on board ship give Lupino Lane the best chance for "emotional" acting and help to substantiate the impression that this is an exceptionally good comedy. Length, two reels.—M. K.

"Red Hot"

Live dogs and frankfurters furnish the fun in this amusing Mutt and Jeff cartoon comedy distributed by Fox. Our two heroes start out to sell "Hot Dogs" and are cautioned to bring back live ones. All goes well until they capture a pup. Its mother arouses all the dogs in the neighborhood and there is a scene which is like a burlesque of the assembling of the clansmen in "The Birth of a Nation." There are dogs and still more dogs everywhere, they set on Jeff while Mutt makes his escape. Jeff, however, gets the best of them and chases the whole lot into the frankfurter factory.—C. S. S.

"Kids and Skids"

A highly animated comedy in two reels featuring Jane and Katherine Lee. These two are cheerful exponents of the theory that just because a child is innocent-looking is no sign she is to be trusted. Whenever it is possible and often when it is not possible they are guilty of intrigue against their elders. The discovery of the baby brother provokes some good comedy but some of the rest of the action is not so well pointed. On the whole an amusing number. A Fox release, combining and condensing parts of former productions.—M. K.

"A Kickin' Fool"

Maudie, a mule with a strong propensity for kicking at the least provocation, is the star of this two-reel Century comedy distributed by Universal. There are a number of laughs, caused by action of a knockabout type in this comedy which is based on the rumpus the mule causes together with the fact that it persists in following Harry Sweet everywhere to his great embarrassment. An unusually clever bit is where the mule while emptying the contents of a bottle puts one of his front feet on a rail.—C. S. S.

"Twin Husbands"

While this Carter DeHaven comedy, the second of his series for F. B. O. is based on the familiar theme of having the hero pose as the husband of a girl who must produce a husband by a certain hour, it has been given some ingenious twists which make it a good laugh-getter. Particularly clever and amusing are the scenes in which Carter finds that his own wife's father is the girl's lawyer and he fools him by playing the roles of twin brothers, also the scene where standing in a doorway he has a terriffic fight with himself.—C. S. S.

"Starland Revue No. 11"

The most unique feature of this reel distributed by F. B. O. which deals with the stage is a section showing James Watts, the female impersonator, who dances and then has a mannekin made up like him, to go through the same steps. There are several interesting bits from the play "He Who Gets Slapped," also scenes showing a member of the "Strut Miss Lizzie" company playing poker with himself, Ted Lewis and His Band, and views of Coney Island. —C. S. S.

"His First Job"

This is the first of a series of single reel comedies to be released by Universal starring the clever boy actor Lewis Sargent who made a hit in "Huckleberry Finn." He is an ideal type for the role of the hero, a messenger boy. There is some good material in this comedy which promises well for the series as it develops, but due possibly to the introductory matter necessary for a new series, the action ends somewhat abruptly apparently in order to keep the film within one reel. Children especially will like this secies.—C. S. S.

Urban Movie Chats No. 35

Views of all parts of the world are shown in this Chat. It starts off with films of different parts of New York City, taken by a camera man from an airplane, and shows different sections of the city, most of which are in the crowded localities.

The making of elephant tusks into ivory utensils and ornaments is an interesting subject, and so are scenes among the Araphoe Indians on their reservations in Wyoming. Some birds, among which are the peacock displaying his plumage, have been filmed with fine results.—T. S. daP.

"Pathe Review No. 176"

Beautiful from an artistic and photographic standpoint is a section of this reel which depicts by means of soft-focus photography and double exposure the goddess of summer dancing among the flowers and trees in accordance with the Greek legend. Other interesting sections show the raising of pheasants at the New Jersey game farm, a street vendor making tiny dolls for the Chinese children, novelties in clay modeling and views in color of the celebrated grotto of Lourdes, France, famous as a shrine before which cripples are miraculously cured.—C. S. S.

"The Upper-Cut"

A burlesque prize-fight furnishes the title and opportunities for a number of laughs in this single reel Pathe comedy featuring Paul Parrott. It has been cleverly handled and considerable ingenuity displayed in working up the action. Parrott tries to make his girl believe he is a hero and beats up clothing store dummies, but is forced into a real fight in a ring, with laughable results. Though the burlesque fight is old screen material, considerable new matter that will get laughs has been introduced.—C. S. S.

"Fire Fighters"

Here is a picture that should prove a wonderful delight for the children and which because of its clean clever comedy should highly amuse grown-ups as well. It is a two-reeler distributed by Pathe and is the second of the "Our Gang" comedies introducing a clever cast of children headed by Sunshine Sammy and also a lot of clever animals. The opening scenes showing a duck, all dressed up, with walking cane, derby hat and everything, strutting around and trying to make love to a hen, is a scream, and the manner in which the gang discover a still, organize a fire department and use the "hooch" in trying to put out a supposed fire will bring many laughs. This picture contains a lot of clever laugh-getting material and keeps up the good record as a fun film established by the first of the series "One Terrible Day."—C. S. S.

"Home-Made Movies"

This Mack Sennett comedy with Ben Turpin has already demonstrated that it is literally a howling success. Some of the funniest effects conceivable are realized in "exposing" the movies. The author has particularized in the story of the frozen north. He disillusionizes the fan by showing that snow, icicles, sleigh-dog races and the atmosphere are sometimes artificial. In the first place the picture is a burlesque on the fly-by-night production. Its hastily-gathered material and "stars" bring one laugh after another. Many a faux pas is made in the taking, and the finished product as shown upon the screen is hilariously funny. A First National release in two reels.—M. K.

"The Challenge"

Here is another exceedingly clever "Out-of-the-Inkwell" cartoon comedy by Max Fleisher. As an actor, Mr. Fleischer shares honors with his clever little clown, the hero of this series. The clown wakes Fleischer up and when he scolds him the little fellow makes a slurring remark about the difference in their sizes. The artist then draws a cartoon of himself and in a prize fight chastises the clown who finally seeks safety in the inkwell.—C. S. S.

"The Fallen Archers"

William Tell and his famous shot inspired the comedy in this Mutt and Jeff cartoon, released by Fox. The arrow has a less noble destination, however, as a pig is the victim. As a laugh-getter, the cartoon is average. It concludes with some clever but familiar material in which Jeff meets with the angels and essays an esthetic dance.—M. K.

"Fresh Fish"

Entertainment more especially for children is provided in this Earl Hurd cartoon released by Educational. The humor is rather light and obvious, based upon juvenile efforts in making moving pictures. The actors as well as the public are unable to distinguish between the real scenery and the make-believe. They nearly drown, thereby adding an unexpected bit of realism to their film. Length, one reel.—M. K.

"The Fated Rivals"

This Paul Terry cartoon distributed by Pathe is handled with that artist's usual skill and cleverness. It is based on the adage that "None but the brave deserve the fair" and shows how a bashful swain loses his love to another but finally wins her back when he rushes to her rescue in time of need.—C. S. S.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Eliminating Outrages

E. E. Voels, Projectionist, Grand Theatre, Dubuque, Iowa, says:—

Damage to the amount of many thousands of dollars is done monthly through ignorance, laziness or willful wantonness on the part of those who pose as motion picture projectionists or "moving picture machine operators," but who are thoroughly incompetent even in the latter classification.

By "damage to film" I mean the punch holes we find by the dozen in many reels, the gummed paper stuck to the surface of from one to half a dozen film photographs, and worst of all, the ragged scratch marks made with some sharp instrument.

These are the "change-over" marks made by the incompetent or lazy disgraces to the profession of projection.

No real motion picture projectionist who takes pride in his work would ever dream of perpetrating such an insult to his profession. Even the competent "motion picture machine operator" would not do such a thing.

There are, of course, other causes of unnecessary damage, such as tin foil attached to one side of the film, which causes uneven shrinkage, and improperly made splices, etc., but the "change-over" atrocity is what I especially have in mind.

So far as I am able to see there is but one way to get at this class of film butcher, viz., through the exchange managers, since they are the only ones who know, or should know, who commits the outrage. I submit the following tentative plan for your consideration and approval, in the belief that it will at least aid in checking what amounts to a disease.

The Plan

On some day to be selected by the editor, say October 1, let every projectionist and moving picture machine operator in this country and Canada who receives unsatisfactory service, write the manager of the exchange from which he gets service a strong letter of protest, demanding that the exchange put a stop to the abuse—particularly the ones enumerated, if they exist in the territory. In other words, flood the exchange managers with howls of protest. Perhaps it may wake them up a bit, put a stop to some of the nuisance and help them to a realization of the fact that the projection of the motion picture before an audience in a way to bring out its full value and artistic worth is truly an art.

It would perhaps not be a bad idea to ask exchanges to put into every film shipment a card containing instructions as to the proper care of film, and to suggest that a report should be made out by the projectionist and mailed to the exchange manager direct. Co-operation between the exchange manager and the projectionist will enable the manager to the more readily locate the theatres in which film abuses are practiced. Projectionists who fail or refuse to make out reports and co-operate with the exchange could then be classified and treated accordingly. I would like to know what other projectionists think of this plan.

Worthy of Discussion

Certainly, gentlemen, this is a subject worthy of intelligent discussion. Let us have your views as to the best method of getting results in the elimination of what, as brother Voels aptly says, amounts to a disease, the real result of which is to lower the 'tone' of the motion picture entertainment and thus lower box office receipts.

If such abuses only operate to cost each theatre as little as twenty-five cents a day in admissions, the cost per day, from this source alone, would run about $8,000, or a mere $2,920,000 per year in this country and Canada. And is there a man so mentally dense that he will dispute the proposition that such things do lower the tone of the "show" and that lowering the tone of the show does lower the drawing power of the theatre. If such there be, then indeed we must have with us some real solid ivory tops and very genuine square-heads.

Only a few nights ago I sat in a high-class theatre and watched an excellent rendition of an excellent photoplay—excellent except for the six or seven sets of ——— scratch marks which obliterated three or four pictures near the end of each reel. It was abominable.

It Set Me Wondering

It brought one down from the peak of interest which makes one forget he or she is looking at a picture, to the fact that it really is not an actual performance but the picturization of one. The effect was disillusioning in the extreme. It set me wondering what manner of man the manager of that theatre was that he permitted such an atrocity to appear on his screen.

Did he not realize that the projecting of such a hideous thing to the screen constituted an affront to the audience which had not paid good money to look at any such thing as that. Why did he not "land" on the manager of the exchange which supplied those films with the most vigorous protest he could prepare. And as for the human animal in the projection room who calmly allowed those ugly marks to reach his screen—well, why comment. Language is too weak to do justice to the subject, but this I will say: the man who made the scratch marks ought to be kicked out of whatever projection room he disgraces!

I have no apology to offer for this strong language, except that it is entirely too weak. One is not overly polite as to words when speaking of deliberate, wanton destruction, or of the one who is quite willing to kick his brother in the face, which is about what the punch artist really does, since his string of "cute" little holes, or scratch marks, operate to discredit the work of every man using the films thereafter, unless the projectionist is willing to work something like half an hour cutting them out.

Not Much Faith

As to flooding the exchange managers with protests—well, maybe it would help, but I have not very much faith in protesting to exchange mis-managers who have to be "awakened" to a matter of this sort. Exchange managers could have stopped the practice long since. It is merely a matter of a real inspection and record of damage found. But this takes time, and apparently all that some exchange managers can see is the dollars coming in and the sum going out in the form of actual checks.

He seems unable to grasp the fact that when he sells "service" he automatically agrees to supply films in good mechanical condition to project. And "films in good mechanical condition to project" do not contain punch marks, scratch marks and similar atrocities. It is simple. All that is necessary is to really inspect the films, put them in first-class condition and send them out. When they come back, really inspect them again, and if punch marks are found charge the footage to the theatre, at about one dollar a foot, because the damage is deliberate and wanton.

Make Them Disappear

Let all exchanges in any given district adopt that method, and punch marks and scratches will automatically disappear, nor will they stand on the order of their going. The exchange manager well knows this.

Some exchanges have their films really inspected, and you don't find punch marks in them. My hat is off to them. I have nothing but praise for them.

If you think a flood of protests on a proposition the exchange manager is already perfectly well acquainted with will help, all right. I am willing, but my view is that our protest will merely cause him to instruct his "inspectors" not to waste two whole minutes inspecting a reel, but to cut it to one and a half.

Are You Working by "Guess" or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens chart (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) is in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

"Don't guess." Do your work RIGHT. Price, fifty cents, stamps.

Handbook a Winner

J. B. Day, Motion Picture Projectionist, now at Duluth, Minnesota, has received his new handbook, examined it thoroughly and has the following to say:

Your new handbook, the "Blue Book of Projection," has arrived. I have examined it carefully and desire to congratulate you most sincerely. The book is truly wonderful. Such a work is especially wonderful to us old-timers who have been "through the mill." After my first examination of it I proceeded to "dig up" my copy of the little vest pocket "Operator's Handbook" which you put out in the days just a little past those when we used to hook up to a barbed wire fence or a rheostat for resistance and "take a chance" (1907 ed.). But chance or no chance, we always put the show on.

The fifteenth of October will be the seventeenth anniversary of the day I first started in the projection game, which I have followed pretty regularly ever since. All those years have taught me one thing, and taught it to me well, viz.: there is always something to learn, and that, as you aptly say at the end of several chapters in the book, "Knowledge is Power."

Gratifying

It is indeed gratifying to feel that through the work you have done for us yourself, and in making available to us the work others have done, that we may now glance at a book and know whether the machine or the lens we have is working at 100 per cent efficiency.

And who will dare question, much less dispute it when I say that but for your work we still would be groping in the dark, proceeding on the old "I guess" plan.

The way the blue book is put together makes it very easy to find exactly what one wants, and to find it quickly, which in itself makes a very great improvement. In the seventeen years I have projected motion pictures I have found it to be utterly impossible for any man to keep in his head all the knowledge necessary to efficient work. It just can't be done. It does not matter how "good" a man thinks he is, or how good he may really be, he still must often "look things up," if he is to work at his best. The man who thinks he can carry all necessary knowledge in his head is a fool. It is not done. It can't be done, and as the range of knowledge widens it is less and less possible that any man can cerry even a fair percentage of the knowledge necessary to efficient work in his head. The best of us must "look things up," and the better the man is the more "looking up" he does.

I intend to try to get the local to order the book for all its members. Deep down in my heart I wish you success, and again tender my most sincere congratulations on the splendid work you have done in the new Fourth Edition of the handbook.

An Old Timer

Brother Day is one of the honest-to-gosh old-timers. I have myself had correspondence with him intermittently for many years. He has always been a progressive. For years he was in Texas. His letter speaks for itself, and Day should be well qualified to judge of the value of the book.

I am especially gratified at his favorable comment on the method of indexing. It was a radical departure, and in doing it I sailed an uncharted sea. I have seen no other book indexed that way, but I can see that the plan is good. Taking the index and the question list together one certainly should be able to quickly locate anything the book contains. I myself found the old plan of indexing very unsatisfactory, so I proceeded to apply plain common sense and evolved the new scheme, which Brother Day and others have pronounced a winner.

With the index matter I did just as I did in building my summer home at the shore. I never did like the narrow, high windows everyone uses. They are inefficient for the purpose intended. I looked the matter over, increased the width to three and a half feet and then just turned the darned thing on its side, making a window six feet wide by three and a half high. I had special sash made, of course. Did it work? I'll tell the wide world it DID. It was just simply great, though neither grandpa or his pa or grandpa ever heard of such a "crazy thing." It was the application of plain common sense to windows, even as the new index plan is the application of plain common sense to indexes, and I don't care whether any other author ever used it or not, so—there you are!

If the Duluth local orders sufficient copies, remitting the cash, they (or any other local) can secure a substantial reduction in price. I think you will get the local to order, because the Duluth local is a progressive body. To date, so far as I know, Hamilton, Ontario, is the only union which has ordered for every one of its members. I am anxious to hear from the Hamilton local as to whether or no it has any regrets for its action.

Connecticut Officials

Recently I prepared for publication certain rather severe criticisms of matters projectional in Connecticut. In order that the Connecticut officials might have no opportunity to say I acted unfairly I sent a carbon of the article to Robert Hurley, Superintendent State Police, of Connecticut, who has direct jurisdiction over matters pertaining to projectionists and projection rooms throughout the state.

My experience of public officials has been that, as a general proposition they are very much "up stage." They imagine themselves to be a law unto themselves and criticism rolls off their backs like rain water off the roof of a duck. About every idea they seem to have is political—what effect will this particular thing have in getting votes, or in holding my job for me. Whether it is really for the public good is not a secondary consideration. Not so! It is about a fifteenthly (15 thly) consideration.

Some Shock

I, therefore, opened the prompt reply which came fully expecting to find it to contain a message telling me, in polite language, to go straight to the burning sulphur mine. But I got a distinct shock, for the letter was couched in very human language. It sharply criticised the editor for not listening to both sides before going into print, and wound up by a cordial invitation to visit Hartford and confer with the Superintendent of State Police, to the end that justice be done.

Needless to say, I filled Nancy Hanks' bowels with gasoline and oil, pointed her in the general direction of Hartford, and set her going.

And now let me pay a richly deserved compliment, because it is deserved. I found Superintendent Hurley to be a REAL public servant. He called for Lieutenant Walter Stiles, who has direct charge of projection examinations in the state, and we went at it. I found both these gentlemen really anxious to do that which was best for the people and the motion picture industry in the state. This was evidenced all the way through two separate and rather long interviews, and it was to me a rather amazing thing. My compliments to those two gentlemen. I only wish to God we had more of their sort in official positions.

Now don't get me wrong in this matter. There are many public officials who would like to do the right thing, but the trouble lies in the fact that in all too many instances really serving the people well involves hard work, many fights with selfish interests that do not want the right thing done. Also very often it involves the real official in quarrels with superior officials of the "To hell with the public" type.

I am to have other interviews with Messrs. Hurley and Stiles, and believe that much and lasting good will eventually come of it, of which you will be advised later.

Darn the Luck!

At the office recently I found a card from Joseph L. Aarons, President Projectionists' Union 302, I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O. Calgary.

Darn the luck, anyhow. I've not forgotten the royal welcome accorded poor me when I was in Calgary three—or was it four years ago.

Stopped the train at the city limits, had a bunch of cow kids yank me off at the end of a rope, nearly scared the living liver out of me and then put me through a course of sprouts which lasted two days! SOME doings, I'll tell an anxious world!

Hence I say "darn the luck" at missing brother Aarons. Aarons is International Representative to Trades and Labor Congress of Canada. Come again and let me know you're coming. I'll be there!

Birmingham, Ala.

Ralph A. Root, Business Agent, Local 236, Motion Picture Projectionists, I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O., reports that the local has signed contracts with all Birmingham exhibitors, running from September 1, 1922 to September 1, 1923.

The contract committee consisted of the business agent, the president of the local, J. H. Sapp and Vice-President P. E. Walker. The local asked an increase, but after several conferences finally signed up at the old scale, working conditions remaining unchanged. The contract is, says Business Agent, a better one than the old contract.

Proud Daddy

In the wee sma' hours anent the two of September sixth, the family of Morris Rotker, New York City, was increased by one. The new arrival was young, good looking and of the votes for women tribe—a daughter.

The new Miss Rotker immediately climbed on the scales and its hand spun around to the eight-pound mark.

Rotker is Chairman of the Examining Board of Local 306, Motion Picture Projectionists, New York City; also he is President of the Bronx Electrical Contractors' Association.

A Caller?

In my mail I recently found a card apparently written at the Moving Picture World office, reading "Ellise A. Karns, Ft. Wayne, Indiana," with the notation: "Just to say hello and good wishes."

If you were there, brother Karns, I'm real sorry I missed you, but appreciate the kindly greeting.

Wichita Has 72,000 Population; The New Miller Has 2,000 Seats

THE Miller Theatre, of Wichita, Kansas, which opened its doors to the public on May 1, is a noteworthy house, seating two thousand patrons and costing its owners, the Miller Amusement Company, approximately three quarters of a million dollars.

The structure is fireproof throughout, the entire frame being of structural steel and reinforced concrete. In addition to its fireproof construction, the exit facilities are three times greater than required by law. The exits and fire escapes lead directly to the street or to fireproof courts and passages which safeguard the public to the outside. Each exit from the theatre balcony and mezzanine has been provided with a separate fire escape, so that there will be no congestion or confusion whatever in case it is necessary to use them.

The main floor consists of a closed ticket lobby, opening into a large main lobby and foyer, and this into a large auditorium.

A Beautiful Stairway

Both the main lobby and foyer walls are almost entirely in rose Travernelli marble, and bases and border trim of Italian marble in black and gold. The main lobby or vestibule besides being wainscotted almost to the ceiling in marble, is finished around the top in ornamental plastered effect worked out in relief. On each side are beautiful French plate cut glass mirrors with black and gold marble bases. The lobby chandeliers are of Venetian crystals. The ceilings in lobbies, foyer and dome are finished in aluminum leaf, reflecting rather than absorbing the light and in coloring and glaze not unlike the interior of a shell.

On either side of the lobby is an art marble stairway with wrought iron railing, leading to an upper circular promenade, the balcony, rest rooms and loges.

The effect in the main auditorium is that of beauty, comfort and spaciousness. The prevailing color tone is orange gold with all ornamentation highlighted with red, yellow and blue. The side walls are panelled and the panels hung with art paintings, in which blue and rose flowers prevail against a lattice work background. Color effects around the panels are in harmonizing tones. Wall panelings on the balcony floor are in amber gold, stencil design with highlights in primary colors in the mouldings.

Comfortable Seating

The comfort of patrons has been particularly considered in the house seating. All seats are twenty inches with dark blue leather cushioned back and spring seats.

Antique gold chairs furnish the eight boxes. There are seven chairs to each box, making a total of fifty-six.

These are of bent wood design with cane backs and seats. The antique gold finish harmonizes with the trim of the boxes and the hangings.

The boxes and theatre proper are carpeted with two thousand yards of Wilton carpet. The pattern is a conventional design in mulberry and tan.

A feature of the auditorium is its lighting system. All lights are concealed over the art panels around the heavy rope moulding of the proscenium arch and ceiling. The entire system is of three colors that blend into each other by a dimmer system in the switchboard room.

A Modern Lighting System

Orchestra and soloist may be illuminated with changing colors, ranging from cold moonlight to warmed or soft rose.

The electric lighting system is operated by a pre-selective switchboard and remote control board located back of the stage. By means of this mechanism, one man can throw on or off any light or group of lights in any part of the interior or exterior of the building. A large dimmer bank in connection with this installation gives the beautiful effects obtained by increasing or decreasing the intensity of the different colors either separately or in conjunction with one or more combinations.

Complete Ventilation

The ventilation system is thoroughly modern and is designed to give a complete change of tempered and washed air throughout the house every five minutes. Particular care has been taken in the design and location of the huge air ducts to prevent drafts. Thermostatic controls located at various points throughout the house insure absolute and uniform control of the temperature. In the summer months, by means of a refrigerating system, the air may be cooled and maintained at any desired degree.

It is the claim of the management that the coolest place in the summer time and the most evently warmed place in the winter time, in

PREMIER TITLE COMPANY

356-358 EAST 33D STREET CHICAGO

Wichita, will be the Miller Theatre. This claim is based on the installation of two systems, either of which is capable of providing proper ventilation.

In the hottest weather of summer, the temperature can be lowered to almost any desired degree by the Mushroom cooled air system and Monsoon overhead system. If necessary, the air in the auditorium can be changed every two minutes by a combination of the two.

Ready for Summer or Winter

The Mushroom system provides for the washing of air that comes into the building and either cools or heats it, as desired. As the air enters the building, it first passes through a radiator room, used only in winter to temper the air. Then it is sent through a solid wall of water where all dirt is washed out. Then through the heating and cooling rooms, it goes to the trunk line ducts of the building. These ducts run the whole length of the theatre under the main and balcony floors. The air is then sent into the theatre through hundreds of registers placed under the seats.

It is necessary that a special room be provided in the basement for this plant. There, in addition to the usual boilers, are motors that run the fans and pumps of the system.

The Monsoon overhead ventilating system will be utilized in hot weather. Five big fans in the roof of the building remove the air. Three of the fans are nine feet in diameter and the other four are twelve feet in diameter. Another fan back stage removes the air from that portion of the building.

The office and store portion of the building is heated with a separate system, not connected with that of the theatre proper.

Fine Projection Room

Located in the rear of the topmost seats of the balcony, and suspended from the roof with its floor on a level with the ceiling of the theatre, are the projection quarters, consisting of three large, well ventilated rooms.

At the rear of the balcony, one ascends a short flight of stairs and passes through a corridor which leads into the rewinding room, which has a floor space measuring six by ten feet.

Next to the rewinding room is the projection room proper, with a floor space of ten and one-quarter by twenty-four feet and with a nine-foot ceiling. The line-up consists of three Baird projectors, finished in battleship grey with nickel trimmings, one special combination stereopticon and effect machine and two spot-flood lamps.

Each of the projectors is equipped with Peerless automatic arc controls. To the right of each projector, set flush with the front wall of the projection room, is a control panel, containing volt meter, ammeter and rheostat control switch.

There is also a push button switch on each panel board that is used to signal the stage electrician.

Set flush with the wall on the right side of the projection room is the switchboard which controls all the arc lamp circuits in the projection room.

There is also a volt and ammeter on this board which registers the combined load of all the machines. The current comes into this switchboard through two 210,000 circular mill cables from a 15 KW General Electric constant voltage, multiple type motor generator set.

This generator is normally driven by a 220 volt, 3 phase, A. C. motor of 25 horse power, but there is also a multiple cylinder gasoline motor direct connected to same, which can be started immediately should the city electric service be cut off accidentally, thereby enabling the projectionist to continue the pictures without any delay.

There is a large enclosed motor-driven rewind and film storage cabinet in the projection room. The rewind being equipped with an automatic cutoff switch which stops the motor when the film is entirely rewound.

The lighting system of the projection room consists of three indirect fixtures for general illumination of the room and an individual drop light at each machine.

Well Ventilated

There are three large ventilators in the projection room ceiling, to which are piped the lamphouses of each projector. These carry off all heat and gases from the arc lamps.

There are two large windows in the projection room and one in each of two other rooms comprising the projection suite. Also a door leading to a private fire escape which leads to the main balcony fire escape.

From the projection room, we step into the electrical room, with a floor space of six by ten feet, which contains the rheostats for each of the machines in the projection room. The current comes into the projection room at seventy volts and the rheostats are used to cut this voltage down to the arc voltage, which is thirty-five.

Absolute Fire Protection

Two screens are used at the Miller. One being located down at the front of the stage for use when the stage is being set for entertainers and the main screen at the rear of the stage. The distance from the front screen to the projector is one hundred and twenty feet and the size of the picture is thirteen by seventeen feet, while the distance to the main screen is one hundred thirty-five feet.

All observation and projection ports are protected by an automatic fire shutter system.

Across the front wall of the room and up near the ceiling is a steel rod hung in ball bearings, this rod running the full width of the projection room. At one end of this rod is a short piece of rod fitted to it in the shape of an L. Directly over each opening is a bolt screwed into the rod to hold up the shutters, which are hooked to same by means of a chain, and these shutters slide in a steel grove. When the shutters are all open, the rod is held parallel with the ceiling by means of a cord brought down to each machine and held by a fusible link.

In the projection room is a telephone connecting all departments of the theatre; also a city Bell 'phone.

The complete projection installation was designed and plans for same drawn by Seth E. Barnes, chief projectionist for the Miller Enterprises, who has installed the complete equipment and will have complete charge of same.

Besides the projection room in the theatre, there is another and smaller one, this being used as a reviewing room, where all pictures are reviewed by the management.

In addition to a $40,000 organ, with its various effects, is a piano, which is separate from the organ, but which is played from the organ keyboard. Hence a scene in a picture, which calls for it, a "piano solo" can at once be had by pressing down the little tablet marked "piano" and immediately the organist is playing on the piano which stands in the orchestra pit beside the console.

How It Operates

The only portion of the organ that is visible to the audience is the console with its one hundred and forty odd stops or tabs.

One of the unique features of the theatre is the signal system which will be used for the orchestra.

On each individual player's stand is a signal box which contains three colored miniature electric light bulbs—red, white and blue. These are on one control switch, which is located on the conductor's desk. With this arrangement, the conductor is at once able to give every man in the orchestra a direct signal for the proper synchronization of music to the picture. This enables the player to play his part with that freedom and ease with which he might display were he playing a solo, instead of accompanying a photoplay.

Smoothness Assured

Also there will not be a continual stop of the orchestra while changing from one piece of music to another. The conductor will play upon the various instruments of the orchestra as easily as upon the keyboard of the organ. The perceptible change of tempo and rythm, which is usually so keenly felt where the average orchestra plays for the picture, is obviated by this electric signal system.

July and August Installation Reports Show Robert Mortons in Great Demand

AMONG the recent installations made by the American Photo Player Company of the Robert-Morton organs are the following:

Hauber Theatre, Pine Bluff, Arkansas; Empire Theatre, Long Beach, California; Larchmont Theatre, Los Angeles; Superba Theatre, Los Angeles; Excelsior Theatre, San Francisco; New Castro Theatre, San Francisco; Isis Theatre, Boulder, Colorado; American Theatre, Denver; Crystal Theatre, Daytona, Florida; Liberty Theatre, New Orleans; Metropolitan Theatre, Baltimore; Regent Theatre, Baltimore; Leland Theatre, Albany, New York; New Orpheum Theatre, Yonkers, New York; Belvidere Theatre, Brooklyn; Surf Theatre, Keyport, New Jersey; Eugene Theatre, Eugene, Oregon; Heilig Amusement Company, Portland, Oregon; Capitol Theatre, Lebanon, Pennsylvania; Orpheum Theatre, Ogden, Utah; Isis Theatre, Richmond, Virginia; Mack Theatre, Port Angeles, Washington; Madison Theatre, Seattle; Queen Ann Theatre, Seattle; Hawaii Theatre, Honolulu, and New Princess Theatre, Honolulu.

July and August Installation

The above installations, made by the American Photo Player Company during the months of July and August, constitute not only a glowing testimonial to the popularity of the Robert-Morton organ, but evidence of the interest in better music on the part of picture theatre exhibitors.

California leads the list with five installations, Arkansas has one to its credit, Colorado two, Florida one, Louisiana one, Maryland two, New York three, New Jersey one, Oregon two, Pennsylvania one, Utah one, Virginia one, Washington three, while far away Hawaii, the home of the Ukelele, has two.

This makes a total of twenty-six installations reported. It is certainly a most gratifying showing from the viewpoints of both the exhibitors and the American Photo Player Company.

Facts That Mean Money to Theatre Owners

Read What These Experts in Theatre Seating Say

Theodore L. Hays, general manager of the Finkelstein & Rubin Theatrical Enterprises of Minneapolis, says:

"The psychology of successful purveyance to patrons of entertainment lies in providing an environment as near ideal as possible; an atmosphere which will tend towards the creation of a receptive attitude on the part of theatre goers.

"Many elements enter into or contribute to the so-called environment . . . especially comfortable seating . . .

"The motion picture audience (except where seats are reserved) is a continually changing audience with the result that the seat platform should be sufficient in depth to permit persons to pass the patrons who are seated without necessitating their rising to permit such passage. To permit of this condition seat platforms would necessarily require a depth of at least 34 inches.

"This latter width is quite desirable but involves a sacrifice of considerable floor space and is not generally adopted, except where ample floor space is available. . . .

"As to the style of chair. A wood frame, not too heavy in style and construction, square seat and panel back of leather is, in my judgment, most desirable. . . . Sometime some enterprising chair manufacturer will design a model rattan back and seat, one that will provide both comfort and ventilation."

E. V. Richards, vice president and general manager of the Saenger Amusement Company, Inc., of New Orleans, says:

"In my opinion, comfort is the most essential service of any theatre because without it no theatre, or any other business could prosper.

"Thirty-two (32") inches should be the minimum space between each row of seats, but a thirty-five (35") inch would give maximum comfort to patrons without any great sacrifice of floor space.

"The type of chair is a matter of choice, —climatic conditions largely governing. In cooler climates heavy upholstered chairs seem to be the preference. A recent innovation throughout the South and Southwest, where the warmer weather predominates, a cane bottom chair has been found adaptable.

H. L. Horater, vice president of the Pantheon Theatre Company, of Toledo, Ohio, says:

"I am of the opinion that seats should be comfortable and believe that an effort to crowd, unless one has an exceptional attraction, has a tendency to keep people away."

HERE IT IS!

A comfortable cane back theatre chair, one of the beautiful Mov-Ezy models—a stock finish.

The Mov-Ezy is the only chair that gives comfortable leg space without wasteful spacing, and without loss of seating capacity. It is not attached to any other chair in any way and has two individual arm rests.

It is a real chair that means real "Ease at the Movies."

The Mov-Ezy is made in all popular designs and finished and upholstered in accordance with your specifications.

Send for beautiful, new catalogue that tells the wonderful Mov-Ezy story.

Looks Like the Mov-Ezy Was Made to Order from Their Specifications for the Ideal Theatre Chair, Doesn't It?

provides ample space for passage between rows without the necessity for occupants getting up. By means of a patented feature the Mov-Ezy swings noiselessly to one side at the will of its occupant, thus providing sufficient space even in cases where chairs are actually only 30 inches from back to back.

No longer are pictures constantly interrupted by people being obliged to rise as others pass. No longer is it necessary for long legged people to sit all cramped up through the show. The Mov-Ezy, the chair that means "Ease at the Movies," the only real improvement in theatre seating in fifty years, solves for every theatre owner his seating problems.

This Heater Is Also a Ventilator

With this Skinner Bros. Direct Fired Heater in your basement you will always be sure of proper heating and ventilation whenever you want it. In summer it can be used as a ventilator alone—in winter it can be used as a ventilator and heater combined.

In operation, the Skinner Heater is odorless and practically noiseless. When used as a ventilator, fresh air is drawn from the outside, passed through the unit, and then gently diffused through the auditorium. This fresh air displaces the foul, impure air and drives it out through the regular ventilator openings in your building.

When used as a heater, the air is warmed during its passage through the unit—this warmed air can be re-circulated throughout the auditorium before the performance starts. After the audience is assembled, as much fresh air as is desired is brought in from outside.

No Exposed Pipes or Ducts

The Skinner Bros. Heating System is entirely different from old time types. There are no exposed pipes or ducts to clutter up the aisles or passage ways in your auditorium. Besides this, you save the usual cost of the miscellaneous fittings which go with the old, inefficient systems.

Economical—Fully Guaranteed

Even in coldest weather the Skinner Bros. Heater needs to be operated only a few hours before the performance. Costs little to install and can be operated by anyone. If steam is available we supply our Baetz Type, which uses live or exhaust steam at any pressure.

Every Skinner Heater is fully guaranteed, when installed as directed by our engineers after a survey of the premises.

Find out more about the Skinner Heater—we will gladly submit full details, without obligation, of course.

Universal Lighting Plants The Best Interruption Insurance

"Hello, Sam?—Yes, this is Harry at the Rialto. I want to cancel that feature for tomorrow night."

"What's the trouble, Harry, another storm?"

"No—worse than that. The city electric plant is short on coal and the house may be dark for a week."

"Serves you right, Harry, for not taking out interruption insurance."

"What? Interruption insurance. Never heard of it."

"That's just the trouble with you, Harry. You never take the time or trouble to investigate. Interruption insurance is a Universal Electric Plant for generating your own current."

"But, Sam, I thought those independent electric plants were only good for small town theatres."

"That may be true of some, but the Universal is made in sizes to meet all requirements. Then, too, if you want to use it as a permanent proposition it is cheaper than central station current and will pay for itself."

"But what will it cost to install a plant for the Rialto?"

"Just about what one dark house will keep out of the box office. I would advise you to wire the Universal factory today. They have a representative near you, who can give you all the details and can have a plant installed for you in a jiffy."

IT has the dramatic punch that audiences are strong for. A young recruit in the Royal Mounted is sent out to get his man. He sneaks back alone. He is disgraced and dishonored before the girl he loves. Then her faith rekindles his manhood and he fights his way to her favor. When, single handed, he wades into a snarling pack of lawbreakers and licks them with his bare fists, you'll know by the noise your audience is happy.

PARAMOUNT'S 1922 PROMISE was performed!

Last May Paramount announced to exhibitors its "Famous 41."

And hundreds of exhibitors booked their Paramount Pictures on the advance announcement.

What a demonstration of the power of Faith!

And how has that faith been rewarded?

Starting with the very first of the now famous 41, Paramount's promise has been performed.

Think of "Blood and Sand," of "Manslaughter", "The Old Homestead", "To Have and To Hold", "Clarence". Space is too limited to remind you of them all, but a few are pictured here.

Paramount's Famous 41 have proved the lions of the season.

These pictures were booked on faith. That faith has been justified.

Faith in Paramount will continue to reap rewards. The exhibitor who shows Paramount Pictures is the one who is keeping faith with his patrons.

And keeping faith with your patrons pays!

Sherlock

From the William Gillette play based on

Barrymore

America's foremost actor now appears in the most famous fiction role of all time.

JOHN BARRYMORE, idol of America, is hero of a hundred dark adventures in the maze of London's underworld. As Sherlock Holmes, best known and most widely admired character of modern fiction, he enacts breath-taking pursuits of master criminals. He blocks a crafty attempt at murder in the gas house. He frustrates a diabolical raid on his Baker Street den. He eludes the desperate shot of Moriarty, genius of London criminals. He rescues the frail girl Rose Faulkner from abduction and by absorbing detective work, masterly, superb, he recovers documents that mean life and fortune!

Here is a truly great motion picture attraction that means crowded houses and big money to you this Fall. "Sherlock Holmes" is a million copy best seller. John Barrymore is a star whose name spells certain money at the box-office. "Sherlock Holmes" was photographed in England, Switzerland and America.

Gentlemen,—I Thank You

I take this means of extending my thanks and appreciation, on behalf of Mrs. DeHaven and myself, for the splendid treatment and good-will accorded me by exhibitors and friends during my present country-wide trip, in which I have visited all of the largest cities.

I feel gratified that so clever a showman as "Roxie" Rothapfel, of the Capitol Theatre, New York, has contracted for the entire series of twelve DE HAVEN COMEDIES, and am happy to get the reports of bookings in the long list of high-class first-run houses throughout the United States.

In many cities I saw our first comedy, "THEIR FIRST VACATION." It was splendidly received. Our second comedy, "TWIN HUSBANDS," is better than the first, and I promise you, Gentlemen, that every remaining picture of the series of twelve will be immeasurably better as we go along.

It has long been Mrs. DeHaven's ambition, and my own, to produce the highest-class entertainment in the industry, and to this end, Mrs. DeHaven and myself and our entire organization at the Coast, are working with might and main. You know that we can't accomplish our ambition unless we make good comedies. I know it—I'm not kidding myself. As a showman, I realize that DE HAVEN COMEDIES must be "the class," and in this connection, all I ask as a favor of exhibitors is that you extend me the courtesy of seeing DE HAVEN COMEDIES as fast as they are ready for release and to book them strictly on their merits.

Again, Gentlemen, on behalf of Mrs. DeHaven and myself, accept my thanks for your kindness, friendliness, courtesies and hospitality while en route.

Sincerely and cordially,

Carter DeHaven

However, a majority of the business leaders are staking their reputations on predictions of an era of great prosperity for the motion picture industry. While they do not anticipate any phenomenal business boom like that which was experienced during and immediately following the war, they do not hesitate to forecast a period of steady and substantial prosperity, which will be reflected in the healthy growth of the motion picture industry. This is normalcy, a state of sane business progress, which, in truth it may be said, the motion picture industry has never

DON'T BE FOOLED!

Every exhibitor who has played the Universal-Jewel series of six LEATHER PUSHERS knows of their sensational success with audiences and at the box office.

So great was the success of these remarkable two-reel features that we immediately decided to produce the remaining six stories of the original twelve by H. C. WITWER—their famous author.

These are now finished. They were produced with the original cast, headed by REGINALD DENNY as "Kid Roberts," and including HAYDEN STEVENSON as the wise-cracking manager, under the direction of HARRY POLLARD, who made the first series of LEATHER PUSHERS.

We have every reason to believe that this second series of six will be as great a sensation as the first. If the judgment of exhibitors and their patrons bears out our predictions, we will produce a third series.

THE ONLY LEATHER PUSHERS IN THE WORLD are and will be released through UNIVERSAL Exchanges. All six of the NEW LEATHER PUSHERS will shortly be screened at these exchanges.

If anybody, at any time, anywhere, tries to sell you anything remotely resembling THE LEATHER PUSHERS, ask him if REGINALD DENNY is in it, or HAYDEN STEVENSON, or if it was directed by HARRY POLLARD, or made by UNIVERSAL. If he cannot say "yes" to these questions, you will not only know that they are not the genuine LEATHER PUSHERS, but nothing like them.

LOOK BEFORE YOU BOOK — Make sure you are getting the genuine LEATHER PUSHERS as produced by UNIVERSAL. Beware of imitations—or you'll be the loser.

The Picture 50,000,000 Are Waiting to See

Mary Pickford with her famous curls in a new 1922 version of her greatest early screen triumph, "Tess of the Storm Country," a portrayal that lifted this supreme artiste to the very peak of popular approval.

Mary Pickford as a girl again—as the lovable Tess who has brought glad tears and joyous smiles to millions.

Mary Pickford in rags and tatters and rubber boots—but always smiling her impish child smile, always shaking her golden curls.

New York City.

My dear Mr. Marin:

It might be of interest to the Distinctive Pictures Incorporated to know that their film THE MAN WHO PLAYED GOD starring George Arliss has been a great success in the new EASTMAN THEATRE this week and has been played to a full house at practically every performance.

Comments of warm approval have come to us from many people and my own personal opinion is that it is a wonderful picture from the standpoints of photography and acting and plot.

This type of picture should help greatly to elevate the standards of the industry and it should find great favor with any audience because of its strong human element.

I regard this production as one of the best so far produced.

Sincerely yours,
THE EASTMAN THEATRE

This was the critics' verdict on the midnight prison-cell marriage when "The Glorious Adventure" played the Mark Strand, Brooklyn.

And that is only one of many powerful, thrilling and gripping melodramatic scenes in this new and novel first all-color feature length picture.

You also have a nation's most beautiful and titled woman with gorgeous costumes for a feminine appeal, plus a powerful love story and an all-star cast.

DU VERNET

DIRECTED BY WESLEY RUGGLES

THIS is the day of romance that grips and thrills with hot love and deeds of valor.

That's just the kind of picture F. B. O. offers in Ethel Clayton's first great super-special for this hustling organization.

An incredibly fascinating story—a star of tremendous box-office popularity—scenes of stupendous magnitude and regal splendor—costumings of lavish beauty—situations of stunning drama and love interest — together with exploitation possibilities that make it ONE OF THE GREATEST BOX-OFFICE PRODUCTIONS OF THE HOUR.

IMAGINE Ethel Clayton as the central figure of a royal love affair—Imagine her in the arms of a stalwart Prince Charming—Imagine her in a dozen other smashing scenes that blaze with the fire of red-blooded romance amid the gorgeous trappings of Old World courts and castles.

Conceded, even by competitors, to be the GREATEST VEHICLE ON WHICH THIS BRILLIANT AND BEAUTIFUL STAR HAS EVER BESTOWED THE IMPRINT OF HER GENIUS. You can lick the toughest competition with this one, Mr. Showman. Book it RIGHT NOW thru your nearest F. B. O. Exchange.

"Rags to Riches"—Warner's offer a human interest knockout that promises gold mine for exhibitors. Here's a production that is that big and that promising to warrant cancellation of any contract in order to show it at the best houses anywhere.

Motion Picture News :—

Here is a photoplay combining all the elements which build smashing returns at the box-office Don't hesitate. Get this picture. Then take your money to the bank.

Film Daily :—

Barry's latest is another sure-fire box-office hit that you don't want to miss. Put in your order as early as possible and start getting them interested as soon as you are sure of it. You can't beat this for clean entertainment and a really "family" picture.

Exhibitors Trade Review :—

"Rags to Riches" is rare entertainment. It a wholesome story, a story for the whole blessed family, filled with laughs and many alternating chokes. A peach of an audience picture.

New York World :—

Here, we think, is a photoplay of rare quality, combining fun, romance, heart interest and excellent dramatic composition. See "Rags to Riches". It is highly amusing and intelligently constructed.

Evening Journal :—

A more delightful and wholesome comedy than "Rags to Riches", the principal attraction at the Capitol Theatre, has not been seen in New York for many months.

Morning Telegraph :—

"Rags to Riches" has something to please most everybody and ought to create as fine a cinema record as it did as a speaking stage production.

"RAGS TO RICHES"

Mail :—

"Rags to Riches" is a human picture, one in which you can warm up with a personal feeling toward the characters. It is interesting, and it is delightfully played by the cast which Wesley Barry heads.

Globe :—

There is rarely a dull moment and this is due both to comic incidents introduced and capable acting.

Telegram :—

An interesting picture and Wesley Barry is its juvenile hero. The story is told in an entertaining and human manner.

Herald :—

Barry's best film to date.

American :—

Wesley Barry is amusing in "Rags to Riches" at Capitol.

Post :—

"Rags to Riches" brings smiles in an interesting film at Capitol.

Sun :—

Good Entertainment. The clever youth is surrounded by a thoroughly competent cast.

Times :—

"Rags to Riches" has a good measure of amusing moments, which are due to Wesley Barry.

Zit's :—

"Rags to Riches" is rich in comedy. The film is always interesting and amusing, and the blending of comedy and adventure makes "Rags to Riches" a good picture.

Variety :—

"Rags to Riches" gives promise of being another "School Days." It's a great film for the youngsters and an amusing one for their elders. A wholesome picture of this kind deserves support.

ANNOUNCEMENT

TO THE MOTION PICTURE

Consider now with us in thoughtful amazement the crowning achievement of the cinema art—even the reproduction in motion pictures of

ABRAHAM LINCOLN"

After more than a year of intensive research, directed by Dr. Gilbert Ellis Bailey, Ph.D., of the University of Southern California, in co-operation with Ray R. and Albert L. Rockett, and Miss Frances Marion, the ROCKETT-LINCOLN FILM COMPANY announces that preliminary work for the production of the dramatic life of Abraham Lincoln in motion pictures has been completed and that actual shooting will begin upon final O. K. of the working script, a product of the matchless genius of MISS FRANCES MARION.

This research, covering a period of two hundred and fifty years, from the origin of the Lincoln family in England to the present time, embraces hundreds of interviews with relatives, friends, neighbors, associates and acquaintances of our Martyr Chief Magistrate; also authors, educators, government officials, army and navy officers and the custodians of all the great collections of Lincolniana in America, thus exhausting every imaginable remaining source of contact with Abraham Lincoln and his times—THE LAST WORD FOREVER IN LINCOLN LORE AND EXPRESSION. SUPREME IN ENTERTAINMENT AND EDUCATIONAL VALUE.

The broad scope of this picture will compel the most sumptuous production and the largest cast in the history of the cinema, while the quality of the cast will be limited only by the genius of the American screen.

EXTRAORDINARY

EXHIBITORS OF THE WORLD

Without prejudice to any section, race, class or party, and in twelve reels of the most compelling drama since Calvary, this greatest of world stories.

"THE DRAMATIC LIFE OF

will be told with the WAR BETWEEN THE STATES as a background and with the strictest historical authenticity.

The producers believe the time has come to make history live again in action and to tell in animated scenes the great stories of the progress of humanity in order that the lessons may be better understood by all the people and that a sick world may be made to feel the healing inspiration of America's undying ideals.

Of this NEW ERA in pictures this Lincoln film is the herald and archetype and you are invited to share with us in the fruits of it, for no conceivable subject can more quickly or more largely be transmuted into box office returns.

STANLEY N. CHAMBERS
MANAGING DIRECTOR

August 26, 1922.

Mr. H. E. Schiller,
Midwest Educational Film Exchanges,
1712 Wyandotte Street,
Kansas City, Missouri.

Dear Mr. Schiller:

Have you been watching the recent propoganda that "The Motion Picture World" has been putting out in regard to the neglect Exhibitors have been showing in advertising and featuring the short reel subjects. I think this article hits the nail square on the head and I feel that we all, including myself, have shown a great deal of negligence toward this portion of our programs.

Starting the new season, it is my intention to lay a great deal of stress upon all the comedies and additional short reel subjects that I use, not only making them a minor added attraction on our program but in advertising and actually featuring them and try to get all the box office value out of them that they contain. In addition to newspaper advertising on comedies I intend to use bill boards from time to time, that is whenever it is feasible.

There is a great deal of publicity obtainable on one of your new comedies for the coming season namely "THAT SON OF A SHEIK" Just imagine the interest that this comedy will raise after all the Shiek pictures we have had in the past, if it is properly exploited.

You will perhaps remember that the above is along the lines of the conversation we had sometime ago relative to making the short reel subjects a more important unit to our program.

Yours very sincerely,

S. N. Chambers

CHARLES RAY IN "ALIAS JULIUS CAESAR"

His rival stole his clothes, but he vowed he'd take his girl to the party if he had to wear old J. C.'s bathrobe. (Story by Richard Andres.)

That's what the Motion Picture News says, but read the rest:

"It's different—with plenty of good-natured fun. The story is a fast and rattling one, and is thoroughly entertaining. There is a lot of farce-comedy fun in nearly every sequence. Complication upon complication is piled up, all of which is properly disposed of. Ray shows full expression of his old time ability. It's a good picture. A typical Ray comedy with universal appeal."

Crowds Line Up at Big Opening!

Thomas H. Ince

Photograph taken at showing of "Skin Deep" at Loew's Park Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, shows band heading Legionnaires' parade and throngs lined up at the Box Office.

HOW THEY PUT IT OVER IN A BIG WAY

"Skin Deep" packed Loew's big Park Theatre all week and they had them standing in a long line in front of the Box Office to get in. The newspapers were filled with news stories telling about the event.

It shows how you can put a picture across by getting behind it. They held a legion night and there was a parade with a band that made the town sit up and take notice. And you bet it pulled in the crowds.

R. H. Jamieson, chairman of the Cuyahoga County Council, in a letter to First National, said in part:

"I had the pleasure of witnessing the magnificent production, 'Skin Deep.' I can not express in too glowing terms my appreciation of this wonderful picture. Mr. Ince seems to have caught the spirit of the men who served, and to have portrayed it in a very forceful and beautiful manner. Allow me to offer my sincere congratulations for the splendid presentation of the problems which meet the ex-service men in their daily contact with the American public."

THE NEWSPAPERS SAID:

"It carries a message of universal appeal."—Cleveland News-Leader.

"It delivers a quick and climactic punch at the outset, then elevates its drama to melodrama power. There is also tenderness and appeal."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"Highly spectacular—good melodrama."—Cleveland Press.

Write Us a Letter

We have a subject on which we would like to hear from our readers—both producers and exhibitors.

It's a subject on which there is a continual rumbling of conversation in this business, frequent remarks that "something ought to be done"—and nothing ever happens.

Here it is:

What is the proper length for a feature? Is there a "proper" length for a feature? Should there be a consistent effort towards shorter feature productions?

Exhibitors tell us frequently—in a complaining tone—that feature productions are running so long it is impossible to present a well balanced program and keep it within reasonable time limits.

Producers argue with us that it is impossible to tell a big story in less than seven thousand feet and add: "If we did the exhibitor would think it wasn't a big picture and refuse to pay the price."

Short subject manufacturers find this their greatest problem. They have made long strides in quality; exhibitors are showing more and more willingness to pay for that quality; but there's a stone wall in the form of the excessively long feature.

The subject comes to our mind at this minute because of an experience one of our largest distributors had with a Fall special that is being highly spoken of everywhere.

One of the distributor's executives lives in a Jersey suburban city. For weeks he enthusiastically told his friends outside the business to watch for this particular special's showing at the local theatre. The picture came. After the second day of the week run he began to hear from his friends.

"We don't think so much of that picture," sums up their verdict.

The executive was puzzled. Finally he went to the theatre himself to get another look at the special and calm his own doubts.

He came out a highly indignant person.

"Why the feature has been chopped, butchered, and ruined," he said. "Just because that fool exhibitor wanted to make room for his news weekly and comedy. It's a crime."

It was a crime—as far as its effect on the feature was concerned.

But isn't there an exhibitor's side to the story?

We haven't met this particular exhibitor to hear his explanation but the story is an old one— and we are brave enough to attempt to quote him:

"My patrons pay me for more than the feature picture—important as that is. They pay me for an evening of well-rounded entertainment. They are accustomed to seeing the latest short novelties, a comedy, and the news reels.

"The greatest feature ever made will not please all—because it may treat of a subject some don't like. But my patrons know that regardless of the feature they are going to get an evening of well-rounded enjoyment.

"I know I am not the man to cut the picture after high-priced directors and editors have placed their O. K. on it—but if feature makers are going to run wild on length without thinking of me or my patrons I have no other recourse."

That's the exhibitor's side as it has been told to us on many occasions and as it would probably have been explained on this one.

It's a subject that ought to come out in the light of day for a full and frank discussion.

Let's have an around-the-table argument.

We would like to know how strong the exhibitor opinion is—whether the majority agree with the many who have spoken to us.

We would like to have the producer attitude set forth in black and white.

Come one—come all.

Organize to Fight

Massachusetts Exhibitors Start Battle Against Censorship.

The fight of the motion picture industry against censorship, which will be voted upon by the citizens of Massachusetts next month, was officially started this week. Exhibitors in the Bay State have organized their forces for one of the bitterest wars ever waged against the professional and fanatical reformer. Every exchange in Boston has been equipped with special trailers, that theatre owners will be requested to exhibit. The first of the series of trainers presents Jackie Coogan in his famous court scene in "Trouble," arguing against censorship of his first production. These will be supplemented with expressions against censorship from representative citizens.

Special shows also have been arranged for and the status of virtually every newspaper and political candidate in Massachusetts has been definitely ascertained. Those newspapers championing the fight against censorship are waging a determined battle. A committee of 100 of Massachusetts' leading citizens has been formed and is doing splendid work. The campaign is reaching out to every organization in the State, with speculation now even that the people of Massachusetts will vote against censorship.

Charles C. Pettijohn of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., is in Boston.

Valentino Loses Out

Actor Allowed to Appear Only for Paramount

Rodolph Valentino, motion picture star, featured in "Blood and Sand," lost out when Justice Isidor Wasservogel in Equity Term of the N. Y. Supreme Court, handed down a decision, restraining Valentino from appearing in any screen production, than those produced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, during the period he is under contract with that organization. In his decision Justice Wasservogel directs that the plaintiff corporation put up a bond of $25,000, as security for the outcome of the trial on the merits of the case.

Attorney Louis Marshall, for plaintiff, said that large sums of money had been expended by his clients in advertising Valentino, and brought him from obscurity to the limelight of great publicity, and that his allegations of unjust treatment were merely a pretense to enable him to escape from his contract so he could obtain more remunerative employment elsewhere.

Showmen Convene

Philadelphia Exhibitors Hold First Meeting of the Season.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America's first meeting of the season, held at the Vendig Hotel, Philadelphia, September 29, as a combination business and social luncheon, was attended by over fifty of the leading out-of-town and local members.

Harry Stevenson, local president, presided and spoke on the subject of high rentals and what he said is the arbitrary contracting system recently inaugurated by the William Fox exchanges. The recent Fox ruling issued by the Philadelphia office, that no exhibitor will be furnished with Fox features unless he uses the Fox news, was condemned.

The Philadelphia exchange was also condemned by certain exhibitors for signing contracts for the re-issue of the Lee Kids under, it was said, representation that they were new subjects and for failure to stamp plainly on the face of the contract that the subjects were re-issues. Several exhibitors declared their intentions to file a complaint in this matter with the Federal Trade Commission.

Praises Foreign Film

"Love of Adventure" Said to Surpass Most Foreign Productions

High praise for "The Love of Adventure," a production just completed in Zagreb, Jugloslavia, comes to Moving Picture World from its correspondent there. The film was made by the Jugloslavia Film Company, and was written and directed by Alexander Verescagin.

The stellar role is portrayed by Alees Leskova, who, according to reports, acts with a dignity and reserve that is far superior to the acting of many foreign stars. The support, it is said, was rendered by an exceptionally able cast.

The production has already been booked in 80 per cent. of the theatres in Jugoslavia, and is expected to play every one in the country. Dr. Kolin, the managing-director of the company, with this picture, has, it is stated, made greater strides ahead of most other pictures produced here.

A Correction

Last week's rotogravure section announced: "Lloyd Hamilton in 'The Speeder,' his latest Educational-Mermaid comedy." The caption should have read: "Lloyd Hamilton in 'The Speeder,' his latest Educational comedy." Hamilton's comedies are not Mermaid comedies.

Countrywide Survey Shows Conditions Better

First National Conducts Big Newspaper Investigation

HIGHLY optimistic reports as to the business outlook for the coming fall and winter have been compiled by the statistical department of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., from data supplied direct from the editors and publishers of representative newspapers in all parts of the United States.

The First National survey covered a period of two months and more than 700 American newspapers were queried.

Ninety-seven per cent. of the replies received were that the 1922-23 business season would be marked by a sharp recovery from the post-war depression.

In the survey the editors and publishers were asked whether the unemployment situation had been remedied in their territories during the last six months; whether their observation of the business outlook for the fall and winter indicated a material change in unemployment for these two seasons as compared to last year; whether the cost of living had increased or decreased; whether retail sales of staple commodities had increased or decreased; and the attitude of local bankers and business men as to the outlook.

"On the strength of this survey," says a statement issued by First National, "members of the motion picture industry who have big pictures to show may feel assured of a big year for such productions. Everything indicates that the average motion picture patron is tired of cheap stories, cheap productions."

Following is a synopsis of the replies received in the survey:

Alabama, Mobile. Erwin Craighead, editor, the Register: Unemployment situation remedied, due to more money at easier rate, which encourages investment and increases demand of labor.

Arkansas, Little Rock, business manager, The Gazette: Business outlook for fall and winter indicates improvement over last year. State is prosperous. Local bankers, business men optimistic but advise caution, saying business conditions are not absolutely settled.

Colorado, Denver. Rocky Mountain News and Denver Times, Samuel S. Sherman, general manager: Unemployment situation remedied in the West, due to better crop movements, farming conditions and business in cities. Cost of living about 25 per cent. lower.

Connecticut, Hartford. C. L. Sherman, editor, The Times: Business outlook good. Industries 75 per cent. normal. Little change in retail sales staple commodities.

Georgia, Atlanta. Clark Howell, Jr., The Constitution: Slight improvement in unemployment situation. Business outlook indicates decided improvement. Ten per cent. increase in average income per capita. Cost of living has decreased slightly.

Idaho, Caldwell. C. J. Shorb, editor and publisher of the Daily News: Unemployment situation remedied because money has become more staple and investors feel more secure. Banker and business men optimistic.

Illinois, Chicago. Glenn Griswold, Chicago Journal of Commerce: Unemployment situation has improved to the extent that the steel industry and some other industries are facing a rather acute problem in finding help. Little change in average income per capita.

L. H. Miner, editor, Illinois State Journal, Springfield: Unemployment situation been decidedly remedied in this section of Illinois.

Indiana, Indianapolis. Russell E. Smith, Indianapolis Star: Sales have been better. Cost of living is lower and retail sales of staple commodities have increased.

South Bend. Boyd Gurley, editor, News-Times: Unemployment situation remedied completely. Industrial plants being enlarged, with no cessation of new orders.

Kansas, Topeka. H. T. Chase, editor, Daily Capital: Unemployment situation remedied. Surplus of goods has gradually been absorbed; need of new goods has started manufacturing in most lines.

Leavenworth, Kansas. J. E. Gardiner, editor, The Post: Retail sales of staple commodities have increased. Business men and bankers optimistic.

Kentucky, Owensboro. Lawrence W. Hager, editor, The Inquirer: Cost of living lower. Retail sales of staple commodities have increased.

Louisiana, New Orleans. Marshall Ballard, managing editor, The Item: Probably between 10 and 20 per cent. less unemployment. Cost of living, if anything, slightly lower. Rents still high. Retail sales of staple commodities have increased 30 to 35 per cent. Savings deposits in city and country begin to increase.

Shreveport. Dolph G. Frantz, editor, The Journal: Unemployment situation remedied. Bankers and business men optimistic.

Baton Rouge. Charles P. Menship, editor, The State-Times: Business moving at a normal rate. Cost of living lower. Retail sales of staple commodities have increased.

Maryland. Charles M. Harwood, editor, The Baltimore News, Baltimore: Unemployment situation remedied, as shown by observation, municipal reports and reports from various organizations.

Michigan. George B. Hassett, financial editor, The News, Detroit: Living costs decreased during the period of depression but now show a tendency upward. The prospects here are for a considerable period of prosperity, with business now very definitely on the upward side of the business cycle.

Minnesota. J. C. Hammond, financial editor, St. Paul Dispatch, St. Paul: Unemployment situation remedied in Minnesota. Work for all who care to work and at just wages. Cost of living slightly lower as compared to a year ago, and slightly higher than in April, 1922. Retail sales of staple commodities have increased.

Minneapolis. D. M. Carr, managing editor, Commercial West (Banking and Financial Weekly): Business in general is getting down to a more solid basis. Bank deposits show increase per capita of 3 to 7 per cent. in different parts of the Northwest. General living costs lower than a year ago. Rentals up as high as a year ago.

Mississippi. T. M. Hederman, Clarion Ledger, Jackson: Cost of living is lower. Sales of staple commodities have increased. Bankers and business men of this section look forward to prosperous times.

Missouri. E. Lansing Ray, editor, The Globe Democrat, St. Louis: Everyone more optimistic and contracts being made by manufacturers for a greatly increased volume of advertising. General viewpoint is optimistic, with proviso that it will not be a sudden but a general improvement, based on good business and crop conditions.

As Harry M. Crandall Sees It

Harry M. Crandall, of the Crandall Theatres, Washington, D. C., and vicinity, an original First National Franchise holder, one of the most successful exhibitors in the United States, here gives some ideas on motion pictures which exhibitors will absorb with interest. Read:

Our expectation with regard to the 1922-23 season is that it will be our record year.

The public we serve is "marketing" for good photoplay entertainment. We flourish only to the extent that we are able to impress patrons with the superiority of our bills, theatres and service.

All photoplay production is showing improvement by reason of the improved order of intelligence being devoted to every branch of authorship, production and acting.

The prime requisite for an improved status of the exhibitor's end of the industry is an active optimism that will incite redoubled effort to attract and hold a desirable clientele, and a complete abandonment of the idea that business is terrible and the exhibitor licked before he starts. The business is there. "Go and get it." It can be done, because our organization has done it right through the so-called "hard times" in the face of unprecedented and calamitous difficulties.

Kohn Opens Offices

Will Devote Entire Time to Production by Dependable Pictures Corporation

Morris Kohn, who has been treasurer of Select Pictures Corporation for some time, and recently organized the Dependable Pictures Corporation for the purpose of producing feature photoplays, has taken offices in the Putnam Building, 1492 Broadway, where, in the future, he will devote his entire time and attention to the interests of his new producing organization and such other motion picture activities as he may develop.

In announcing this new move on Mr. Kohn's part President Lewis J. Selznick, of Select Pictures Corporation, remarked: "I need scarcely say that, going to a field of new endeavor, Mr. Kohn takes with him my sincere best wishes as well as the best wishes of all other members of the Select and Selznick enterprises who have had abundant opportunity to find him a man of exceptional ability, sterling character and most lovable disposition. We wish Mr. Kohn and his Dependable Pictures Corporation a world of success."

Goldman Appointed

William Goldman, formerly managing director of the Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, Mo., has been appointed assistant to Harold B. Franklin in the Theatre Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Mr. Goldman is succeeded as managing director of the Missouri Theatre by Herschel Stuart, formerly associated with Southern Enterprises, Inc.

Morgan Resigns

The resignation of Oscar A. Morgan as assistant to E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and the appointment of Joseph H. Seidelman as his successor, were announced at a luncheon given in honor of the former at the Commodore Hotel on Tuesday, Sept. 26, by Mr. Shauer. The entire membership of the foreign department joined Mr. Shauer in extending farewells to Mr. Morgan and in giving an official welcome to Mr. Seidelman.

Japan a Good Market

Big Importer of Raw Stock

More than half a million dollars' worth of moving picture film was exported from the United States during the month of July, according to figures which have been compiled by the statistical division of the Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C. Our exports during the month included 2,706,135 linear feet of sensitized unexposed film, with a value of $80,930; 503,820 feet of exposed negatives, worth $55,697; and 9,350,123 feet of positive film with a value of $411,867

Japan was our most important market for raw stock, taking 1,861,526 feet valued at $53,096. Exports of exposed negatives were confined to some eight different countries, of which England was the best market, taking 223,910 feet, with a value of $21,123. Positive film, however, was shipped to some 40 different countries, of which the most important markets were Canada, taking 1,385,832 feet, valued at $73,289; Australia, taking 1,436,268 feet, with a value of $61,773; and Argentina, which took 1,192,151 feet, valued at $59,069.

Great Gathering Expected at Michigan M.P.T.O. Convention

WITH both branches of the industry represented, the exhibitors by their National President, Sydney S. Cohen, and the producers by Will Hays or his representative, the coming convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan, which will convene in Flint, October 10 and 11, promises to be the greatest gathering of its knd ever held in Michigan.

At that time it is expected that 300 exhibitors of the state will gather at the Durant Hotel to lay plans for the improvement of exhibitor conditions, and the general improvement of the industry. The two days designated for the convention will be crowded full.

Practical assurance has been received that Will H. Hays will be present and speak at the session on Tuesday afternoon and at the banquet which will be held Tuesday evening. Sydney S. Cohen, national president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, whose active leadership has done much in placing the national organization where it is today, will be present and with him will come M. J. O'Toole of Pennsylvania, head of the public service department of the national organization; A. J. Moeller, general manager of the national organization; Lieutenant-Governor Thomas Read; Police Commissioner James W. Inches of Detroit, head of the Police Department and under whose supervision the censoring of films in Michigan is done; Alfred J. Murphy of Detroit, legal counsel of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan, all have signified their acceptance of the invitations extended to them and will speak.

The first event on the program after the business session of the morning of the 10th will be a tour of one of the big auto factories. Following this trip, the business session of Tuesday afternoon will take place.

Tuesday evening a banquet will be held for all exhibitors, wives, exchangemen and wives, and plans are being made for 400 places. Special music will be provided through the co-operation of the Flint Chamber of Commerce, which has also arranged that Mayor MeKeighan will welcome the exhibitors to Flint.

Wednesday will be given over to business sessions and addresses and during the day election of officers. A special program has been arranged for the ladies.

One of the features of the convention this year, and a departure from the ordinary will be the exhibit being held in co-operation with the following film exchanges: First National, Paramount, Metro, Hodkinson, Robertson-Cole or Film Booking Offices, Minter United, Joe Horwitz, Universal, Standard, Select, Rex Film and Vitagraph. Here exhibitors will see the latest advance matter on coming productions.

The program of matters to be considered by the organization will be collective buying, reduction in the price of accessories, the carnival and medicine show situation, higher type of advertising, music tax, uniform contract, arbitration plan, and legislative matters and other matters of importance.

During the year the outstanding features of the accomplishments of the organization were the assistance given which resulted in the elimination of the five per cent. film rental tax, the establishment of an insurance department, whereby exhibitors can save approximately twenty-five per cent. and possibly more on insurance, and the establishment of a set of trade rules and board of arbitration between exhibitors and distributors.

Laemmle Tells Why Universal Will Not Make Films in Europe

American type pictures cannot be made in Europe, and the American motion picture industry is not in any danger of having American pictures supplanted in this country by European-made films, is the word brought back from across the Atlantic by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, who arrived in New York last Saturday aboard the Aquitania.

Mr. Laemmle was in Europe for four months, studying the possibilities of making pictures in Europe with American stars. He found that the difficulty of obtaining American "atmosphere" for such pictures makes them almost prohibitive. "Europe is not the place to make pictures for America," is his opinion.

A letter of congratulation upon his safe arrival was sent to Mr. Laemmle by Mayor Hylan of New York City. The letter was rushed down the bay by aeroplane and dropped on the deck of the vessel.

Mr. Laemmle was accompanied by Mrs. Maurice Fleckley, a relative, by his children, Rosabelle and Julius, and his secretary, Harry Zehner. Eddie Laemmle, Universal's leading serial director, and a nephew of the Universal chief, returned the day before, aboard the Reliance. He had gone to Europe to produce a Universal screen adaptation of a popular novel, but suffered a nervous breakdown.

Regarding film production in Europe, Mr. Carl Laemmle said:

"There is nothing like trying a thing to find out if it will go. I am convinced, however, that Europe is not the place to make pictures for America. In the first place, conditions there are totally different from conditions in this country, and the difference in exchange is more than counteracted by the distance from your base of supplies, as it were, and the difficulty of getting American atmosphere.

"Furthermore, I didn't see a single actor or actress in Europe who can possibly be made to look like an American actor or actress. You can spot them in a minute on the screen. In the first place, their gestures and expressions are entirely different, and in the second place, there are no clothes in Europe that look at all like American clothes. I suppose I might have found some American clothes in Paris, but I was there only a day or so. There are no ingenues in Europe at all, as far as I can see.

"I was particularly pleased with the experiment I have just made of releasing films in Europe at the same time they are released in this country. Heretofore American productions were two years late in showing in England. The film situation in England, so far as I could see, is vastly improved."

Can't Break Contract

"Indenture" of Mary Astor to Harry Durant is Binding

That Harry Durant, director of the scenario department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has a legal and binding "indenture" or so-called "master and servant" contract with 17-year-old Mary Astor, motion picture actress, is the conclusion of Justice Philip J. McCook of the New York Supreme Court, in denying her application for an injunction that would restrain Durant from interfering with her making a contract with the Distinctive Productions, Inc., or any other motion picture concern.

Mary Astor's name off the screen is Lucille Langhanke, and she resides with her parents at 44 West 10th street. The action was brought by her father Otto, as her guardian, who alleged that Durant, an old friend of the family, indentured Lucille as an apprentice, for the purpose of making a motion picture star out of her. After she passed the $100 per week salary ratio, the indenture provided Durant was to receive 25 per cent. on all salary over that sum. It was alleged by Lucille's parent that Durant actually did very little to promote the terms of the indenture, and that the girl's success in a histrionic way was due to her father's efforts and influence, and for this reason the court was also asked to cancel the indenture. Durant denied the allegations of Lucille's parent, holding that he had lived up to the contract, which still has three years to run.

The young star has appeared as leading woman in the Tri-Arts films, "Beggar Maid," "The Young Painter" and "Hope," and with Glenn Hunter in "Second Fiddle." It was alleged by the father that his daughter has an offer of $1,000 per week for services in a screen production.

Glucksmann in N. Y.

Max Glucksmann, Paramount distributor in Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru and Bolivia, arrived in New York Monday, September 25, on the American Legion. Mr. Glucksmann told of encouraging conditions in the Argentine film industry and predicted a prosperous year in the film trade.

Guests of Eastman

Will H. Hays and Courtland Smith left New York Thursday for Rochester, N. Y., to be the guests there of George Eastman. During their day's stay in Rochester Messrs. Hays and Smith will inspect the big Eastman plant.

Engineers to Meet

The Fall convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers will be held at the Powers Hotel, Rochester, New York, October 9 to 12. A trip of inspection will be made to the new Eastman Theatre, and through the Eastman Kodak Company and the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company.

Please Answer

C. E. Cook, business manager for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners, of Kansas, has prepared a list of questions which have been sent out to all members of the association, with a request to please answer each question and return the questionnaire to the headquarters of the organization. The questions relate to facts concerning the exhibitor's show.

Changes in Staff

Announcement was made this week of the appointment of Alan D. Marr to be assistant general sales manager of Associated Exhibitors. Almost immediately came the announcement also that A. W. Smith, Jr., had been named to succeed Mr. Marr as assistant general manager of Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation.

The appointment of an assistant to W. B. Frank, general sales manager of Associated Exhibitors, was made necessary by the rapidly expanding business.

Fire in San Francisco

Ten persons were injured, on film exchange was destroyed, and several were badly damaged Wednesday night, Oct. 4, in the worst film fire San Francisco has ever had.

Condemn Censorship

Labor Calls It "Vicious, Tyrannical and Oppressive"

Motion picture theatre owners throughout New York State have received a four-page circular during the past week from Peter J. Brady, president of the New York State Allied Printing Trades Council, asking that all theatre owners work to bring about the repeal of certain so-called "vicious, tyrannical and oppressive legislation," and which includes motion picture censorship.

The circular, in part, goes on to state that:

"Organized labor in this state condemns the motion picture censorship law. It is an act conceived in tyranny and extends not only to the film, but to every form of printed or other advertisement or announcement connected with the film, whether in the columns of the newspaper or elsewhere. It smashes to atoms the constitutional guarantee of free press and free publication.

"The New York State Federation of Labor opposed this vicious violation of the constitution while it was being advanced in the Legislature and before Governor Miller for action. It has sought its repeal in the Legislature of 1922. It will seek its repeal again in the coming Legislature of 1923, and will not rest until it is either annulled by the highest courts or by the Legislature. The sole subject of such a law is to control the means of publication and communication among the people, and if permitted to remain will be the open door to other oppressions.

"Organized labor invites your co-operation and assistance in calling this state of affairs to the attention of the various candidates for election in your district. We ask you to join with us in urging every candidate for the Legislature to pledge himself to bring about the repeal of the state censorship law, as there are now sufficient laws and power vested in the legal authorities of the state to take good care of and punish any persons who may violate them."

An Active Campaign

The new board of directors of Pictures-in-Motion, Inc., Boston, has mapped out an active campaign for the organization. Its productions are being handled by M. H. Hoffman, of True Art Films Company, and are scheduled for early release. The productions which have already been made and which have met with success are "Dora" and "Gossip."

Hays on Committee

Walter Hays, vice-president of the Mitchell H. Mark Realty Corporation, owners of the New York and Brooklyn Strand Theatres, is serving as a member of the First National rotating committee. This committee is composed of First National franchise holders, who visit the New York offices and take an active part for two weeks in the executive work of the organization.

American Film Company Denies It Wrongfully Re-issued Films

ADMITTING it re-made and re-issued certain films under new titles, American Film Company, Inc., in an answer filed with the Federal Trade Commission, denies that the films were re-issued within the meaning of the term as given in the complaint recently issued by the commission, or with an inconsequential amount of new or additional matter. The company states that during the years 1919 and 1920 it revised, changed and made over certain films originally issued, by making changes by cuts from the original photographs, changing the continuity, and in sequences, changes in main titles, new additional sub-titles and new illustrations for sub-titles, and by changes in tinting and toning, that all the pictures were re-made and re-photographed and the new pictures were issued under new names.

It is admitted that the pictures as released were without any statement to the public that they were re-issues, nor was it indicated or stated that they were re-issued in either the photoplays themselves or in the advertising matter furnished by the company in exploiting such exhibitions. However, it is stated, in the case of each of the films so issued, the public were advised upon the films and in the advertising matter furnished that the photoplays were adapted from photoplays previously issued. It is denied that any of the photoplays or advertising matter contained equivocal statements in this regard printed in such type as did not or could not be readily observed or which did not fairly convey the fact with reference to the issue of the films.

The company admits that in some of the photoplays depicted by said films the leading roles had been enacted by an actor or an actress in the employ of the respondent who had become well-known to and popular with the general public, and that the popularity of said photoplays largely attended upon the fact that such stars enacted the leading roles that in some instances the stars of the leading roles were no longer connected with the respondent at the time the changed and revised films were issued and that in some instances the stars were at that time in the employment of competitors.

It is denied, however, that the issuing, leasing and advertising of the changed and revised films had the capacity or tendency to or did mislead or deceive exhibitors, or cause them to believe that they were leasing and exhibiting new films never before released, or that their patrons were caused to attend the exhibition of such films in the belief that they were to see new photoplays.

It is also denied that by these premises the reputations of such exhibitors were injured, or the goodwill and patronage of the theatre-going public to them was lost, or that the premises had the further capacity or tendency unduly to hinder competitors of the respondent. The commission is asked to dismiss the complaint.

Interest in Long Runs

Suburban Exhibitors in Australia Find They Help Receipts

The advent of the big Fox specials, such as "Over the Hill," "Connecticut Yankee" and the "Queen of Sheba" is causing a change in the methods of the exhibitors in Australia and New Zealand, according to reports received at the Fox offices in New York City.

Until the advent of these big productions the picture houses had been showing about 16,000 feet of film at each performance, using two features, and the exhibitor was contracting for his films at so much per week, instead of buying each feature, as is done in this country. The rental price of the big picture was so much in advance of the weekly film rental that the city exhibitors were compelled to turn to long runs. With the success of "Over the Hill," the first of the big Fox pictures shown, the suburban theatre exhibitors immediately began to clamor against these long city runs, claiming that the short runs should continue, so that they would be able to cash in better with the pictures.

But before the matter came to a head, the suburban exhibitors found that the long city run caused the suburban patrons to get quite excited over the new pictures and that the suburban theatre profited to a greater extent, just as they do here when a picture like "Over the Hill" plays an entire year on Broadway, Fox says.

Asks Big Damages

Justice Francis Martin, of the N. Y. Supreme Court, has signed an order requiring individuals and corporations prominent in the motion picture world to show cause, why they should not be restrained from doing acts which —according to Joseph R. Singer, treasurer of the Peekskill (N. Y.) Theatre, Inc.—tend to make that corporation's investment of $150,000 a loss. Singer avers that he was set up and prevented from earning a living in his own way because his theatre in which his brother, Louis, is also a stockholder, was so situated as to complete with a Loew show house. He asked in addition to a restraining order, $250,000 damages; also an accounting for profits received at the rival playhouse through the exhibition of pictures which should have been exhibited in his own, he says.

The defendants are Advances Amusement Company, Inc., Dave Bernstein, Nicholas M. Schenck, Joseph M. Schenck, Fred Mitchell, Loew, Inc., and Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Returns to Direct

After a six years' vacation from this field of activity, Mrs. Julia Crawford Ivers, pioneer of women film directors, has returned to her earliest work in pictures. Mrs. Ivers leaves shortly for Honolulu with Betty Compson and a company of Paramount players to direct "The White Flower," a story of her own which she wrote during a recent visit to the Hawaiian Islands.

Decision Reserved

Justice Isidor Wasservogel, in the equity term of the N. Y. Supreme Court, has reserved decision on an application of Bernard K. Bimberg, motion picture producer, to make permanent a temporary injunction, restraining John Cort, John Cort, Inc., William and Louis Minsky, from ejecting or in any way interfering with his operation of the Park Theatre, Fifty-ninth street and Columbus circle, where he has been giving Sunday evening performances.

Bimberg says he paid his rent promptly, but in April last was notified by Cort he had disposed of the place to the Minsky Brothers, and could not guarantee they would renew the lease to Bimberg for Sunday nights.

Comes Up Again

"The Binderup case," which has attracted much attention during the last three years, will again be brought into the limelight when it comes before the United States Supreme Court, Washington, D. C., Oct. 2.

The case is the outgrowth of a suit by Charles G. Binderup, former Mindon, Neb., exhibitor, against Pathe exchanges and the Omaha Film Board of Trade for $750,000 alleged damages.

Allens Thought Behind New Chain of Canadian Houses

Announcement is made of the organization of an entirely new chain of moving picture theatres in Canada by an enterprise that is titled Sterling Theatres, Ltd. It is intimated that the new chain is being organized by Allens, including H. J. Allen and Max Allen. One of the early acquisitions of the company has been the Walkerville Theatre in Walkerville, Ontario, which is operated under the direction of Max Allen. Two theatres have been secured in Toronto, La Plaza Theatre, 735 Queen street east, and the National Theatre, 373 Yonge street.

Sterling Theatres, Ltd., has also secured or will acquire theatres in various Ontario centers outside of Toronto, it is declared. These houses are located at Windsor, Paris and elsewhere.

Whether the development of the Sterling Theatres chain is a sequel to the failure of Allen Theatres, Ltd., Toronto, or is an organization which is being undertaken by several of the Allens formerly identified with the Allen chain, is a matter that is arousing discussion in Canadian theatre circles.

Several theatres in Toronto, Ontario, have been acquired by Bud Lennon, for many years with the Canadian Universal Film Company, and lately with the Stephen Aattractions, Ltd., Toronto. One of the houses secured is the Imperial Theatre, 366 Queen street east, while another is reported to be the Aster Theatre, 233 Ossington avenue. The former manager of the Imperial Theatre is William Sturgess, who has been appointed a salesman with the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., Toronto, which is the Allen exchange. The control of the theatres mentioned has nothing to do with Stephenson Attractions, Ltd., it is said.

The Manitoba Exhibitors' Association has secured action on the part of the City of Winnipeg and neighboring municipalities in the matter of restricting traveling carnival shows which had become something more than a nuisance in the Province.. After agitation extending over several months, the exhibitors prevailed upon the city to prohibit the carnivals from conducting prolonged engagements in future.

The exhibitors of Montreal, Quebec, have lined up with a co-operative movement for the staging of a "Go to the Theatre" campaign in the Canadian metropolis, after Moving Picture World's idea announced several weeks ago. Arrangements have been made to conduct the campaign as a "special week" and the date selected is the week of October 9. Special film bookings have been planned, co-operative stunts in the downtown section of the city, unusual lobby displays, newspaper appeals and other features are to be offered to arouse enthusiasm.

After twenty-five years as manager of the Grand Opera House, Toronto, one of the downtown theatres, James W. Cowan has resigned to take over duties with the Royal Alexandra Theatre, a Toronto dramatic house.

Harry Pomeroy, former manager of the Strand Theatre, Ottawa now has charge of two theatres in different cities of Ontario for the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, one being the handsome Regent Theatre, Oshawa, and the other the Royal Theatre, Port Hope. Incidentally. Pomeroy's family was recently increased by the arrival of a third child.

Walter Thomas, formerly a theatre manager, of Buffalo, N. Y., is the manager of Shea's Hippodrome, Toronto, which has started out this season with an exclusive picture policy. The Hippodrome recently installed an organ which is acknowledged to be the largest instrument in all Canada.

A. C. Smith, former proprietor of the Crescent and Isis Theatres at Calgary, Alberta, has been engaged as a salesman on the staff of the Toronto office of Regal Films, by H. M. Master, Toronto branch manager.

Henry Morton, owner of the Monarch Theatre, Winnipeg, has leased the Gaiety Theatre, Winnipeg, from the Capitol Loan Company for a period of five years. The Gaiety has been bought from John Morgan by this company for $119,000 and the theatre has been undergoing extensive alterations, the latter costing around $30,000, it is announced. The house is now ready for re-opening.

Manager E. A. Lake, of Loew's Theatre, London, Ontario, co-operated with the Canadian Bicycle Dealers' Association in the staging of a special theatre night as a feature for the convention of the association which was attended by dealers from thirty Canadian cities. A special bicycle vaudeville act, a bicycle picture and amateur home-trainer bicycle races were presented for the event.

W. S. Jones, manager at Winnipeg, Manitoba, for First National, has resigned and is leaving the city to take up residence in California, where he has invested in oil property. Jones, who had been a resident of Winnipeg for twenty-seven years, had been vice president of the Manitoba Exhibitors' Association, representing the exchanges in that organization. He was the proprietor of the Colonial and Bijou Theatres a number of years ago and had also been the local representative of Fox Film for several years. He has been succeeded as local manager for First National by W. H. Mitchell of Calgary.

The Daddy of Them All

ACCORDING to Hoyle, Diogenes had a tough time when he and his lantern went around looking for an honest man. We're going to have a tough job finding the oldest exhibitor, in years of service, but he will be found. He must be an exhibitor who has never dabbled in producing or distributing, but has only presented motion pictures—a simon-pure, dyed-in-the-wool exhibitor.

Where is he? In Frisco? Or Kansas City? Or Cleveland? Or in the Massachusetts home of the humble bean? That's a puzzler right now. The only way to solve it is to send in your nominations. And then, too, it would be interesting to know the senior exhibitor in each territory.

Remember! We want the names and biographies only of those who have never engaged in any other branch of the motion picture business but exhibiting. If you were an exhibitor twelve years and an exchange man one month, you're out of luck. On the other hand, the fact that you may have had to close your theatre temporarily doesn't make you ineligible.

A further example: Thomas D. Moule, manager of the Capitol and Madison theatres, and supervisor of screen presentations at the Adams Theatre, all of Detroit, is an old-timer in point of service. Henry J. Brock, a brother-in-law of Mitchell H. Mark, now dead, got him interested in a circuit of theatres. Then Mr. Brock became president of Kinemacolor and Tom Moule went with him as an executive. Tom later went back to exhibiting with John H. Kunsky, and he's been with the Detroit magnate ever since. But Tom can't be hailed as Daddy because of his Kinemacolor connections.

When we find this oldest exhibitor, the daddy of them all, we're going to ask him to review the progress of the industry for us—tell about the old days and the new days. It will be interesting reading, don't you think?

Write us immediately, giving full details—the theatres you've had, the years you had 'em and your age. If you're of the feminine sex, why, never mind about the age.

Here's to learn the senior exhibitor, in years of service, in the United States, and in each territory. Come one, come all.

Michigan Prison Chaplain Thanks the Theatre Owners

H. M. Richey, manager of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan, has received a letter of thanks from the Rev. William F. Hopp, chaplain of the Michigan State Prison at Jackson, for the entertainment which was put on there on Labor Day for the inmates. Among those who aided in getting up the program were Wally Baker and Harry Bruce, of the Michigan Exhibitors' Vaudeville Association; Maurice and Sam Caplan, of the Metropolitan Picture Company; Thomas Penfold, of the Remick Music Publishing Company; the Standard Film Service, First National, Fox and Metro, Arnold Johnson's orchestra and Harold Jarvis, popular Detroit tenor.

The committee in charge of arrangements for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners', of Michigan, annual convention at Flint, on October 10 and 11, has announced that Dr. James Inches, police commissioner, of Detroit, has been secured to deliver an address at the convention. Mr. Inches is a very excellent speaker and a man who realizes the future of the industry, and exhibitors who have heard him before are glad to know that he will be present at Flint to address them.

The regular meeting of the Joint Board of Arbitration was held September 22 in the office of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan and was very well attended, every member of the board who will handle claims for the next three months, being present. The board representing the exchanges is comprised of Harry Scott, Ralph Peckham, Jess Fishman and W. E. Wilkinson, as secretary.

The board representing the exhibitors is made up of Claude E. Cady, chairman; James C. Ritter, Phil Gleichman and H. T. Hall. This meeting marks the resumption of regular meetings for the fall and winter months. It has not been necessary for the arbitration board to meet so often during the summer, as many theatres are closed and what claims did come up were settled before coming to the board, but now they are settling into the regular routine and meetings will be held regularly. The next one is slated for September 29.

E. N. Mandlebaum, of the Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, accompanied by Mrs. Mandlebaum, is spending a few weeks at the Battle Creek Sanitarium.

Phil Gleichman, of the Broadway-Strand, Detroit, has booked "Broadway Rose" for an early October showing.

John Ennor, of the Broadway-Strand Theatre, Union City, celebrated the first anniversary of his house by having the Bronson Uniformed Band of thirty pieces give an outdoor concert in front of the theatre. Ennor is one of the livest exhibitors in the state and as a result his house has been doing an excellent business.

Houdini is scheduled to make a personal appearance at the Madison, a Kunsky house, in Detroit, the week of October 8, in connection with his picture, "The Man Beyond."

The Sheridan Theatre, located at the corner of Sheridan and Kercheval avenues, Detroit, has been purchased from William Sheik and Fred Leverenz by F. W. Taylor, of Calumet. Mr. Sheik and Mr. Leverenz are retiring from the show business to devote their entire time to other interests.

Burrel Tripp, who already owns the Center and Princess Theatres in South Haven, recently purchased the "O. K." which now gives him everything in the town.

Hope Hampton, who made a personal appearance at the Capitol Theatre, Detroit, the week of September 18, proved a big drawing card. She visited Navin Field, met the famous "Ty" Cobb and saw the Tigers lose to New York. Some great publicity stunts were pulled off during her visit here, among which was a free matinee for redheaded girls, on September 20. This was attended by about 300 girls, from whom Miss Hampton selected fifty to attend a dinner at the Hotel Wolverine, on September 22.

The Temple Theatre, Grand Rapids, is undergoing a general cleaning and redecorating process. New carpets and new electric light shades have been added, which greatly increase the appearance of the house. The theatre has not been closed a day since its opening under the management of George Spaeth, three years ago. The redecorating work is being done at night, immediately following the close of the last show, and in the forenoons, so as not to lose a day during the process.

Eugene Brewer, of the Strand Theatre, Owosso, has returned from an extended business trip to California.

A diminutive racing car, painted white, and seating only the driver, has been scorching the Detroit pavements for several days, in connection with "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," which is showing at several neighborhood houses in the city.

Jacob Schrieber, of the Blackstone Theatre, is on another hunting trip in the Northwest. The last time out he bagged three of the largest bears ever captured and has the skins on exhibition in his den at the Blackstone.

Cleveland's Doan Theatre Makes Way for New House

The old Doan Theatre, Cleveland, has been torn down and construction of a big office and store building, with a new theatre, has begun. The steel work for the theatre is partly up and it is possible that the house will be opened by February 1. The theatre is being built by a syndicate of investors, headed by Joseph Laronge, a well-known local real estate man, and vice president of Loew's Ohio Theatres, Inc. No information as to who will operate the theatre, when completed, has been given out.

"Grandma's Boy" opened in Cleveland at the Allen Theatre, on October 1, and played to a tremendous business. The Cleveland exchange is now using five prints, and is unable to cope with the demand.

Tom Carroll, well-known Cleveland theatre manager, is now located in the State Theatre, where he is acting as assistant manager and publicity man. The State recently hopped over from pictures to Shubert vaudeville. Tom says it's nothing new to him, because he used to be a vaudeville actor, but regrets he has so little time to view the new pictures, which was his hobby.

Francis P. Mangan, New York stage director and prologue producer, has been brought to Cleveland by the Loew interests, and is engaged in similar work in that city. Mangan is staging novelties in the Stillman, Allen and Park Theatres. One very effective prologue that drew attention from the newspaper critics was that used for Mae Murray in "Broadway Rose." He combined a Prizma color film with a dissolving arrangement, introducing a girl dancer. This gave the effect of a girl dancing in the distance.

In the Allen Theatre, as a novelty the week of October 1, Mangan used the "Song of India" in a combination singing and dancing effect. Mangan also staged the style show which was presented at the State Theatre the middle of September. He formerly was with Victor Herbert, and also put on prologues for Famous Players' theatres in St. Louis, Detroit and New York.

Write Mr. O'Toole

M. J. O'Toole, of the Department of Public Service, M. P. T. O. A., has asked the Regional News service department to announce that all exhibitors considering public meetings in their localities, and at a loss for public service programs, should write him at the national exhibitor headquarters, 132-136 West Forty-third street, New York City.

Exhibitors' Joyous Cries Resounding in Louisville

Chilly weather both afternoon and night over the week-end of Sept. 23, resulted in standing room only in most of the downtown theatres of Louisville, although the local houses fail in the matter of putting out "S. R. O." signs. They figure that most people who pay to get in, will stay even if they do have to wait, whereas if they are told in advance that it is a case of standing, they may pass up the show. However, admission is refunded to those who do not care to wait for seats. In spite of the fact that Louisville has more show houses than ever before, business is good at all of the downtown theatres, which as a rule find their big months in the pleasant fall and spring months.

Reduction by the street car companies of fares to 6 cents on tickets, 7 cents cash, and children ride for nothing up to 5 years of age, should be an aid. There has never been a very definite line in Louisville between children and adults. Boys in knee pants are considered as children, but short skirts couldn't be considered as a badge of youthfulness among the other sex, or grandmothers would be using children's tickets.

There has never been a very clear line drawn as to what constitutes infants. Most theatres don't want infants in arms, but admit them free. Children up to 3 or 4 years of age are generally admitted free, but houses are becoming a little stricter in that matter, as too many of the children admitted free occupy seats. Baby buggy parking has gone entirely out of style, as the fire marshals won't stand for it, and again the flivver has had a hand in that matter.

The new Kentucky Theatre, at Lexington, controlled by Col. Fred Levy and M. Switow, Louisville; and Wm. M. James, plans to open within the next week or ten days. Harry F. Eger, who has been with the Ada Meade Theatre, as manager, will take charge. Big road shows, fine pictures, etc., will be shown, the First National and United attractions along with others being featured.

R. R. Russell, a former advertising man, who has been with the Palace Theatre, of Memphis, Tenn., has come to Lexington, Ky., as manager of the Ada Meade, to succeed Henry M. Eger, who became manager of the Kentucky.

C. F. Krause, formerly with the Arcade Theatre, Paducah, and Empress Theatre, Owensboro, has been appointed manager of the Kentucky Theatre, Louisville. M. Switow, one of the owners of the house, has been looking after it, with no regular manager, but is now so busy with a number of interests and opening of the new Kentucky at Lexington, that a full time manager became necessary for the Kentucky at Louisville. The latter has been a very successful house, and will celebrate its first anniversary October 8, when it will have "The Four Horsemen" at popular prices of 20 cents. The Kentucky has been a second run and lesser feature house.

The Alamo Theatre, which, after installing a big orchestra, advanced night prices to 40 cents and afternoon prices to 25 cents, is getting the advance easily and showing that the public is willing to pay for good pictures.

Charles N. Koch, manager of the Rex Theatre, Louisville, as a member of the Louisville Optimist Club, was one of a large number of Louisville business men's whose cuts were used in the Louisville Times a few days ago, when the paper ran about a ten-page section devoted to the local club.

The Schubert interests and the Flexner interests at Louisville are still scrapping. Forcible detainer proceedings were filed a few days ago by the Schubert interests to force the Flexner interests to vacate offices in the Schubert building, which is another angle of the fight of the Schuberts to remove the Flexners from any connection whatever with the building, which was purchased a year or more ago by the Flexners for the Schuberts. The holding company is incorporated as the Flexner Real Estate Co., of which J. J. Schubert is president, he taking that position at a reorganization of the holding company in New York last June. On August 1, the Schuberts took complete charge of the building and company, but the Flexners are fighting to retain the managerial end of the real estate.

J. H. Michael, of Buffalo, Is Active in Exhibitor Behalf

J. H. Michael, manager of the Regent Theatre and chairman of the executive committee of the M. P. T. O. of New York, Inc., has been named chairman of the board of directors of the Western New York unit of the state organization. Mr. Michael and his associates on the board are now working on a campaign to fight daylight saving in Buffalo. This proposition will be put to a referendum at the coming election and theatre men here hope to kill the ordinance, which is very harmful to their business during the summer months.

Billy West has resigned the management of the Central Park Theatre in the North Main street section to become manager of the Premier at Main and Leroy, which is operated by Harry Green. Mr. Green will soon re-open the Temple on William street with a picture policy. J. Savage, who is the father of Jim Savage of the Universal exchange office force, has succeeded Mr. West as manager of the Central Park.

Fred M. Shafer announces the appointment of Bill Whiston as manager of the Olympic Theatre on Lafayette Square, succeeding William McKenna who recently resigned and returned to the Shubert Theatre in Detroit. Mr. Whiston has had a long experience in the theatre business. He is a brother of Frank Whiston, former secretary to Commissioner John F. Malone and publicity director for the Lafayette Square and Olympic.

Walter Hayes, Mark-Strand official, returns to Buffalo next Monday after representing Moe Mark on the rotating committee at the New York First National office.

P. H. Smith, former manager of the First National and United Artists' exchange and recently a salesman for Goldwyn, has been appointed manager of the new Warner Brothers' exchange here. He soon will announce the location of permanent quarters, which will probably be in the new film building in North Pearl street. Mr. Smith is well known among exhibitors of Western New York. He has been associated with Buffalo's Film Row for many years.

Harry E. Lotz, manager of the Select exchange, announces the appointment of G. H. Quigley, formerly with Pathe, as a member of the Buffalo office sales staff.

Howard F. Smith, manager of the Palace Theatre, turned over the house to Anna Katherine Green Thursday evening, September 28, when the famous Buffalo author invited a party of friends to see a picturization of her story, "The Mayor's Wife," which in its screen form is entitled "His Wife's Husband," and stars Betty Blythe.

The new organ at Shea's Hippodrome will not be ready until the end of this month, according to Manager Vincent McFaul, who also says that business is now better than at any time in the history of the big picture house. Each week sees the preceding week's box office record beaten. Better times are back.

Bruce Fowler, manager of the Elmwood, is putting out some attractive advertising these days. He is featuring the new organ and its player, Frank Leon. Business has picked up wonderfully since the installation of this instrument.

Sydney Samson has closed "Rich Men's Wives" for presentation at the Lafayette Square. The Grand & North exchange manager also has signed up "More to be Pitied Than Scorned," at the Olympic.

More than 300 local orphans were the guests of the Olympic and the Buffalo Times at a special showing of "Trouble," Tuesday morning, October 3. The stunt was put over by H. L. Beecroft in charge of exploitation for First National.

With the approach of cooler weather and the passing of daylight saving, business at the local picture houses is picking up in fine shape. Many of the larger theatres are enjoying capacity every night and the prediction by many that this would be the most successful season in local film history seems to be coming true. The big improvement in the quality of the productions being offered is one of the principal factors in the box office revival. Some of the downtown houses, notably Shea's Hippodrome and the Olympic, are giving patrons extra quantity, such as double bills at the latter and the biggest features obtainable at regular prices at the former.

Goldsmith and Hartford of Seattle, Long Film Partners

With the remodeling of the Society Theatre, a neighborhood house in the Broadway district, owned by L. L. Goldsmith and Wm. M. Hartford, is brought to light the interesting fact that these two have been partners in the picture game since 1908, either financially or actively, for fourteen years. This fact dates them back pretty well into the history of motion pictures in the Northwest.

Goldsmith "covered" the Northwest for Moving Picture World as far back as 1908, and to his knowledge was the only Northwestern representative for the pioneer moving picture publication at that time. He served in this capacity for upwards of three years. For several years he operated with road shows of "Top of the World" pictures and the famous "Curtis Indian Pictures." After a brief interval during which he was identified with Pathe, he purchased the Class A Theatre, a downtown house in Seattle. He owned this house for three years, selling out in 1918.

Goldsmith next took a whack at the small towns, having owned successively the Orpheum, Snohomish, Wash., and the Monroe, Monroe, Wash., both of which he operated at the same time. He next bought out R. K. Dunham's Mission and Rex Theatres in Mount Vernon, Wash., later selling them back to Mr. Dunham. He then operated the La Connor Theatre, in La Connor, Wash. In 1920 he returned to Seattle and purchased the Society Theatre, which he now operates.

During 1919, Mr. Goldsmith decided that he needed a vacation. He took it in the form of a transcontinental auto trip, in a Buick-6, stopping in New York and along the line to get acquainted. He believes the industry is still in its infancy, with unlimited possibilities and the future well assured. At present writing he intends to stick and grow up with it.

Mr. Hartford began his motion picture career back in 1907 with Caille and Kunsky, managing several of their penny arcades. He picked up operating at the Casino Theatre on Monroe avenue, Detroit. Getting the "Go West, Young Man" urge, he went to Seattle, where he managed Levy's Circle Theatre on Second avenue, between Madison and Marion streets, in 1908. At the time, the Circle and the Dream Theatres were the highest priced theatres in town, charging 10 cent admissions. The Circle was the first step toward better picture houses in Seattle.

Hartford, a little later, road-showed with the Jeffries-Johnson fight pictures, for which the biggest price on record was paid, $10,000 for five states. From 1908 to 1912, he operated houses in Seattle and Tacoma, on the Levy Circuit, then took over the Rex in Olympia, Wash., which he sold later, and was for a short time identified with the Seattle Stage Lighting Co., in addition to his other interests, until his present active partnership with Goldsmith, at the Society Theatre, where he handles the publicity end.

These two young partners, who have grown up together in the game, are now spending about $7,000 in remodeling, redecorating and equipping, installing a heating and ventilating system in their Society Theatre, which seats 450 patrons. Much work has been done while the house was open, but about a five-day closing will be necessary. They will reopen with "The Storm." They claim for their house the distinction of being the first house in Seattle and second on the coast, to install two projection machines so that patrons would not have to wait "Just a moment, please, while the operator changes the reel!"

Mike Lyons, an old-timer here, who operates the Top Notch Theatre, recently was showing a two-reel Flynn detective story. In some manner it escaped inspection, and was shown to a good audience. But the reel was 200 feet short! It ceased abruptly in the midst of one of the big thrills. It took Lyons just about thirty seconds to flash a "To be continued" notice, and he sent 'em away satisfied. The next day he showed up at headquarters and demanded his next installment.

E. H. Hanbrook has remodeled the Ballard Theatre, on Ballard avenue, which was closed all summer. He reopened this week with Bill Hart in "The Desert Man" and played to capacity business with this re-issue feature.

A recent report has it that Si Danz has sold out his Liberty and Star Theatres in Astoria, Oregon, to the Real Arts Theatre Co., of which John Hamrick is said to be managing director. Hamrick recently opened a Blue Mouse Theatre in Astoria, and has been playing to excellent business. The Liberty has been closed for remodelling.

Harry Reed, the popular organist at Jensen & Von Herberg's Seattle Strand Theatre, has resigned to play the organ for A. H. MacDonald at his new Castle Theatre in Eugene, Oregon.

Pells & Swanson have reopened their Apollo Theatre in Everett, which has been closed since spring.

Mr. Steele reopened the Queen Anne Theatre on September 22, after renovating and installing a Gardiner gold fibre screen. His house seats about 400.

Neighborhood patronage is making an excellent record for the opening of the fall season. W. F. Code, who operates the Paramount Theatre in the Wallingford district, has been standing them up in line evenings for weeks. He has run "The Sheik" four times to the S. R. O. The Wallingford fair sex continues to get a thrill out of it and requests for more pour in. The Lee Theatre, ten blocks distant, reopened September 23 with Jackie Coogan in "My Boy," and turned them away.

George Reizner, who owns the Lyric in South Bend and the Tokay in Raymond, Washington, was in Seattle this week on Film Row.. Reizner named his Raymond house after the grapes from his large vineyard in California. If there's anything in comparisons, the house should be a success.

Since the opening of the Bellingham American, the Grand has been closed for remodeling and redecorating. About $20,000 will be spent by the Bellingham Theatres Company and 161 more seats installed, enlarging the capacity to 1,100. The Grand houses road shows as well as pictures. It will reopen in about a month.

The American Theatre, Bellingham, Wash., re-opened September 20 with "Grandma's Boy." The house has been remodelled and redecorated at an expense approximating $15,000, and is now considered one of the most modern houses in the Northwest. F. B. Walton is the manager and also the prime mover in the consolidation of Bellingham theatrical interests to form the recently organized Bellingham Amusement Company. Invitations for the premiere performance were extended to all leading Seattle film men, who responded to a man and were later tendered a banquet at the Hotel Leopold. Mr. Walton received many congratulations on the new house.

The Lee Theatre, formerly under the management of Mr. Bissinger, which was closed all summer, has been re-opened by Floyd Marsh. It is in the Meridian District of Seattle and seats 225. Marsh has recently returned from Alaska.

Jack Allender, of the Allender circuit of theatres, Spokane, was in Seattle, last week arranging bookings.

"Nope," he replied. "I don't use no advertising. I just tell my wife."

Joe Miller, of New York, looking after the M. P. T. O. A., has been busy in this section the past week, re-booking Movie Chats cancelled during the summer period.

Virgil N. Lappeus, who has just taken over the management of Harmanus Bleecker Hall in Albany, was the guest of honor at a reception in Troy a few nights ago. At the same time a cordial welcome was extended his successor, John Wagar, who will take over the management of Proctor's Fourth Street Theatre in Troy. During the evening Mr. Lappeus was presented with a set of fishing tackle. John Jackson acted as master of ceremonies.

John Angelo, of the Family Theatre in Utica, was in town this week, shaking hands with many of the exchange managers and incidentally reporting a good business.

Fred Elliott's Clinton Square Theatre here is undergoing a painting, the front being yellow with buff trimmings.

Myer Schine, who runs the Glove in Gloversville, and also has a number of other houses, while in town this week watching several screenings reported that business is on the pick-up in all of the smaller places.

From rumor, it is pretty certain that Schenectady's new State Theatre, one of the Strand chain, will open close to Thanksgiving, rather than during October.

Illinois and Chicago Units of M. P. T. O. A. Will Merge

Plans are underway for an amalgamation of the Illinois and Chicago branches of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners. It is expected that the combination of the two bodies will be completed before many days. Such an arrangement will do away with payment of two separate "dues" and will otherwise benefit the members. The officers of the two bodies will be retained.

Frank Thielen, one of Illinois' best known exhibitors, having theatres in Galesburg, Joliet, Aurora, Ottawa and other Illinois towns, suffered a severe accident recently. While passing a building under construction in Joliet he was struck by a brick, receiving a fractured skull. Reports from the hospital are encouraging and it is said he is well on his way to recovery, with no permanent effects from the accident.

Mrs. Ida Katz, wife of Samuel Katz, of Balaban & Katz, died recently after an illness of several months at the Katz country home. When the funeral services were held, the Chicago, Riviera and Tivoli theatres were closed until 6 o'clock. Messages of condolence were sent to the Katz family by both the Illinois Motion Picture Owners and the Chicago Motion Picture Theatre owners.

A convention of Vitagraph division managers was held in Chicago last week. Among those in attendance were G. A. Baldson, H. Bradley Fish and J. M. Duncan.

George Braddock, manager of the Argmore Theatre, whose greatest opposition for the past few months has been Lake Michigan's bathing beaches, found a picture that beat even those. What was it? Mack Sennett's "Crossroads of New York." Yessir! Stood 'em out two days with it!,

Pittsburgh Turns Out Forty to Welcome D. A. Harris Home

About forty exhibitors attended the welcome home and rally of exhibitors, held Wednesday noon, September 27, at the General Forbes Hotel, Pittsburgh, by the M. P. T. O. of West Pennsylvania. Dennis A. Harris, of the Harris & Davis Enterprises, one of the most aggressive members of the organization, was guest of honor, having just returned to the city from a three months' stay in Europe. Mr. Harris spoke of the picture business in England and stated that rentals and prices of admission were about on a par with those of this country. The music tax is also a bone of contention over there, and as a general rule the industry is burdened by taxation equal to that imposed in this country. Jerome Casper, general manager for the Rowland & Clark Theatres, and president of the Theatre Owners, presided at the meeting. A short address was made by Henry Gauding, owner of the Lincoln Theatre, Mt. Washington.

Pittsburgh's newest picture house, the Cameo, played to its first trade showing on Sunday afternoon, October 1, when Universal's "Under Two Flags" was screened for exhibitors. The house was packed and the film made a decided hit, it is reported.

C. B. Frost, head of the publicity staff of the Rowland & Clark Theatres, spent a day in Erie, Pa., recently in the interests of a "Film Forecast," which the R. & G. Theatres will issue in that city.

M. A. Sybert, movie king of Moundsville, W. Va., visited Pittsburgh the other day for the first time in six months. He was accompanied by B. W. Riley, his publicity manager.

Mr. Abrahamson has opened his Bramwell Theatre at Bramwell, W. Va., a new house of 400 capacity.

Frank Fairgraves' new 1,050-seat house in Erie, Pa., on East Eighth street, will be ready for opening about November 1. It is promised that this will be one of the finest houses in the state. A name has not yet been decided upon and it is probable that the Erie public will be invited to compete in a guessing contest to name the same. Mr. Fairgraves also owns the Regent and Princess Theatres in Erie.

Ben Gould, formerly salesman for the Fox exchange in the Steel City, and more recently manager of the Fox office at Albany, N. Y., is ill in the Loomis Sanitarium, Loomis, N. Y. Ben would greatly appreciate hearing from some of his old friends.

Ben Walken recently took over the Lyceum Theatre at Beaver Falls, Pa., formerly conducted by Sam Hanauer. His son, Charlie, well-known to local film people, is manager. The Lyceum seats 1,300 and business is good.

Aleck Moore's Hilltop Theatre, Pittsburgh, which is being enlarged to accommodate 250 more seats, will be open late in October. Morris Finkel is manager.

A. Roth, of the Seven Stars Theatre, Phillipsburg, Pa., was a recent Pittsburgh visitor. He stated that his house has just been newly redecorated, and stands second to none of its size in the territory.

Stuart A. Smith, manager of the Temple Theatre, Lewiston, Pa., spent a few days in Pitsburgh recently, film shopping. Mr. Smith is interested in eight picture houses throughout the territory, and says he is looking for more.

L. W. Barclay, for some time managing director for the Grand Amusement Company at Johnstown, Pa., this week sprung a big surprise when he announced that he resigned his position and was leaving immediately for San Francisco to take charge of exploitation for Goldwyn on the Pacific Coast. No successor for Mr. Barclay has as yet been named, but it is said that George Panagatocas, head of the Grand Amusement Company, will take active charge, for the present at least.

George Panagatocas, movie magnate of Johnstown, Pa., who recently returned to this country after a six months' visit to his native land, Greece, made a flying trip to Pittsburgh the other day to say "hello."

Morris Roth, of the Liberty and Merlin theatres, Duquesne, Pa., has returned to the city after a three weeks' vacation.

J. George Schweitzer, of the Titusville Amusement Company, Titusville, Pa., spent several days in Pittsburgh recently arranging his fall program of pictures.

Fred Gohrs, of the Aris Theatre, Erie, has returned to his duties after a short motor trip to Bradford. Fred says his Bradford friends still have cheer.

Barney's Theatre at Point Marion, Pa., is again ready for business. The house seats 1,000. Barney's older and smaller house has been closed.

The Scott Theatre at Scott Run, W. Va., is open six nights a week now, after having been open but Saturday evenings the past summer. Improved business conditions warranted the change.

Arnold Bertsche is succeeding Fred Jungquist as manager of the Lyceum Theatre, Winburne, Pa.

Daniel Kough and son of the Windber, Pa., Opera House have purchased twenty-seven acres of land on the Altoona-Hollidaysburg road. They are asking bids for the erection of a dancing pavilion and other amusements.

New England Building Boom Is Most Obvious in Boston

One of the outstanding features of the building boom that apparently has spread to all parts of New England, is the large number of new theatres that are being erected and the great amount of capital that is being invested in these ventures, indicating the faith of the promoters not only in the future of the business, but in their belief that prosperous times are just around the corner.

The biggest of these, both in point of size and in the amount of expense involved in its erection, is that under construction in part on the site of the Old South Theatre, on Washington street, Boston, extending back to Province street and covering also the site of the historic old Province House, which was built in the early Colonial days. This theatre is being built by Gordon & Schoolman, of the Olympia Theatres Company, and the estimated cost is in excess of $1,000,000. Besides the theatre, the building will have stores on the street floor and be fitted for offices in several other stories.

In Leominster the J. W. Bishop Company, of Worcester, is just completing the walls for the new Rialto Theatre, which is to cost fully $150,000. The structure is 167 by 75 feet in size.

Work on the new Steinberg Theatre, in Webster, also is well under way, and the contractors, H. Wales Lines Company, are making good progress. The building is of one story and basement and will cost in the neighborhood of $135,000. It will be used for moving pictures.

Foundations have been laid for a new $50,000 theatre at Northampton, which is being erected for Joseph Repolos by W. F. Coyle, of Easthampton. The work is to be rushed to speedy completion.

At Whitman, Harry Stanley plans to erect a picture theatre to cost between $30,000 and $40,000. It will be of brick, one story and basement. He has awarded the building contract to George Heard & Son, of Brockton.

Perhaps one of the most concrete examples of the sort of propaganda that is being foisted upon the public on behalf of state censorship of moving pictures, is seen in the sermon preached last Sunday in the West Roxbury Congregational Church by the Rev. E. H. Byington, who openly admits that he hasn't attended a picture show in years. Said he: "In the six or eight years since I went, the movies seem to have improved in their freedom from grossness, both ethically and artistically. Censorship and the prospect of censorship has been a good thing. Let the state supervise them. It will do no harm, rather good."

Kate Douglas Wiggin, author of "Timothy's Quest," which has "been done into the movies," stopped over in Boston last week while on her way from Maine to Providence, where she was the guest of honor at a private showing of the new film at Fay's Theatre. Eddie Fay, the proprietor, who also is the president of the Rhode Island M. P. T. O., had arranged the private showing for the members of the Rhode Island State Federation of Women's Clubs, who had accepted the invitation unanimously.

Joseph B. Hurl, manager of the Codman Square Theatre, in Dorchester, was tendered a farewell dinner by his many friends on the eve of his departure to take up his new duties as manager of the Milford Opera House at Milford, Mass. The film exchange district was well represented in the gathering.

Speaking of Mr. Hurl, reminds of the romance that has followed his comparatively brief visit to Boston. Six months ago, when he came here, following a long vaudeville engagement on the Keith Circuit, a Boston booking house asked him to fill in at the Broadway Theatre, South Boston. He refused to follow a musical act, given by Alice Killeen and another young woman, as he characterized it as too amateurish. Back-stage he told Miss Killeen what was wrong with her act and agreed to coach her. A friendship followed that developed into love, and now the young actress has gone to Milford as Mrs. Hurl to assist her husband in managing the Opera House.

One of the most notable exploitation tie-ups that has been seen in Boston within the past few months was that made by Gordon's Washington Street Olympia Theatre and the Boston Traveler, one of the most widely read evening newspapers of The Hub, through which "The Masquerader" was thoroughly advertised to the public. "The Masquerader" was later advertised in the newspapers as the leading attraction at the Olympic for the week beginning October 2. For several days during the preceding week the Traveler gave first page stories to a mysterious individual who was walking the streets of the city and waiting to be recognized as "The Masquerader." A reward of $100 was offered to the person who should recognize this individual, and later in the week this reward was increased to $150. Photographs purporting to be those of the masquerader, were published each day, and his itinerary during certain hours of the day was made known.

An orchestra of ten pieces has been added as a permanent feature at Gordon's Central Square Theatre at Cambridge. It is made up of skilled musicians under the direction of one of the most proficient leaders in Greater Boston. Orchestral music will be a feature at every performance, both in concert numbers and as accompaniment to the pictures. Besides this feature, the theatre has a splendid organ.

The Boston Central Labor Union has adopted a resolution by which it places itself on record as opposed to the proposed state censorship of motion pictures, as embodied in the law that was passed by the Legislature several months ago and that comes up for a popular referendum vote next month. In urging its membership and fellow citizens to vote "no" on this referendum, the delegates appointed a committee of five to co-operate with a committee from the Theatrical Stage Employes' Union, in a campaign to defeat the measure.

Grindstaff Now Operating Haskell Theatre in Dallas

W. M. Grindstaff, Dallas theatrical man, has taken over the ownership and managership of the Haskell Theatre, a Dallas suburban picture theatre, and has named Winfield Orr as house manager.

E. B. Thomas, owner of the Rex Theatre, Dallas, has announced the appointment of Ed Goeman as manager. Mr. Goeman for years has been associated in executive positions with Dallas theatres. Mr. Thomas, incidentally, recently bought out the interest of Bob Littlefield in the Rex Theatre. Mr. Littlefield is to devote his entire attention to the management of the Hippodrome Theatre, in which he recently secured an interest.

Albah Wilson, formerly manager of the Adolphus Hotel, Dallas, has been added to the Interstate Amusement Company's staff and will manage the Majestic Theatre in Little Rock, Ark.

What is said to be the largest symphony orchestra in the South, and one of the largest in the country playing in a picture theatre, has been engaged for the 1922-23 winter season at the Palace Theatre, Dallas, by the Southern Enterprises. It is to be under the direction of Don Albert and will contain thirty pieces.

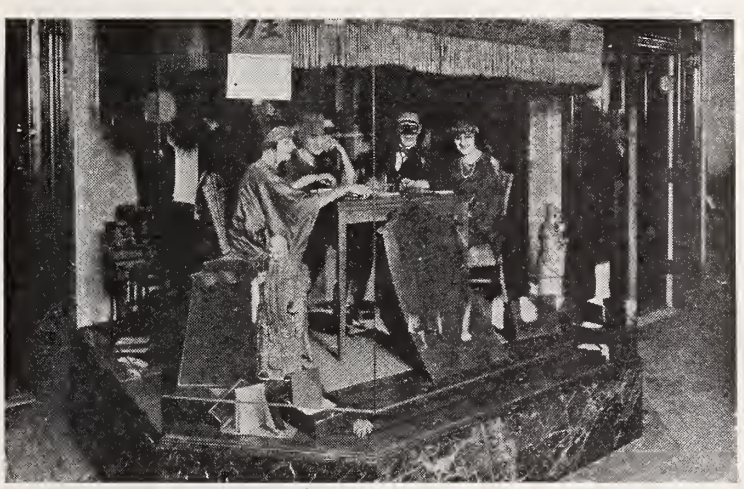
Following the failure of former operators, the Hope Theatre, a million-dollar picture house in Dallas, has been renamed The Melba and the Jones Brothers of Houston, owners of the building, will reopen it late in September. An advertising campaign has been carried on locally, but no announcement of the opening picture, or policy, has been made.

Ray Stinnett, who, two years ago, was manager of a local picture theatre, and who ran a shoestring into a sizeable bankroll through his theatre operations at Breckenridge, Texas, during the oil boom there, this week bought out the last of his opposition in that city, the National Theatre, from Mr. Zimmermann, the owner. The consideration is said to have been $36,000. Ray, as he is familiarly known along Film Row, now owns about ten theatres in Breckenridge, several of which are closed, and has full sway in the town.

Toledo Strike Is Averted

Toledo, Ohio, Oct. 5.—The threatened strike of the Toledo musicians will not take place. The theatre managers and union have been at loggerheads for two months on the new wage scale, and the musicians were about to quit if their wages were not advanced for this season.

The new agreement, it is learned, gives the men a slight increase in salary but reduces the number of players required for an orchestra.



A First National Release

"THE MASQUERADER" IS A CHINESE GAMBLER

Mah Jong, a modified Chinese gambling game, is a craze on the West Coast. For three afternoons a masked masquerader played against three Chinese girls in a department store window to advertise the game and Guy Bates Post's production

Burkey of Kansas City Loses $400 When Held Up by Bandit

C. H. Burkey, owner of the Summit Theatre, was held up September 18 as he was preparing to drive to the bank with about $400. The bandits made Mr. Burkey drive to another part of the town where they robbed him and then took his car, a roadster. The car was found the next day and the loss of the money was covered by insurance.

The Capitol Linwood Theatre will reopen soon with W. O. Lenhart, of Iola, Kan., as the manager. The Linwood has been closed during the summer for extensive remodeling and redecorating.

A "penny day" was held recently by Ed Frazier at his New Grand Theatre, Pittsburg, Kan.

Lee Gunnison, who owns the Royal Theatre at Atchison, Kan., was seen at some of the film exchanges the first of the week.

Miss Ruth Wright, of the Cozy Theatre, Topeka, Kan., was a Kansas City visitor last week.

L. A. Wagner, of the Princess Theatre, at Eureka, Kan., was calling on various exchanges the last part of the week.

Oscar Reinhart, of the Elite Theatre, Humboldt, Kan., was in town recently.

H. T. Gardner, owner of the Fotosho at Neosho, Mo., was booking some big pictures for this fall when he was seen in town the other day.

Basil Rankin, manager of the Co-operative Theatre at Idana, Kan., was in town to see the big automobile races, and while here did some booking.

T. C. Goodnight, Star Theatre, Warrensburg, Mo., was a visitor this week.

Jack Johnson, who has the Isis Theatre, Augusta, Kan., was seen in the exchange colony the other day.

C. W. Hunt, of the Rex Theatre, Higginsville, Mo., was shopping for some film recently.

Frank Dividson, Royal Theatre at Cherryvale, Kan., was booking pictures at some of the exchanges last week.

W. H. Carson, of the Empress Theatre, Osawatomie, Kan., made his weekly trip to Kansas City this week.

Atlanta Mourning Death of George Schmidt, Exhibitor

All Atlanta, and particularly that part of it devoted to the pictures, in one branch or another, sincerely mourns the untimely death of George Schmidt, who had been connected for a number of years with the exhibiting end of the game, and who was, at the time of his death, manager of the Strand Theatre. Mr. Schmidt had made a name for himself as an exhibitor who was "straight as a die," who had the ideals of a thorough "he-man" and who lived up to them. As an exploitation man, he was a wizard. He died at the age of 31.

The Rialto Theatre has begun its new season most auspiciously. Closed for two weeks, it opened on Labor Day completely renovated, with new draperies, much fresh paint and all sorts of "fixin's," including loges and boxes, with cream enamel woodwork, brass railings, comfortable chintz-covered chairs, and everything. Phil Gersdorf, who has been with the Capitol, in Macon, will manage the theatre this fall, and if the first two weeks under the new policy are to be a criterion, the Rialto is going to have a most successful season.

G. M. (better-known to his friends, for no apparent reason, as "Pup") Phillips will manage the Strand Theatre, succeeding George Schmidt. Mr. Phillips is a man who believes in exploitation and each week since he assumed the managerial desk and office, his lobby has been worthy of notice. Mr. Phillips is an Atlanta man, and very popular. He comes to the Strand from the Rialto.

W. C. Patterson, "the wizard of the South," who is guiding the Metropolitan Theatre to the same proud position of public patronage as that of the Criterion, has returned from his honeymoon, and Pat's well-known pleasant smile has merged into an absolute grin—one of the "won't-come-off" variety. Mrs. Patterson was Miss Anna Eugene Aiken, who will go down to fame as the only woman who ever edited and published a regional trade paper for the motion picture trade and got away with it.

The Lyric Theatre, closed in May, has at last, to the joy of countless "vaudeville fans" in Atlanta, opened to S. R. O. business. The Lyric is one of the chain of theatres operated by Southern Enterprises.

The Metropolitan Theatre opened its second fall season with a literal bang. Following the much regretted departure of David Love, formerly orchestra director, the Metropolitan has engaged Buel B. Risinger, of New York, as orchestra director, and Wallace Jackson, of Cleveland, as concert-master, and an orchestra composed of forty men. The new orchestra has been heard to excellent advantage each week, and have presented a most elaborate prologue based on "The Evolution of Dixie," which sets a fine standard for the rest of the orchestras to follow.

Enrico Leide, who directs the big orchestra at the Howard Theatre, has been signally honored by being made director of the famous Shrine Band, of the Atlanta Oasis, Desert of Georgia. This is the band which was chosen out of all the Shrine bands of the country, to play at some of the most important meetings of the big California convention, and Mr. Leide feels justly honored at the appointment, which was made by W. J. Stoddard, well-known business man and president of the band.

Sad and bitter memories! Manager G. M. Phillips aroused 'em recently when, to exploit "The Kick-Back," he turned the lobby of the Strand, Atlanta, into a saloon, put a man in white apron behind an honest-to-goodness bar and "set 'em up" with grape juice poured from an old-fashioned (almost extinct) quart whisky bottle into real whiskey glasses. The stunt took like the measles and was voted "great stuff," except that some folks with empty cellars said it was "rubbing it in."

The Atlanta Junior Chamber of Commerce's "No Accident" Week chimed in beautifully with the plans of Manager Phil Gersdorf, of the Rialto Theatre, Atlanta, on his exploitation plans for "In the Name of the Law."

A cut-out of an officer in uniform, life-sized, and posed against a regulation "Stop, Look and Listen" sign, was used as the basis for the campaign. One of these cut-outs was placed at most of the busy corners, and as the Atlanta police were particularly alert that week to carry out the Chamber of Commerce's plans, the sight of the (cut-out) officer standing alertly beside his post, with hand upraised, caught the attention, compellingly.

Milwaukee Showmen Fighting Renewal of Daylight Saving

A program outlining work along three definite lines, the foremost of which will be a fight against the adoption in the future of daylight saving time, is expected to be mapped out for the winter at the next meeting of the Milwaukee Exhibitors' Association.

The two remaining points to be discussed are a universal ticket for benefits and a proposed fight against existing music tax laws.

Daylight saving time, with its short evenings, has long been looked upon by film men here as a deterrent to attendance. The city has been under such time for the last three summers. According to E. W. Van Norman, manager of the Parkway Theatre, one of the leading outskirt houses and a member of the board of directors of the association, the fight may take the form of protests to congressmen and members of the city government.

The universal benefit ticket, good for admission to any of a number of theatres to be listed thereon, is being urged as a means of drawing attendance back to the theatres. It carries a plan whereby clubs and other organizations could be given especially good rates in addition to the privilege of using the ticket at any of a number of houses.

The fight on the music tax, provided for under the copyright laws, is to be renewed principally because of action brought recently against a theatre owner here by a song writer who charged his songs were being used illegally.

Construction of a $2,000,000 picture theatre and office building in the downtown section has assumed definite form with the beginning of wrecking operations on the site of the proposed building at Sixth street and Grand avenue.

The new building, financed by a corporation consisting of some of the leading business men of the city, will be seven stories in height and of concrete and steel. The theatre, according to the plans as announced, will seat 3,000 persons and be one of the finest in the country from the point of architecture and innovations. The structure will be completed by Sept. 1, 1923, according to the plans.

Members of the Wisconsin Real Estate Development Corporation, which is the organization financing the project, are: John I. Beggs, president of the Milwaukee Electric Railway & Light Co.; Galbraith Miller, Jr., garment manufacturer; August F. John; Lawrence A. Olwell, prominent corporation attorney; Oscar Brachman, real estate broker; Ben Zimmerman, president of the Milwaukee Auto Engine & Supply Co., and William G. Spence, vice president of the Rundle-Spence Manufacturing Co.

The Atlas Theatre, one of the largest houses on the North Side, has been purchased by Otto Enders from Steve Bauer and Clarence Fiebrantz. Mr. Enders formerly conducted the Grand and the Peerless theatres. Mr. Bauer will devote his time to the Iris and the Lorraine, two other outskirt houses which he owns.

Jones Spreading Message of Better Films in Southeast

Turner Jones, public relations representative of Southern Enterprises, Atlanta, met with a group of community leaders of Spartanburg, S. C., on September 26, addressing them along the ideas of the Better Films movement as now in operation in the Atlanta territory. He will also address civic leaders of Charlotte by invitation.

Al Lichtman exchanges are to be opened in Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas, E. V. Richards, of New Orleans, being distributor for the product in this territory. Henry Ginsberg has been in Atlanta completing details for opening the local exchange. E. C. Leeves will be general manager of the district office at Dallas.

Alex P. Roberts, of the Strand Theatre, Salisbury, N. C., employed some excellent exploitation to "While Satan Sleeps." Mr. Roberts used the Paramount star heralds with the seventeen stars, and offered free admissions to the first ones who came to the theatre with a correct list of answers. The heralds were scattered over town from an aeroplane with Paramount Week banners on the bottom.

Oscar Oldknow and Ned E. Depinet have gone to New York where they will meet Mr. and Mrs. William Oldknow when they dock in New York after a summer's stay in England and on the Continent.

Teddy Shull, who took over the Florida First National territory after the death of Bobby Coulter, left that organization October 1 to become manager for Stanley Warrick's new Stanley Theatre at West Palm Beach, Florida. "Nick" Carter will hereafter handle this territory.

S. S. Wallace, Jr., who won signal success as manager of the Imperial Theatre, Anderson, S. C., has been transferred to Oklahoma City by the Southern Enterprises. He was called to Atlanta last week by the death of his father, Prof. S. S. Wallace, of Georgia Tech.

Mrs. Harry K. Lucas is convalescing at the Davis-Fischer sanitarium in Atlanta after a major operation.

L. S. Hollingsworth, assistant manager of Vitagraph in Atlanta, was recently married to Miss Evelyn MacDonald, of Atlanta.

H. E. Oxford, of Ocilla, Ga., will rebuild the old Recreator into a modern picture house.

H. B. Wells, prominent exhibitor of Newberry, S. C., has returned from a trip to the West Coast and Canadian Rockies.

St. Louis Suburb in Revolt Against Blue Law Fanatics

Webster Groves, Mo., a suburb of St. Louis, is in revolt against the town's lone "Blue Law" which prevents the Ozark Theatre, a $75,000 structure with accommodations for 1,100, from showing movies on Sunday. More than 1,000 residents, including a large proportion of women, have signed a petition asking for the repeal of the blue ordinance.

Mayor Marshall B. Peterson will vote for Sunday movies if the proposition comes to the Council. Alderman Berton Forester is also personally favorable to Sunday shows but is inclined to favor submitting the question to a vote of the people.

Alderman L. B. Booth is playing safe, waiting until he sees how many sign the petitions, which are being circulated under the leadership of Armin Zott, who reports that more than 1,000 have already signed. Under the city ordinance but 750 are needed, or 25 per cent. of the vote cast at the last mayoralty election.

The management of the Ozark Theatre is not active in the movement for Sunday shows, feeling that it is up to the patrons to say whether they want them. The preachers are up in the air and can't agree among themselves. They had a meeting to decide upon their plan of campaign and couldn't get together. One minister expressed himself as bitterly opposed to Sunday movies. Others were inclined to await developments.

Proponents of Sunday movies point out that last winter one of the Protestant churches gave Sunday picture shows in conjunction with the singing of hymns. They say that is evidence that even the ministers recognize that Webster needs Sunday amusements.

Henri Chouteau, St. Louis capitalist, last week paid $310,000 for the Odeon Theatre and Office building, Grand boulevard at Finney avenue. He plans to spend several thousand dollars in improvements to the house during the year. He also plans a more elaborate entrance and foyer and will redecorate throughout. The Odeon Theatre, which accommodates 1,937 patrons, is the home of the St. Louis Symphony orchestra. It is also widely used for concert and recitals by leading musicians and singers.

The week of November 12 to 18 will be Italian School week at the Delmonte Theatre, 5624 Delmar building. "The Rosary" will be the feature picture, while news pictures showing the Coronation of Pope Pius XI will also be on the program.

Fred L. Cornwell, owner of the Delmonte, has announced that every cent taken in above actual expenses will be turned over to Father Caesar Spigardi, pastor of the St. Charles Borromeo and Our Lady, Help of Christians, for the support of the Italian School, Tenth and Carr streets.

Cornwell decided to give the benefit when Father Spigardi told him that there is a $18,000 mortgage on the school and that it has accommodations for but 600 children, being inadequate for the needs of the 10,000 Italian residents of St. Louis. It requires $5,000 annually to conduct the school

The Rivoli Theatre, Sixth street south of Olive street, the new home of Universal pictures, will be thrown open to the public on October 22. Workmen are now rushing the enlargement and remodeling of the house so that it will be ready in time. The theatre, formerly known as the Royal, was purchased recently from Harry Koplar. With the improvements it will represent an investment of $75,000. It will be operated by the Rivoli Theatre Company, a $30,000 corporation. Barney Rosenthal, R. G. Taylor and Nat Steinberg hold the stock in the company. The manager has not been decided on.

The Wilsonville, Ill., theatre which was destroyed by fire on September 10 will be rebuilt, according to Eli Gory, owner. The house was a new one and was almost ready to open. The loss was $25,000.

Vernon Coffman, manager of the Lyric, Mowequa, Ill., was seen at Enterprise during the week. He expects that business in his section will improve.

Spyros Skouras, head of Skouras Brothers Enterprises and First National franchise holder, is the proud father of a baby girl, Daphne Suzanna Skouras. The babe and mother are doing nicely.

Joe Lyman of the Princess Theatre, Whitehall, Ill., was a visitor of the week.

F. J. Pratt, Fulton, Mo., was a caller of the week.

Ackerman & Harris Announce Frisco Business Increasing

Ackerman & Harris, for the past five years located in the Circuit Building on O'Farrell street, have moved their offices to the Phelan Building. Charles H. Brown and Herbert Harris, who conduct the Century Theatre at Oakland, and who are part owners of the Morosco Theatre here, have offices adjoining. Sam Harris, of this big amusement firm, states that business over the circuit has shown an increase of 25 per cent. during the last sixty days. The Hippodrome show of pictures and vaudeville combined, is to be moved to the Casino Theatre, which has a large capacity, and musical comedy will hold forth at the Hippodrome. Ben Giroux, well-known in this territory as a manager of picture road shows, has been made manager of the Casino.

W. W. Walker, of the Bell Theatre, Paso Robles, and an old-time exhibitor in this field, passed away recently.

The Tivoli Theatre, of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, conducted under the management of Herbert Phelps, has changed its day of opening from Sunday to Saturday, the new policy being inaugurated with the presentation of Dorothy Phillips in "Hurricane's Gal." This is the seventh downtown San Francisco house to make the change of initial showing from Sunday to Saturday. During the engagement of "Hurricane's Gal" a navy recruiting station was maintained in the lobby of the Tivoli and on the opening day 1,200 sailors from Goat Island were the guests of the management at a special performance.

Joel C. Cohen, president of the Consolidated Amusement Company, Ltd., arrived at San Francisco late in September from Honolulu, T. H., and announced that the opening of the big, new Hawaii Theatre earlier in the month had been a great success. The new house seats 1,800 and embodies features of comfort that make it the equal of theatres anywhere. It is equipped with a Robert-Morton organ, costing more than $40,000, and will offer high-class drama as well as pictures.

Hold-up men are commencing to turn their attention to picture theatres and for the second time within two weeks a theatre has been robbed. The first affair of this kind occurred when A. Karski, of the Royal Theatre, was held up, this being followed by a robbery at the Castro Theatre, three masked bandits holding up Miss Sylvia Pond, the cashier, robbing her of about $75.

The Municipal Theatre at Greenfield, operated by the Parent-Teachers' Association, has installed new Power's projection machines and made other improvements.

Guy Smith, well-known here through his former connection with the Strand Theatre in the capacity of manager, passed away at Pasadena on September 24. He was manager of the Raymond Theatre there.

Contracts have been awarded for the erection of the Pajaro Theatre at Watsonville. The house will cost approximately $85,000.

News from the Producers

Conducted by T. S. da Ponte

An Eastern Unit

The Selznick News Reel has definitely been made part of David O. Selznick's Eastern production unit and will, with the Theda Bara Special picture, be under his sole supervision. The current events pictorial unit for Selznick Pictures was at first jointly supervised by Myron and David Selznick, but for some time past has been entirely in the hands of the latter as managing director.

David O. Selznick has made many changes for the better in the news reel, not the least of which was the adoption of the so-called "newspaper heads."

Prepares Big Array of Exploitation

The exhibitors booking Fox specials are going to be benefited with the greatest array of exploitation and press books ever gotten up by the organization, it is said. Recent reports indicate that they have been highly commended by exhibitors, many of whom have expressed their appreciation of this valuable assistance rendered them by Fox Film Corporation.

An outstanding feature in connection with the release of "The Fast Mail," "Silver Wings," "Monte Cristo," "A Fool There Was," "Nero," "A Little Child Shall Lead Them," "Lights of New York" and "My Friend the Devil" is the care and preciseness with which these elaborate exploitation and press books stress the argument of the best manner in putting these specials over.

Making a Big Hit in Europe

Norma and Constance Talmadge, First National stars, are carrying Europe by storm, according to dispatches received at the offices of First National from its representatives abroad.

A conference will shortly take place in Berlin with Soviet officials from Moscow to arrange the details of a proposed trip through Russia by the Talmadge party.

Jackie in New Film

Safety Week starts in New York October 7 and under the leadership of Judge Elbert Gary a campaign will be entered into which will last throughout the entire week. A feature of the week will be a two-reel picture, made by Jackie Coogan, in which he demonstrates how children in large cities, such as New York, can avoid accidents and death.

Fox Company Lists October Releases

Two super-special productions head the October release schedule announced by Fox Film Corporation this week. Six feature productions, four special comedies, three Sunshine Comedies, three Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons and eight issues of Fox News complete the list.

"Lights of New York," the sixth Fox special on the 1922-23 program, is set for general distribution on October 22. It was directed by Charles Brabin. The cast is head by Marc McDermott.

"A Little Child Shall Lead Them," which is about to enter the fifth week of an indefinite engagement at the Lyric Theatre, New York, will be released October 29. The name of this production will be changed at an early date. The William Farnum release on October 15 will be "Beyond Compromise." It was directed by Emmett J. Flynn, the director of "Monte Cristo."

Tom Mix, the Western star of the Fox firmament, comes on October 1, in "Do and Dare." The direction by Edward Sedgwick. "Calvert's Valley" will be the October vehicle for John Gilbert. Jack Dillon directed the film which goes to distribution on the 8th. Charles Jones will be starred in "Bells of San Juan." Scott Dunlap directed. October 15 is release date.

Shirley Mason is presented in "Youth Must Have Love" under the direction of Joseph Franz. The picture will be released October 1. Rowland V. Lee has directed William Russell's October 22nd release, "Mixed Faces." The second of the series of special comedies by the English pantomimist, Lupino Lane, will be ready October 8. The title is "The Pirate" and was directed by Jack Blystone.

Clyde Cook's next special comedy will be "High and Dry." "The City Chap," starring Al St. John and directed by the actor, will be released October 15. A Lee Kid reissue, three Sunshine Comedies, three Mutt and Jeff Cartoons and four editions of Fox News complete the month's output.

Arliss Picture Is Given High Praise

A full measure of praise from public and critics was meted out to George Arliss and his newest photoplay feature, "The Man Who Played God," when this United Artists' release was given its first New York showing last week at the Mark Strand Theatre. Without exception the splendid acting and dominating screen personality of Mr. Arliss was commented on by the reviewers.

"'The Man Who Played God,'" said the New York Herald's critic, "bids fair to be considered throughout most of its reels one of the finest screen transients seen here this year."

"High-class entertainment which no lover of pictures will wish to miss," was the statement of the critic for the Daily News.

"In every way a fine picture," said Harriette Underhill in the Tribune. "'The Man Who Played God' is not only George Arliss's latest, but it is by far the best picture he has yet made," said Don Allen in the Evening World.

"Thanks to the acting of George Arliss and excellent support by other players, a high-class scenario and the remarkable direction of Harmon Weight, 'The Man Who Played God' is one of the finest photoplays of the season," wrote the reviewer for the New York Sun.

"In 'The Man Who Played God,' George Arliss makes you feel confident that no one could have done it any better," said the critic for the Evening Mail.

"'The Man Who Played God' is worthy of George Arliss's ability," said the critic for the Evening Telegram.

"An excellent performance by George Arliss, and no matter what Mr. Arliss does before the camera or on the stage it is worth seeing," said the review in the New York World.

Said the Himes' critic: "George Arliss's performance is so smooth and so genuine that the spectator's enjoyment of the story is unalloyed."

"An example of George Arliss's most careful and beautiful work, an uplifting picture as well as a beautiful one," said the review in the Morning Telegraph.

They Wanted 'Em

"Romance and Arabella," starring Constance Talmadge is, according to General Manager Woody of Select, the type of Selznick revivals distributed at the urgent request of exhibitors who ran the first Talmadge revivals with excellent results.

A New Record

Next week will establish a new record for Paramount on Broadway when five of the six leading picture houses in the Times Square district will be presenting Paramount pictures as their feature attractions.

"The Old Homestead" will have its New York premiere at the Capitol. At the Rivoli, the attraction will be the Cosmopolitan production, "The Face in the Fog." Cecil B. DeMille's "Manslaughter," after three weeks at the Rivoli, will move down to the Rialto for a week. Cosmopolitan's big success, "When Knighthood Was in Flower," will continue at the Criterion, while "Pink Gods" will be shown at the Cameo and "On the High Seas" at Loew's State.

Only from the Strand, among the week-run houses, will the slogan, "It's a Paramount Picture," be missing.

Films Slated for Early Release

Paramount announces for release, on October 8, the Cosmopolitan production, "The Face in the Fog," which shares that date on the season's schedule with "The Old Homestead."

This is said to be one of the best stories from the pen of Jack Boyle, master writer of tales of crime and intrigue and their detection and author of "Missing Millions," in which Alice Brady is starred by Paramount. Alan Crosland directed. Lionel Barrymore and Seena Owen are featured with Lowell Sherman heading the supporting cast.

"Paths of Glory" Has Started

The harm that newspaper publicity, notoriety and fame can do persons in public life when the breath of scandal turns these forces against them is the central theme of the new William de Mille production for Paramount, finally titled "Paths of Glory," which has just started at the West Coast studios with Bebe Daniels, Lewis Stone, Kathlyn Williams and Harrison Ford in the featured roles.

Added to Staff

George Marion, Jr., son of the famous actor, has been added to the Goldwyn scenario staff as an authority on foreign literature.

Vignola to Go Abroad

Following his completion of "Adam and Eva," a Marion Davies' production, which he is now making for Cosmopolitan, Robert G. Vignola expects to start on a trip around the world which will keep him away from New York for about four months.

The contemplated trip is in the nature of a combined business and pleasure jaunt. According to present plans Mr. Vignola will sail sometime in November. He will go through the Panama Canal, thence across the Pacific to the Hawaiian Islands, Philippines, Japan, China, India, the Straits Settlements, Arabia, Egypt and Europe. He will spend several weeks in Italy, after which he will return to New York. Mr. Vignola expects to be back in March or early April.

Pathe News Has Complete Record of Smyrna Fire

While the ashes of Smyrna are still warm, Pathe News is flashing on the theatre screens of this country a complete motion picture report of the frightful scenes of the first conflagration in the Turkish invasion of Europe. Exactly two weeks from the date of the Smyrna holocaust which shocked the civilized world, rushed from the blazing center of the new great war through the air and over six thousand miles of ocean and land, this faithful camera visualization was given to motion picture patrons in New York and other big Eastern cities of the United States.

The Pathe News exclusive film reached New York aboard the Aquitania on Saturday morning, September 30. It was immediately developed at the Pathe News laboratories, where prints were made while Editor Emmanuel Cohen and his editorial staff prepared and photographed the titles. The completed prints were distributed to New York theatres in ample time for their evening performances on that same day.

In achievements of this kind interest naturally centers in the man who overcame all obstacles in a race against time in a war-ravaged country to be on the scene when the thing happened, to do his work and transmit the results with all possible swiftness. In this extraordinary instance that man is George Ercole, Pathe News cameraman with a roving commission in Central Europe.

When the Turco-Greek controversy began to look dangerous, Ercole was in Vienna. Rome, with its Pathe News office and camera staff, was nearer; but Ercole, with his special experience and knowledge of conditions in the disturbed area, was the logical choice for the job.

It was Glattli, of the Paris Pathe News staff, who relieved Ercole of his precious camera report on his arrival at Paris after so many weeks of intensive travel and news photographing, and who took it by airplane to catch the Aquitania.

"Old Homestead" to Be Released on October 8

In "The Old Homestead," released October 8, Paramount presents its box office ace of the current season. The company's executives are said to be unanimous in the opinion that it is the greatest audience picture Paramount has ever released, and some there are who frankly predict that it will top all other productions in the history of the screen in box-office receipts.

In the first place, they say, the play on which it is founded, written by the late Denman Thompson and acted by him for nearly twenty-five years, has an appeal to the American public equalled by no other play in the history of theatricals. The story is of the period of 1884, and the costumes are in keeping. For this reason, it is argued, the settings, costumes and characterizations are in no danger of becoming out of date, making the picture as good an attraction ten years from now as it is today.

To this point in its favor strength is added by the fact that Director James Cruze and the others who collaborated with him seem to have reached the very pinnacle in the technique and mechanics of motion picture production. The story in its original form is admittedly trite—a characteristic of all the successful American rural dramas. There is the wronged girl and the villain who steals the money with which to get her out of town; the innocent boy who is arrested for the crime, breaks jail and runs away from the entangling circumstantial evidence; the faithful sweetheart who waits through the years for the boy's return, and the inevitable mortgage on the old folks' farm which must be paid to satisfy the hard-hearted victim of the theft.

All these elements were retained in the picture by Perley Poore Sheehan and Frank Woods, who wrote the adaptation, and the original drama has been further enhanced by the skillful hand of Julien Josephson, the scenarist, who stands without a peer as a delineator of small-town and rural characterizations. Only at the end is there a change from the original story, but this change, it is claimed, is what will lift the picture from the plane of a fine drama well done and place it in the very front rank of sensational successes.

Instead of permitting the boy, Reuben, to be found by Uncle Josh in New York and bringing him back to the old homestead on New Year's Eve, the authors of the new screen version have sent Uncle Josh home unsuccessful in his search, there to face eviction from the old homestead. As the place is about to go under the hammer to the highest bidder and when the hearts of the spectators are torn by the pathos of the situation, a windstorm comes up. Gradually it increases in fury until it becomes a hurricane. Buildings are reduced to kindling wood and trees are uprooted and hurled across the fields. Lem Holbrook, in fear for his life, confesses his guilt to his father, and Reuben, at the very height of the fury of the storm, finds his way to the firm and sheltering walls of the old homestead. The storm, it is said, is built up with marvelous realism, creating thrill and suspense which no audience can resist.

Now for the cast: Theodore Roberts plays Uncle Josh Whitcomb, the Pole immortalized on the stage by Denman Thompson; George Fawcett is Eph Holbrook; T. Roy Barnes is Happy Jack, the tramp; Harrison Ford is Reuben, and Fritzi Ridgeway is Ann. These are the featured players. Then there is James Mason as Lem, Kathleen O'Connor as Rose Blaine, Ethel Wales as Aunt Matilda, Edwin J. Brady as Ike Goodsell, Frank Hayes as Si Prime, Z. Wall Covington as Seth Perkins and Charles Williams as Gabe Waters.

"One Week of Love" Ready Soon

Preparatory to his departure for the coast, where he will resume the supervision of the year's quota of Selznick super-specials, Myron Selznick, president of Selznick Pictures Corporation, has just about completed the cutting of "One Week of Love," which he brought on with him from Los Angeles a week or two ago. The production will be in the identical shape in which it will be offered to the public before another week has passed.

"One Week of Love" is the first of "Sixteen Only" which the Selznick Company have promised for the year. Elaine Hammerstein and Conway Tearle are co-starred in the production, which is easily the biggest, most expensive, and best which the Selznick Company has ever handled.

Leatrice Joy in "Java Head"

In "Java Head," George Melford's latest production for Paramount, which has been started at the Paramount Long Island studio, Leatrice Joy, whose work in "Manslaughter," C. B. DeMille's spectacular Paramount production, won her much praise, will play the colorful role of Taou Yuen, the Chinese wife. This is the first time in Miss Joy's motion picture career that she has played a character role.

This story, by Joseph Hergesheimer, will be given an authentic and elaborate background, Paramount says.

Editors Pay Visit to Studios

The 300 members of the Southern California Editorial Association visited the Goldwyn studios at Culver City, Calif., on Tuesday of last week and saw Rupert Hughes direct the filming of a motion picture and experiment with new lighting effects. They were introduced to the players now appearing in pictures and watched various phases of motion picture making.

Five photoplays are now in the editing and titling stage at the Goldwyn studios. These pictures are "Broken Chains," "The Strangers' Banquet," "Gimme," "The Christian" and "Passions of the Sea."

Sawyer & Lubin Form New Producing Organization

ON his return to New York this week, following an absence of several months, Herbert Lubin announced the formation of a new $2,000,000.00 picture organization to be known as Associated Pictures Corporation. The business of the new company will be to produce and market motion pictures in feature length.

The first production under the auspices of the new organization has just been completed, a picturization of the famous novel, Quincy Adams Sawyer. This feature was made in the Metro studios in California, under the supervision of Arthur H. Sawyer, directed by Clarence Badger, formerly of Goldwyn, and employs a long list of stellar names, including Blanche Sweet, Elmo Lincoln, of Tarzan fame; Barbara La Marr, one of the outstanding figures of the current Broadway screen success, "Prisoner of Zenda" Lon Chaney, John Bowers, Louise Fazenda, June Elvidge, Hank Mann, Joseph Dowling, Victor Potel and a host of other players known to practically every movie fan in every section of the world.

Quincy Adams Sawyer, which will be released by Metro Pictures Corporation as one of the outstanding specials of the year, will be followed by a series of productions adapted from the pens of famous authors and employing large casts, comprising the most famous names obtainable from the ranks of present day film stars.

In the formation of Associated Pictures Corporation, Herbert Lubin has associated with the new enterprise some of the leading figures in the world of finance and banking. The president of the company is Marcus Jacobowsky, a man of vast financial and banking experience. Herbert Lubin needs no introduction to the world of films. During the past ten years his connection as holder of the Metro franchise for the entire Dominion of Canada, his work as organizer of S-L Pictures, which has produced a series of remarkable feature successes for Metro Pictures Corporation, and his forming of Petrova Pictures Corporation, which made a series of features, starring Madame Petrova for First National, has established him as one of the leading figures in the world of production and distribution.

Arthur Sawyer, supervisor of production for Associated Pictures Corporation, has been intimately connected with studio work for a period of several years and the series of S-L special pictures for Metro is being made under his direct supervision, as well as the first big special of the new company, Quincy Adams Sawyer.

Herbert Lubin issued the following statement this week concerning the new company: "Associated Pictures Corporation has acquired all of the assets of S-L Finance Corporation, including valuable contracts and franchise rights. The contracts provide for the production of S-L pictures in the Metro studios with distribution through the various Metro exchanges throughout the world. The economic and financial management of Associated will be in the hands of Marcus Jacobowsky.

"The production of pictures will be under the personal supervision of Arthur H. Sawyer, who will receive the benefit of the facilities of the Metro studios and its vast array of specialists in every line of screen endeavor. The policy of the company will be to employ only the best talent in the way of writers, directors, players and cameramen.

"We have already acquired the works of such writers as Charles Neville Buck, Eugene Walter, Calvin Johnston, Freeman Tilden, Percival Wilde, Thomas Beer, Guy Bolton, Willard Mack and others equally well-known. Following the production of Quincy Adams Sawyer, our first special made for Metro, we will produce a story from the pen of Willard Mack, now called 'Your Friend and Mine' and which he has made famous on the speaking stage.

"Following this an announcement will be made concerning a story which is known to practically every picture goer in the world, namely, 'The Shooting of Dan McGrew.' This poem will be given a wonderful production and should make film history."

San Francisco Critics Praise Ray's Newest

Both public and critics were quick to enthuse over and praise Charles Ray and his newest photoplay, "A Tailor Made Man," a United Artists release, when it was shown at the Strand Theatre, San Francisco.

"A screen comedy-drama of the higher type," said the critic for the Bulletin. "Here is a photoplay as refreshing as mountain air, replete with wit and wisdom, which affords Charles Ray one of the best vehicles of his career. Its humor springs naturally from a combination of logical events and its thrills avoid the melodramatic and are all within the bounds of probability."

"Charles Ray achieves distinction in 'A Tailor Made Man,'" said the critic of the Examiner. "There is a whimsical tenderness, a touch of quaint poetry, a certain friendliness that marks his interpretation of the principal character."

"'A Tailor Made Man' has all the elements of the perfect picture," said Curran D. Swint in the Call. "There is story, romance, comedy, compelling drama and thrills. It easily can be credited as Charles Ray's greatest picture to date. Throughout the entire showing the audience was in a state of sustained good humor."

"'A Tailor Made Man' is a triumph for the young star, Charles Ray," said the reviewer for the Chronicle, "and gives promise of even greater things. It is a delightful comedy and seems all too short, and because of its interest one regrets the end of the story."

Herbert Lubin, organizer of Associated Pictures Corporation, and Arthur H. Sawyer, supervisor of production.

ing lower, Retail sales of staple commodities have decreased since "peak"; picked up since low stage of slump.

New Hampshire. Alfred R. Newall, the Daily Patriot, Concord. Average income per capita remains about normal. Cost of living lower, if it has fluctuated at all.

Manchester. Frank Knox, Union and Leader. Local conditions temporarily upset by textile strike.

New Jersey. Marc P. Dowdell, The Times, Trenton: Industries, which have been slow to feel pickup now showing its effects. Cost of living has reduced from peak but is still 150 per cent. higher than 1913. Slight trend upward at present.

New Mexico. M. B. Hening, editor, The Herald, Albuquerque: Outlook for business in fall and winter better than same time last year, provided labor troubles are settled.

New York. George J. Hurst, editor, Daily Financial America: Country is choked with gold. This is the backing of both our currency and credit mediums. As we only need about 40 billions of both of these and at present have sufficient gold to extend them to over 100 billions, our needs are more than amply covered. The danger of inflation is, however, our greatest menace. Human nature is still subject to the temptation of extravagance. From present indications we will have bumper crops at fair prices. This means comfort for 12,000,000 of our agriculturists and raw materials for 50 per cent. of our factories. The buying power thus engendered will reflect itself in almost evey other line of our activity. The cost of living will, in my opinion, go up again. In fact, it is now higher than on January 1, 1922. This is attributable to our plethora of money and lack of real leadership, both politically and industrially. With plenty in our till we are prone to give way too easily to demands we must know are harmful. Unemployment is decreasing. Those out of work today are mostly strikers who choose to be idle. This does not hold in the marine shipping lines. The outlook generally is optimistic and soundly so.

North Carolina. C. R. Sumner, The Charlotte Herald, Charlotte. Business situation will continue to improve, because the farmer and the cotton mills are getting in better condition every day.

Charlotte. J. S. Parham, editor, The Observer: Cost of living slightly lower. Retail sales of staple commodities have increased. Business men and bankers optimistic and believe conditions and business will improve slowly but steadily.

Cincinnati. W. F. Wiley, The Enquirer, Cincinnati: There has been practically no change in income per capita during last six months. Figures show wages have remained at practically the same figure except in certain isolated cases where a cut of 10 per cent. has been made, such as banks, etc.

Making New Film

Marshall Neilan will produce "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" in conjunction with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

The rights to Thomas Hardy's famous novel have been acquired by Marshall Neilan and Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and it will be produced shortly as one of Goldwyn's Big Twenty.

Mr. Neilan is keenly interested in "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" as a screen vehicle and is of the belief that it will be a bigger and more dramatic picture than anything he has yet done.

Goldwyn has arranged with Dorothy Farnum to write the continuity for "Tess."

"L" Seen in Scene of "Outcast"

There is one place in New York where the "L" traffic is not congested. It is at the Long Island studio, where a bit of the Sixth avenue elevated has been constructed for movie purposes. The street scene, which shows one entire block of Washington Place west of Sixth avenue, was constructed for scenes in Elsie Ferguson's latest Paramount picture, "Outcast."

Film Will Be at N. Y. Strand

"Oliver Twist" will be an Associated First National Pictures release. It will enter an engagement at the Mark Strand Theatre commencing October 29.

A big exploitation campaign is already being planned by both the Coogan representatives and those in the Strand and First National offices. The national release date for "Oliver Twist" will be late in October or early in November.

Plays Opposite Dalton

Robert Ellis, who played the leading male role with Alice Brady in her latest Paramount picture, "Anna Ascends," which was recently completed at the company's Long Island studio, has been engaged to play opposite Dorothy Dalton in her next picture to be put in production next week at the Long Island studio. This picture, temporarily titled "Black Fury," is an original story for the screen by Edmund Goulding and will be directed by Victor Fleming.

SCENE FROM "THE PURPLE HIGHWAY," featuring Madge Kennedy, supported by an all-star cast including Monte Blue, Vincent Coleman, Pedro De Cordoba and Dore Davidson.

Say "Remembrance" Is Great Picture

Goldwyn and Rupert Hughes believe they have another "Old Nest" in "Remembrance," which is this week's offering at the Capitol Theare, New York, and will be nationally released on Sunday, October 8.

The big auditorium of the Capitol Theatre, New York, and noon and, beginning soon after six o'clock in the evening, even standing room could, with difficulty, be bought, it is said.

Many of the newspaper critics stated, says Goldwyn, that "Remembrance" is a picture of universal appeal. It was shown in Los Angeles a week earlier than in New York and the critics there praised it highly, it is said.

F. B. O. to Release "The Third Alarm"

Film Booking Offices of America, whose Emery Johnson production, "In the Name of the Law," has been drawing big houses, it is stated, announces the second Johnson production to be released through them.

Just as "In the Name of the Law" presented an intimate home-life drama of the American policeman, this new picture, entitled "The Third Alarm," will, it is stated, offer a true picturization of the life of a member of a big city fire department. F. B. O. promises exhibitors in this picture the same wide exploitation possibilities which were offered in "In the Name of the Law." This last named picture allowed the exhibitor to co-operate with the local police departments to such an extent that the officials often staged police parades and exhibitions to advertise the picture. In the same way the full co-operation of the local fire departments will be given "The Third Alarm."

Not only, it is stated, will "The Third Alarm" be a worthy successor of "In the Name of the Law," considered from an exploitation standpoint, but its entertainment values, it is reported, will equal, and probably surpass those of the police drama.

To Support Ferguson

William H. Powell, who plays Duke Francis in "When Knighthood Was in Flower," has been added to the cast of Elsie Ferguson's latest Paramount picture, "Outcast." He will play the role of De Valle, a South American. John Davidson was originally announced for this part, but owing to a vaudeville engagement was unable to play it. Powell will be remembered by Broadway theatregoers as the man who took James Rennie's part in the stage play, "Spanish Love," last season.

Associated Authors Begin Work

With a cast of superior excellence, headed by May Allison as star, Associated Authors, John Howard Carr, president, started work last Monday on the first of six productions which it has contracted to make for release through Associate Exhibitors.

The first picture will be an adaptation of Hapsburg Liebe's "The Broad Road", a novel which was printed originally in Collier's and created somewhat of a furore. May Allison in the star role, that of Rosemary, will be supported by Richard C. Travers as leading man; Ben Hendricks, Jr., as the heavy; Mary Foy, Emile La Croix, Joseph Flannigan and Charles MacDonald.

All the exterior scenes for the production will be shot near Orlando, Fla., where Associated Authors have begun the construction of commodious studio buildings. After a few weeks the company will return to New York for the taking of the interiors.

Associated Adds to Sales Force

W. B. Frank, general sales manager of Associated Exhibitors, has just announced several additions to the organization's large and rapidly growing sales staff.

A. M. Van Dyke and W. L. Merrell have been added to the force working out of the Minneapolis office, making three men in that territory.

Abe Frankle becomes Associated representative in the Des Moines territory.

Harry Wellington, formerly American Releasing Company's Kansas City manager, is now an Associated salesman at that branch.

Nat Marcus has been appointed a sales representative in Albany territory, and C. A. Molte has rejoined the Pittsburgh staff after a six months' leave of absence because of illness.

L. Hilyer Directing

Lambert Hilyer is directing "Miles Brewster and the Super-Sex" at the Hollywood studios, for distribution by American Releasing Corporation. The story is by Frank R. Adams. The screen adaptation was made by Hilyer and the cast is headed by Robert Gordon.

First of Series

The first of the series of Selznick special productions for the new season is "One Week of Love," which has just been completed. Elaine Hammerstein is the star.

Six Releases Scheduled by Universal for October

A GROUP of five five-reel Universal attractions, featuring such stars as Gladys Walton, Ed. (Hoot) Gibson, Henry B. Walthall, Ralph Graves, Marjorie Daw, Frank Mayo, Lois Wilson, Jack Mullhall and Ralph Lewis, are being made available to exhibitors during the month of October. In addition, "Human Hearts," a Universal-Jewel production, starring House Peters, is being booked for immediate showing.

The Universal attractions include "The Long Chance," "The Girl Who Ran Wild," "The Lone Hand," "Wolf Law" and "Broad Daylight." Universal officials characterize these five pictures as the strongest group ever put out by Universal in a single month.

"Human Hearts" was adapted by King Baggot from Hal Reid's celebrated rural drama of the same name. Following a successful and extended run at the Central Theatre, Broadway and Forty-seventh street, the feature had highly successful runs in the Chicago Theatre, Chicago; the Granada Theatre, San Francisco; the Capitol Theatre, Detroit; the Merrill Theatre, Milwaukee; the Cameo Theatre, Pittsburgh, and elsewhere.

At the same time it was being shown in the United States, it was shown in the Gaiety picture house, Manchester, England, where it played to packed houses for the entire week, it is said.

"The Long Chance," the first Universal attraction released in October by Universal exchanges, also has met with a warm reception from exhibitors and theatregoers, it is said. The story was written by Peter B. Kyne, and was directed by Jack Conway. It features a trio of popular stars —Henry B. Walthall, Marjorie Daw and Ralph Graves.

"The Girl Who Ran Wild," Gladys Walton's October special, was adapted from Bret Harte's celebrated story, "M'liss." It was directed by Rupert Julian. It is scheduled for release October 9. "The Lone Hand," Universal's release for October 16, is a new Edward (Hoot) Gibson picture, directed by Reaves Eason. Supporting Hoot is Marjorie Daw, seconded by a strong cast.

"Wolf Law," Frank Mayo's latest feature, will be released October 23. It is a story of the Ozarks, written by Hugh Pendexter, and directed by Stuart Paton. Sylvia Breamer plays the leading feminine role.

Universal's last October release will be "Broad Daylight," a feature production made by Irving Cummings, with Lois Wilson, Jack Mulhall and Ralph Lewis in the featured roles. Miss Wilson, a former Universal star, was loaned to Universal for this picture by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The picture was adapted from a story by Harvey Gates, and combines New York society settings with South Sea sequences. The picture is set for release October 30.

"Wolf Law" and "Broad Daylight" are the first two pictures of the "Prosperity Nine," Universal's second group of first-class features for the 1922-1923 season. The earlier October releases belong to the "Winning Nine," the first fall feature group put out under the Universal banner.

Hughes Praised by Banqueting Editors

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has just received a telegram from its studios in Culver City, Calif., that a signal honor has been paid to its first release for the season, the new Rupert Hughes' photoplay, "Remembrance."

The Southern California Editorial Association, consisting of editors of 300 newspapers in that section of the country, asked that the picture be shown to them after their banquet on Monday night last at Los Angeles. Their recollections of Mr. Hughes' former super-feature, "The Old Nest," was responsible for their petition to be allowed to see "Remembrance" in advance of its release.

The author of the film was invited to attend the banquet and address the assembled editors. After the screening, Mr. Hughes was the recipient of congratulations.

Vitagraph at Work on New Pictures

The Vitagraph studio at Hollywood, California, is actively engaged in the making of winter productions which include a special, several features and a number of comedies.

Work has been started on a David Smith production, "The Ninety and Nine," adapted from Ramsey Morris' play of the same name. This spectacle will be released in the late fall. David Smith also directed "Black Beauty," "The Little Minister, "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" and "Flower of the North."

Larry Semon is at work on a comedy dealing with the Northwest. The popular favorites of the Semon comedies support the star in this production. Earle Williams has just completed final shots of "You Never Known." The star is supported by such well known players as Gertrude Astor, George Field, Claire DuBrey, Coy Watson, Jr., James Conway, Louis Dumar, Walter Cooper and Leonard Trainor.

Alice Calhoun is preparing to start on another story shortly.—William Duncan is taking a brief respite after finishing "When Danger Smiles." Jimmy Aubrey is about to commence work on another comedy.

Engages 21 Exploitation Men

Assignment of exploitation men to each exchange is being completed this week, according to announcement from the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation. While the personnel of the force has been determined, several names are withheld for the present on account of the fact that the men have not completed their engagements with other organizations.

Each field man will be known as a Goldwynner and arrangements are being made to provide a force so large and so mobile that every exhibitor who desires the service can be given attention. There will be one man in each exchange and others will be assigned to the new branches as rapidly as they are opened. The assignments of the men will be announced next week.

Choose Title for Griffith Film

D. W. Griffith has definitely decided to call his new photoplay "One Exciting Night". The confusion regarding the title was ended when the notice was served on officials of the Griffith organization that the other title which had been considered, "The Haunted Grange," was protected by copyright and could not be used.

Difficulty in getting a suitable theatre for the New York opening of "One Exciting Night" sent Mr. Griffith to Boston for the first showing for his latest picture, a mystery story. It will begin an indefinite engagement at the Tremont Temple, Boston, October 9th. Prior to opening there Mr. Griffith will take the picture to Newport for a short run.

To Be Shown in Three Cities Simultaneously

Arrangements have just been completed for the special presentations of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," to be shown simultaneously in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles.

H. D. Buckley, Fairbanks' theatre representative, has just closed negotiations for the Lyric Theatre, in New York, and the George M. Cohan's Grand Opera House, in Chicago, for the showing of the big Fairbanks special. Grauman's new Hollywood Theatre, in Los Angeles, will open with "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," and all three engagements will be presented almost simultaneously about the middle of October.

The arrangements made for all three theatres are for extended runs, playing at regular theatrical scale of prices, and it is confidentially expected that the picture will enjoy the public support of this greatest film romance for some time to come.

Universal Finishes Gibson Picture

Universal has completed another western comedy drama starring Hoot Gibson. It is "Ridin' Wild," an original story written and scenarized by Roy Myers. Nat Ross, who made Hoot's recent success, "The Galloping Kid," directed it. Opposite Gibson is Edna Murphy and William Welsh.

Smallwood Finishes Third Release

Ray C. Smallwood, who directed "My Old Kentucky Home" and "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge" for Pyramid Pictures, Inc., has just completed his third Pyramid picture, "When the Desert Calls," with an all-star cast headed by Violet Heming, Robert Fraser and Sheldon Lewis.

The closing "shots" were taken last week on a location in Long Island where Art Director Ben Carre and his technical staff had built a barracks for British troops after the manner of an African military camp. Here Director Smallwood worked with Robert Fraser and J. Barney Sherry and fifteen hundred extras, crowding a mass of camera work into the limitations of one working day. This picture will be released in the fall by the American Releasing Corporation.

Paramount Finishes "Anna Ascends"

"Anna Ascends," Alice Brady's latest Paramount picture, has been completed at the Paramount Long Island studio. Director Victor Fleming will begin cutting the picture immediately.

A stellar cast will be seen with Miss Brady in the screen version of this stage play which deals with the problems of a Syrian immigrant girl who comes to America to gain her fortune. Robert Ellis has the leading male role. Others in the cast are David Powell, Charles Gerrard, Nita Naldi, Edward Durand, Florence Dixon, Grace Griswold and Frederick Burton.

Wins Prize for Essay on Trademark

The Boston Sunday Post, which is conducting a "Master Makers' Trade Marks" essay contest, recently announced the winner of the $100 prize for the best essay not exceeding 100 words on the Paramount trademark. William T. Miller, of Newtonville, Mass., was the winner and the judges were Victor J. Morris, general manager of Loew's Boston theatres; Joseph H. Brennan, manager of Loew's State Theatre, and Joseph A. Di Pesa, theatrical publicity director.

The trademarks of twenty-four well-known national advertisers figure in the contest, a different one being the essay subject each week. At the end of the twenty-four weeks a grand prize of $600 is to be awarded for the best of all of the winning essays.

"Kick In" Finished

"Kick In," George Fitzmaurice's production for Paramount Pictures, has been completed, and it is believed that this will prove one of the most exciting modern crook dramas of the year. Betty Compson, Bert Lytell and May McAvoy are featured in this picture which was adapted by Ouida Bergere from Willard Mack's stage play.

Moreno Signs to Act for Paramount

Antonio Moreno has signed with Paramount. This announcement was made during the past week in Hollywood where the popular "Tony" already has started work as leading man with Gloria Swanson in Sam Wood's new production, "My American Wife," which Monte M. Katterjohn has adapted from an original screen story by Hector Turnbull.

Moreno is admittedly one of the handsomest and most able actors on the screen. Recently he has been featured by Goldwyn and will soon be seen in two of that company's new productions, "The Bitterness of Sweets," a Rupert Hughes production, and "Passions of the Sea."

The new Paramount picture in which Moreno will play opposite Miss Swanson is described as intensely romantic, the locale being Argentina. Moreno's role is that of a handsome young aristocrat and politician, descendant of one of the old Spanish conquistadores, who falls in love with a beautiful American girl from Kentucky (Miss Swanson) whose horse outraces the valued track champion of the Latin nobleman.

Pola Negri to Star in "Bella Donna"

Paramount is said to be leaving nothing undone to make Pola Negri's first American picture, "Bella Donna," which George Fitzmaurice is to start soon at the Lasky studio, a production worthy of the talents and prestige of the famous Polish star.

Close upon the announcement that Conrad Nagel will have the leading role opposite the star, comes word that Conway Tearle and Claude King have been cast for two of the most important characters in the Robert Hichens story. Mr. Tearle will have the picturesque role of Baroudi, the Arab, with whom Bella Donna becomes so infatuated that she attempts to kill her husband by slow poisoning, while Mr. King will portray the physician-friend who discovers the plot and convinces the husband of his wife's perfidy.

Says Film Is One of Screen's Best

After months of effort completing the writing and continuity for his latest offering to the screen, followed by weeks spent in research work and interviewing the various artists cast for the nine principal parts in the story, Mack Sennett makes definite assertion that, with Mabel Normand in "Suzanna," a First National Attraction he has accomplished that which he set out to do.

"The result of these efforts," said the producer, "is a massive production which in theme and artistry is second to none. Encouraged by the success with which 'Mickey' and 'Molly O' were received, my ambition was to create a legitimate successor to both, and if possible surpass either of them. I feel certain I have done this with 'Suzanna.'"

Grauman Signs "Robin Hood" Film

At a luncheon recently given to Douglas Fairbanks by the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce in the banquet hall of the castle set where Mr. Fairbanks filmed many of the gorgeous scenes in his latest photoplay sensation, "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," the first contract for showing this much talked about feature was signed.

To Sid Grauman went the honor of being the first to put his name on the dotted line. Although the terms of the contract between Messrs Fairbanks and Grauman were not made public, it was whispered about Los Angeles that the consideration involved was the largest sum paid for a film rental for a long time.

Mr. Grauman, it is said, gave a large guarantee, and when the business goes above the guarantee the contract then operates on a percentage basis. In addition to being the first to book "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," Mr. Grauman will probably be the first to show the film. He plans to open his new Grauman's Hollywood Theatre with this feature October 18.

It is not thought possible, according to officials of the Fairbanks company, to obtain a theatre on Broadway, New York, for a showing prior to that date, which means that Hollywood, production center of the film industry, will have the honor of the world premiere of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood."

"The Fast Mail" Is Smashing Records

"The Fast Mail" is making a record-breaking run in the moving picture theatres around the country since its release last month. This fast moving melodrama founded on Lincoln J. Carter's great stage success is proving one of the big hits of the William Fox list of feature pictures.

Anyone in search of thrills will find them in bewildering profusion in this up-to-the-minute presentation of one of the best melodramas ever seen behind the footlights.

From the opening night of the melodrama at the Strand Theatre, New York, the public has shown an enthusiastic interest in the adventures of the pair of lovers played by Charles Jones and Eileen Percy.

Fox Films Popular in Australia

W. J. Hutchinson, Fox New York representative in Australasia, reports some interesting facts after a tour of the islands around Australia and New Zealand. He found that in New Guinea, to the north of Australia, Fox pictures were being shown in settlements that were within forty miles of real man-eating cannibals.

The population in New Guinea is picture mad, Mr. Hutchison reports to Sydney Abel, the Fox foreign manager, and would go to see a different picture a day if the shipping facilities were adequate.

Making Plans for Super-Specials

Myron Selznick, president of Selznick Pictures Corporation and actively in charge of the company's production activities on the Pacific Coast, arrived in New York City from Los Angeles September 18. He was accompanied to New York by Elaine Hammerstein and Owen Moore, both stars in Selznick pictures.

Mr. Selznick's return to New York has to do with preparations which are being made for the production of the sixteen big super-specials which will constitute the Selznick company's offerings to the trade during the season 1922-23.

F. B. O. Police Drama Privately Shown

"In the Name of the Law," the F. B. O. police picture received it is stated, fine official send-off in Philadelphia on Sunday, September 24, when it was privately presented at the Stanley Company's Victoria Theatre, on Market Street, to Mayor J. Hampton Moore, Director of Public Safety James B. Cortelyou, Chief of Police William B. Mills, the heads of the various city departments and the entire police force of the City of Philadelphia.

Starts Nationwide Exploitation Section

Before the end of the present month there will be an exploitation representative stationed in thirty Film Booking Offices branches throughout the country. This announcement, one of the most important to emanate from the F. B. O. home office since its reorganization and change of name from Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation several months ago, was made this week by J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president of the corporation.

Heretofore eight exploitation men have been working in the field for F. B. O. Under the new plan an exploitation man will be attached permanently to each F. B. O. branch to do general exploitation on all Film Booking Offices releases and to tender a comprehensive service to all exhibitors.

This will occasion the employment of twenty-two exploiteers in addition to those already serving F. B. O. in that capacity. These men are Jesse Weil, in Buffalo; Frank Leonard, in New York; Charlie Giegerich, in Philadelphia; Harold F. Wendt, in Cleveland; Louis Kramer, in Chicago; Hal Horne, in Omaha; Preston Hickey, in Minneapolis; and Monte Rice, in Seattle. The first to be added to this exploitation talent is Gilbert P. Josephson, who has been assigned to the Albany exchange.

The enlarged exploitation staff will be under the supervision of Al Boasberg, director of exploitation. Mr. Boasberg became associated with F. B. O. several months ago, having come from the exploitation force of Famous Players.

Adventure Films for Release in October

The current release of Associated Exhibitors is "Head Hunters of the South Seas," scheduled for October 1. This is a five-part attraction depicting Martin Johnson's adventures among the wild tribes of Malekula, an island in the South Seas. Two years ago Martin Johnson and his wife were captured by cannibals of Malekula, but escaped and returned some time later, attracted by the opportunities for remarkable adventure pictures offered there.

On the way to and returning from Malekula on their second trip, the Johnsons are said to have met with many thrilling experiences, and have pictured the customs of the wild. They also photographed an earthquake and an erupting volcano. They also secured some shark pictures, as well as photographs of a strange tribe of people who lived in trees.

"Smilin' Through" Big in England

A cable dispatch has been received at the offices of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., from Bruce Johnson, manager of First National's foreign department, who sailed for Europe September 22nd, in which he tells of the success being scored in England by Norma Talmadge in "Smilin' Through," a First National Attraction.

"'Smilin' Through' doing tremendous business," reads part of the wire. "English enthusiastic. Want more such Big Time pictures."

In its English presentation "Smilin' Through" was handled in a manner entirely distinct from all other subjects. It is customary over there to first have trade showings, and then the bookings follow from eight to ten months later. In the case of "Smilin' Through," however, no trade showings took place. Instead the picture was booked in big theatres on a percentage basis in the various key centers.

Under this method exhibitors saw the picture along with the public and were enabled to study its effect on motion picture patrons. The plan proved a big success. Exhibitors flocked to see the picture and were so enthusiastic over it that they canceled bookings already in so as to give it play dates.

Ends 19th Week

With the close of its 19th consecutive week, the Harold Lloyd-Associated Exhibitors attraction, "Grandma's Boy", produced by Hal Roach, has ended its phenomenal run in Dr. H. B. Breckwedel's Symphony Theatre, Los Angeles.

Announces Revival of C. Talmadge Film

General Manager John S. Woody has announced the forthcoming distribution by Select Pictures Corporation of another Selznick revival starring Constance Talmadge. The picture is "Romance and Arabella."

The production, re-cut, retitled and with a new line of advertising accessories, will be in Select branches throughout the country within the next three weeks.

"Romance and Arabella" is from a comedy by William Hurlbut. The direction is by the late Walter Edwards who handled the younger Talmadge star in a series of the best pictures she has ever made, the Selznick company says.

Hodkinson Plans a Varied Program

Diversity is said to be the keynote shown in the fall releases scheduled for distribution by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. It is understood that this organization has planned to supply as wide a variety of money-making products, both in short and feature lengths, as possible, so that exhibitors can build their program wholly of Hodkinson products and still maintain a 100 per cent. entertainment value.

Favorable comment has been reported from exhibitors throughout the country regarding the initial feature releases of the Hodkinson "Big 7" forming the autumn schedule.

However, not losing sight of the importance also of short subjects in building a well balanced program, the Hodkinson Corporation took a careful survey of the short feature market and selected a group that in their estimation would prove to be popular with the motion picture public.

Warning Sounded Against Plagiarism

Film Booking Offices of America has issued a warning to all producers and distributors concerning the series of "Fighting Blood" stories which will be produced as a series of two-reel subjects at the R-C studios for F. B. O. release. The exclusive motion picture rights to these stories by H. C. Witwer, author of the "Leather Pushers" stories were purchased recently by P. A. Powers, managing director for F. B. O., and production will start at an early date.

The "Fighting Blood" stories, each one of which is complete in itself, are now running in Collier's magazine, which to date has published seven at two weeks' intervals. Realizing the big popularity of this series, F. B. O. is making public announcement that any attempt at plagiarism will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

Castle Promenade Continues Popular

Gratifying reports, it is said, continue to come into the home office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation in reference to the success which the Irene Castle Promenade is having throughout the United States in conjunction with the presentation of "Slim Shoulders" featuring Miss Castle.

One of the latest reports of successful exploitation to come in is from Edward L. Hyman, managing director of the Mark Strand Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y. According to the report Mr. Hyman took advantage of the Fashion Show suggestion and made a strong tieup with Martin's, one of the biggest and most exclusive department stores in Brooklyn. Martin's arranged to have replicas made of the costumes worn by Irene Castle in "Slim Shoulders" and presented these frocks in the Fashion Promenade held daily in the store.

Newsy Bits

Between Yum Kipper and the World's eseries, the week just closed was the quietest of the year, and found the exchanges minus the wholesale activity noted during the past few weeks.

Canadian producers of independent pictures are sparing no effort to increase production there. Independent distributors this week were besieged with many offers from Canadians who have pictures for the American market.

W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, stopped off at Philadelphia early this week and was joined there by Tony Luchese, who accompanied him to Baltimore, where they inspected the new Progress Exchange, which the Philadelphian opened last week.

Harry Houdini is making a personal appearance tour in conjunction with the showing of his independent feature, "The Man From Beyond." This week he appeared at the Globe, Boston, while next week he moves to the Madison Theatre, Detroit.

Minter Film Exchange of Detroit this week purchased the Michigan rights to the Pete Morrison series of westerns.

Frank E. Beecher, of Detroit, will road show "The Parish Priest," starring William Desmond, through Michigan this season, according to word from that city.

Exhibitors from five states attended the opening of the new Pioneer Film Exchange Building, in Boston, on Tuesday afternoon, October 3. A special luncheon to the exhibitors by Harry Seigal featured the opening.

David Mundstuk, formerly president of the Strand Features, Inc., having satisfactorily adjusted all differences between James Minter and himself, announced in Detroit this week that he will soon open his own distribution at 304 Joseph Mack Building. His first production for release will be "The Black Panther's Cub."

Joe Horwitz is another Detroiter who is back in the business. He has started with a bang and his first release is "Ten Nights in a Barroom."

The past week saw the opening of six new exchanges in various sections of the country.

The Jewish holidays for the past fortnight kept many of the out-of-town buyers at home, with business materially affected.

There was a report current this week in Philadelphia that the Stanley circuit would follow in the footsteps of Finkelstein & Ruhin and open an exchange to handle independent pictures exclusively. This report was run down by the Philadelphia correspondent of this department and found to be untrue.

From California comes the encouraging report that the number of houses using independent pictures this year, as compared with 1921-22, has almost been doubled.

Ben Amsterdam, of Masterpiece Attractions, Inc.; David Segal, of Royal Pictures, Inc., and Lou Berman, of Independent Film Corporation, all of Philadelphia, were New York visitors this week.

The Week in Review

TALK is just as cheap as some people make it. At times there is altogether too much talk prevalent. When there should have been definite action, certain forces in this business have talked their loudest. They have promised and promised, until today their promises are as important and as reliable as Bolshevik notes. If you don't mean what you say; if you cannot substantiate your contentions; if you cannot fulfill promises made to your clients, you most certainly cannot hope to be taken seriously by your most intimate friends.

SOME Broadway theatre men have a peculiar idea of the definition of showmanship. It is next to impossible for an independent to obtain proper representation on Broadway. For this situation one can blame two reasons. One is the control of the houses by national distributing companies—and the other is the reluctance of the theatre men to give independents the opportunity to properly show their wares. Until this situation has been cleared, Broadway as a "show barometer" cannot be taken seriously, for it is a one-sided proposition, with the public getting what the managers force on them.

WILL NIGH is deserving of the congratulations of every man in this business. In "Notoriety," the first L. Lawrence Weber-Bobby North release, he has given the independent market a production that will survive any test. It has "meat" and plenty of it. It isn't melodrama. And it isn't hokum. It's a production replete with good common sense. It entertains superlatively. Mr. Nigh IS a genius. He does not require a million dollars with which to make pictures that the public will enjoy; his is truly an art.

WHEN Will Nigh directed "My Four Years In Germany," he attracted much attention. There were those who ridiculed his effort. But the Warner Brothers thought otherwise. What that picture did at the box office is now pleasant picture history. Then along came "Why Girls Leave Home." Some of the shrewdest men in the picture business smiled when the title was mentioned. But once again Mr. Nigh proved convincingly the truth of that time-worn adage: "He laughs best who laughs last." And "School Days" is still a fresh memory of the genius of that director.

NOW comes "Notoriety." To fully appreciate this production, Mr. Exchangeman and Mr. Exhibitor, you must necessarily see it yourself. Seeing's believing. And this picture is so convincingly powerful, so far superior to "School Days" and "Why Girlls Leave Home" that really there is no comparison. Perhaps, the cost of production was only a trifle more than that represented by both the Warner features, but artistically and commercially "Notoriety" is bigger and better a picture than either of those. "Why Girls Leave Home" was more of a problem picture and a splendid one. "School Days" was a production with a novelty twist that put it in a class by itself and proved its worth by establishing numerous new records. But "Notoriety" is a page from every day life. There is nothing superfluous, nothing mechanical. You smile naturally. And you sob naturally. It's all so real.

ONLY a producer who has made a minute study of his public of the likes and dislikes of movie fans could have produced the picture that Will Nigh has given the trade in "Notoriety." Right now the picture is a bit too long, but this is no shortcoming, for, really, there is so much action in the production that it could have been well released as an episode play of a newer type, a serial of four episodes, with each release a complete story in itself.

NOTORIETY" will make people think. It will make them sit up and take notice. But more than anything else, properly exploited, it will make barrels of money for live exhibitors. f you want a picture that is different, that compares favorably with the best on the market today in the way of straight drama, then you owe it to yourself and to your patrons to book "Notoriety."

JESSE A. LEVINSON is a credit to the independent market. Mr. Levinson is more than a distributor; he is a lawyer and business man, who has entered this branch of the industry because of its possibilities. He has acquired rights to a series of productions, one of which, we understand, is a costume feature. All of which testifies to the foresight of this gentleman. Pictures like "The Prisoner of Zenda," "Robin Hood" and "When Knighthood Was In Flower" will reap fortunes for exhibitors, for there is a big demand for such product. All of which means that J. A. Levinson has stolen the march on many of our pioneers.

Studio News

When William A. Seiter completes production on "The Beautiful and Damned," starring Marie Prevost, this picture now being in its sixth week of production, it is expected that he will tackle "The Little Church Around The Corner," for which Olga Printzlau has written a modern story.

Louis J. Gasnier will direct the B. F. Schulberg production, "The Hero," for which an all-star cast has been engaged. Carl Struss will turn the crank. Eve Ansell furnished the scenario.

Burton King has completed his latest production, temporarily entitled "The Shylock of Wall Street," co-starring Zena Keefe and Dore Davidson. The picture's title is expected to be changed to "When The Blind See." No distribution arrangements have as yet been made.

Dell Henderson and his all-star company are in Maine turning out "Jacqueline," a James Oliver Curwood story, which Arrow will handle on the independent market.

Mrs. Rodolph Valentino (Jean Acker) returned to New York from Providence, R. I., this week where she made personal appearances and will start next week on a new picture that will be made for distribution through the Amalgamated Exchanges of America, Inc.

Ben Silvia is now the able assistant of Burton King, who will start on his next production some time late this month.

The Thomas Dixon production, "The Beast," is expected to be completed next week.

Word was given out this week that the next feature starring Johnny Hines will not be started until late in the Winter. That star will make a personal appearance tour prior to his return to the studio.

Charles C. Burr, producer of many independent box-office winners, was confined to his bed for several days with a severe cold.

Ivan Abramson is working on story for his next feature in which an all-star cast will appear.

Bobby North and Will Nigh are busy these days preparing for the next special picture that the latter will produce for independent distribution through North's offices.

Zena Keefe is expected to be among the list of stars that Amalgamated Exchanges will feature in forthcoming releases, according to information obtained from an authentic source.

Parker McConville has signed with Warner Brothers for the role of Mary Noble in "The Beautiful and Damned" on which production is now in full swing.

John P. M. McCarthy, producer of "Out of The Dust," was scheduled to arrive here preparatory to making a series of pictures inspired by the Frederic Remington paintings.

Abe Warner will spend the greater part of the winter at the Warner studios, which is a hee hive, three productions being under way.

From San Francisco comes word that three independent productions are under way there. The pictures are being financed by local investors.

New England Lauds Will Nigh at Showing of "Notoriety"

BOSTON, Mass. (Special).—Confident he had a production worthy of exhibition at any theatre and before any audience, Sam Grand, of the Federated Exchange of this city, treated some 400 exhibitors and their wives, film men from New York, and local and national trade press editors, to the first showing of "Notoriety," a Will Nigh special, which L. Lawrence Weber-Bobby North are releasing in the independent market. The pretentious showing was staged at the exclusive Copley Plaza Hotel of the Back Bay section of the City of Culture.

From all six New England States — Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Vermont, Maine, Rhode Island and Massachusetts —came representative exhibitors who enthusiastically and loudly applauded the feature, which is reviewed elsewhere in this issue. The exploitation possibilities of the production were quickly grasped by exhibitors, who acclaimed it to be "the greatest picture ever produced by Will Nigh." In fact, Mr. Nigh is responsible for the entire production, for he not only directed it, but he also conceived the story, which deals with a vital issue, and wrote the scenario.

Boston has been the scene of many elaborate trade affairs, but the one held here on Tuesday night, Oct. 3, surpassed them all. In dollars and cents it should prove a wonderful business stroke for Mr. Grand, for the picture should be one of the biggest sellers of the current season in the independent market. It was a chummy aggregation of exhibitors, who viewed the production from a cold business angle. But they joined their wives, daughters, sweethearts and dyed-in-the-wool "movie fans" in applauding the picture when the last flicker had died out.

Among those from out of town who were in attendance were the following: Bobby North of L. Lawrence Weber-Bobby North; Sam Saxe, sales manager of the same firm; Mr. and Mrs. Will Nigh, Sidney Samson, manager of the Buffalo, N. Y., Grand-North exchange; Ben Amsterdam, of Masterpiece Attractions, Inc., of Philadelphia; Robert E. Welsh, editor-in-chief, Moving Picture World; Fred Beecroft, advertising manager, Motion Picture News; Roger Ferri, independents' editor, Moving Picture World; John Spargo, Exhibitors' Herald, and Lawrence Boynton and George Blaisdell, Exhibitors' Trade Review, all of New York.

The New York party made the trip to and from Boston as the guests of Bobby North.

Philadelphia may be America's Slumberland, but there is nothing sleepy about Ben Amsterdam, who was the life of the party. Ben had so much confidence in Will Nigh's directorial ability that he contracted for rights to the picture before that showman shot the first scene. After seeing "Notoriety" for the first time here, Amsterdam congratulated himself on having purchased it.

Harry Ascher was on hand—very much so. At the dance that followed a splendid banquet at which Messrs. Nigh and North were introduced to the exhibitors, Harry proved conclusively to his friends that he is as nifty a terpsichorean artist as he is exchange manager. For be it understood, Harry Ascher is manager of American Feature Films Exchange here.

And Harry serves notice on golfers in New York that he will be in the metropolis next week for the express purpose of "taking on the best New York has."

Bobby North is a showman. And he has surrounded himself with none but showmen. Sam Saxe worked like an old trouper "setting" the boys, but a mighty good job he did of it.

Several of the bookers for the more important New England circuits were on hand and expressed themselves as being well satisfied with the production. "Notoriety" will open at one of the Boston first-run houses late this month.

Sid Samson, of Buffalo, was another exchangeman who will handle "Notoriety," who came on to Boston to catch his first glimpse of the picture. After he saw the feature, he commented: "My trip was a complete success. Here's one picture that will make every exhibitor sit up and take notice."

Jake Conn, who manages the Gayety Theatre, Providence, R. I., was here and conveyed the regrets of the managers of New England's second largest city at being unable to attend. However, "Notoriety" will be given a first-run showing at either the Rialto or Victory Theatre there next month.

The New Hampsbire exbibitors were well represented, sometbing like thirty-five of them being on band.

Charles Pettijohn, of Will Hays' organization, was a guest at the showing and spoke briefly on censorship, warning the exhibitors of the harmful possibilities of such legislation.

Will Nigh starts production on bis next feature some time early next montb. He and Bobby North are reading several stories, one of which will be adapted for screen entertainment.

The New York party made a trip to Film Row early Wednesday morning. Harry Segal's new quarters were visited. Harry has his own building now and it looks like a big year for the New England Pioneer Exchange.

Ben Amsterdam may have his exchange in Philadelphia, but that means not a thing, for there is no limit to the popularity of this gentleman. And if we were to count the number of friends Ben has in New England we venture the statement that he is losing money by not opening up an exchange here.

Among those who attended the showing, which was followed by a dinner, were the following: Jacob Alpert, of the Comique Theatre, Salem, Mass.; Ray S. Averill, Codman Square Theatre, Boston; Mayor Curley, of Boston; Channing Cox, of Fenway, Mass.; Cbarles S. Davidson, of the Unique Theatre, Boston; William F. Eddy, of the Star Theatre, Bristol, R. I.; R. C. Fox, Boston; George S. Harding, of Day Square Theatre, Boston; Samuel Kerson, of Bangor, Me.; George S. Leonard, of Star Theatre, Taunton, Mass.; William London, of Boston; J. Morency, of Plaza Theatre, Salem, Mass.; Mrs. W. Munster, of Waldorf Theatre, Waltham, Mass.; M. E. O'Brien, Mystic Theatre, Malden, Mass.; T. E. Rogers, Reading Theatre, Reading, Mass.; Charles R. It was a splendidly staged affair with every credit going to Mr. Grand, who ranks among the country's best independent exchangemen.

Despite the fact that the "party" did not break up until the wee hours of the morning, Wednesday morning found everybody on the job bright and early—and with all Film Row complimenting the director and distributors of "Notoriety."

Sam Grand will send a ballyhoo float, mounted on a truck chassis, throughout New England advertising his features for the coming season.

Never before have New England's exchangemen presented such a prosperous front. Everybody is talking "big business," with the exhibitors once more smiling. And an exhibitors' smile means only one thing on any Film Row.

An enterprising newspaper rushed through Film Row shouting. "Ku Klux Klan Attacks Irish and Jews!"

Whereupon the enterprising Amsterdam rushed forward with:

"That's a notorious bunch."

And Bobby North supplemented that statement with:

"Another crowd that believes it's 'notoriety' that brings fame!"

This was Sam Saxe's cue to invite the party to another New England "Blackstone."

Wben it was all over, T. E. Rogers, of Reading, Mass., was seen approaching Harry Ascher witb the query:

"When'll we bave anotber party?"

On Tuesday afternoon, October 4, Harry Segal was host to out-of-town exhibitors and exchangemen at a luncheon that featured the opening of his new excbange.

Film Exploitation Viewed by Bankers

Five thousand bankers, delegates to the forty-eighth annual convention of the American Bankers' Association and representing nine-tenths of the banking resources of the country, were given a concrete idea of how pictures are sold to the public by witnessing the spectacular exploitation staged in the heart of New York's Broadway by Eddie Bonns for the Warner Brothers. The feat was in the nature of a welcome to the bankers and it was put over during the theatre hour, with dense crowds flooding the gay White Way.

The bankers and thousands of other people thronging the thoroughfare were held interested by the Warner Brothers' float of seven books which are being produced at the Coast studios. The float, now on its way to the Coast, was preceded by a touring car on which was stationed a cameraman, and it was followed by a sight-seeing bus containing a fifteen-piece brass band. Powerful sunlight arcs streamed down upon the processon from the dome of the Capitol Theatre, and from the roof of the Mecca Building, 1600 Broadway.

Belasco Signs Miriam Cooper

A new producing organization to be known as the Belasco Productions, Inc., headed by Edward Belasco, brother of David Belasco, has been formed in New York, according to George H. Davis, eastern representative of the company, which has established offices at 1600 Broadway, New York. The first picture it will produce is "Her Price" with an all-star cast headed by Miriam Cooper and including Forrest Stanley, Mitchell Lewis, Richard Tucker, Maude Wayne and Kate Lester. Dallas M. Fitzgerald is directing.

Belasco Productions, Inc., also has secured the screen rights to other stories, among them Anna Blake Mezuida's "Dancing Feet," and Ester Birdsall Darling's "Baldy of Nome." The former picture will in all probability be the second release of the new company. Mr. Davis is perfecting releasing arrangements for the company.

NEW ENGLAND EXHIBITORS HONOR WILL NIGH AND BOBBY NORTH

Sam Grand of Federated Film Exchange, Boston, is host to theatre owners at special premier trade showing at Copley-Plaza Hotel, that city, of "Notoriety," which L. Lawrence Weber-Bobby North will distribute.

Independents Enter Movie Golf Tourney

Many independent producers, distributors and directors have submitted their entries for the motion picture golf championship tournament which starts on Oct. 19 at the Sound View Golf Club, Great Neck, L. I. Those who have entered to date include the following:—

Edwin Carewe; C. W. Earle of Bay State Film Company; Sydney Garrett, Inter-Globe Export Corporation; B. F. Howells, Jesse A. Levinson, Charles F. McGovern, Bobby North, Harry M. Warner, Oscar Price, Nat G. Rothstein, Stanley J. Rollo, J. V. Ritchey, Joseph I. Schnitzer, W. E. Shallenberger, and others.

Chaney's Work Impresses

A favored few who have seen "Shadows" privately have been unusually impressed by the work of Lon Chaney as Yen Sin. In the story, Yen Sin is the figure around whom the action principally revolves. Chaney is seen as a kindly disposed Oriental who manages to do his friends a good turn in what is developed into a smashing climax.

Englander Appointed

James Englander has been appointed publicity and advertising director of Hyperion Pictures Corporation, an organization for distribution of films in the independent field, with offices in the Candler Building. He has started work on press books and a comprehensive advertising campaign for a series of six features.

Print Leaves Coast

Ben Schulberg's second Preferred picture for Al Lichtman release has left Los Angeles for New York in the care of Henrietta Cohn, Schulberg's secretary for eight years past.

Joe Brandt Enthusiastic About Business Outlook

Joe Brandt, president of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, returned this week from a two and a half months' trip, more convinced than ever of the big times coming for independents, and of the fact that this bids fair to be a big season.

Mr. Brandt's trip took him all the way to the coast, including prolonged stop-overs at all the principal key cities.

At his New York offices this week he said that he studied conditions carefully enroute, interviewing exchange men, territorial buyers, and exhibitors in every city, and that the results of his observations led him to be confident that the majority of exhibitors throughout the country are really holding off on booking solid and are leaving a definite number of open dates for independent pictures this year.

Exhibitors with whom he talked are of the opinion that the independents are doing bigger things than ever before, and several of them told him that their receipts on one or two independent pictures they had played during the season past had been larger than those gained from any program feature played in some time.

At the coast, Mr. Brandt says, things are getting into full swing and there are no longer signs of any "slump" if ever there was one. Both independents and program organizations are making big plans and rapidly putting them into execution, and it is his belief, that the boom of the independents will help everyone concerned, stimulating a friendly rivalry and bringing better work and results all around.

His own time at the coast was spent mostly in getting the cast set for "Only a Shop Girl," second of the C. B. C. series of Six Box Office Winners—and in conferring with Producer Harry Cohn and Director Edward LeSaint on production details. He believes that the cast, which includes Estelle Taylor, Wallace Beery, Mae Busch, James Morrison, Tully Marshall, Claire Dubrey, William Scott, Willard Louis and Josephine Adair is excellently suited to the story and production, and everyone at the production center is enthusiastic over the way production is progressing. Mr. Brandt states that wherever he stopped enroute he heard the most laudatory comments on "More to be Pitied."

Garsson Furnishes Four of Carter Series

Murray W. Garsson has completed the production of the first four of a series of twelve two-reel Nick Carter detective stories which he will release on the state rights market.

The titles of the first four are "The Spirit of Evil," "Unseen Foes," "The Last Call," and "A Game of Craft.' The pictures were produced under the personal supervision of John J. Glavey and directed by Alexandre Hall.

The Nick Carter detective stories offer unlimited possibilities for the screen and should prove exceptional box office attractions owing to their popularity in fiction form and as a result of the careful manner in which they have been produced, according to opinions advanced by Mr. Garsson.

Frisco Exchange Fire Does $100,000 Damage; Ten Hurt

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 5 (Special).—The most disastrous film fire in the history of San Francisco broke out last night in the basement of the Independent Film Exchange, across the street from the Granada Theatre. The origin of the fire was undetermined. Ten persons, including Guy McElwain of Alta Studios, were injured. The fire destroyed the exchange completely. Damaged, too, were the Co-operative Film Exchange, Alta Studios, Western Poster Company, Western Supply Company and American Photoplayer Company offices. The damage is fixed at close to $100,000.

"Beautiful and Damned" Warner's Second Release

"The Beautiful and Damned," F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel in the course of picturization by the Warner Brothers, is anounced as the second of seven releases for the season, according to Harry M. Warner. The story is being produced under the supervision of Sam and Jack Warner at the organization's coast studios with William A. Seiter directing.

Prominent members of the cast headed by Marie Prevost include Kenneth Harlan, Harry Myers, Louise Fazenda, Tully Marshall, Emmett King, Cleo Ridgeley, Walter Long, Parker McConnell, Clarence Burton, George Kuwa, Charles McHugh and Kathleen Key.

"The Beautiful and Damned" is said to tell the story of the love and marriage of Anthony Patch (Kenneth Harlan), and the vivid beauty, Gloria, (Marie Prevost). It reveals with devastating satire a section of American society which has never before been recognized as an entity — that wealthy floating population which throngs the restaurants, cabarets, theatres and hotels of the big cities—people adrift on the sea of luxury, without the anchors of homes and the rudders of responsibilities, people without roots or backgrounds.

Equity Announces Sale of Picture

The sale of "What's Wrong with the Women" for Kentucky and Tennessee is announced this week by Louis Baum, vice-president of Equity Pictures Corporation. The picture will be handled in these states by Col. Fred Levy of Big Feature Rights Company, one of the largest exchanges of this territory.

"What's Wrong with the Women" was written and produced by Daniel Carson Goodman. It is interpreted by an all-star cast including Wilton Lackaye, Barbara Castleton, Julia Swayne Gordon, Huntley Gordon, Rod La Rocque, Constance Bennett and Montagu Love. The picture has already had its New York premiere at the Cameo Theatre where it was booked by Sam Zierler of Commonwealth Film Corporation, who controls the rights for New York State.

The sale to Big Feature Rights brings the total sales to date on this picture to nearly seventy-five per cent. of the entire country.

Eltabram Film Co. Buys Picture

The sale of "Where Is My Wandering Boy" to Eltabran Film Company for Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee, marks the hundred per cent. distribution of this Equity picture in the United States.

This sale was consummated recently between Louis Baum, vice-president of Equity Pictures Corporation and the Eltabran Film Company.

Cast Picked for "The Hero"

"The Hero," Gilbert Emery's stage play in which Richard Bennett scored on Broadway last year is now entering its first stages of production at the Schulberg plant on Mission Road. The picture will be distributed by the Al Lichtman Corporation under the partnership plan recently inaugurated by B. P. Schulberg, Al Lichtman and J. G. Bachmann.

Gasnier is directing the picture which will be the second of his series of Gasnier Productions, the first having been "Rich Men's Wives." Barbara La Marr, will have one of the major parts in the picture. Gaston Glass, John Sainpolis, David Butler, Doris Pawn, Ethel Shannon, Martha Mattox and Frankie Lee round out the line-up of principals.

Contest Said to Be Success

Exploiting the "Country Flapper," the Dorothy Gish feature which had a successful week in the Capitol Theatre, New York, brings forth many innovations, Producers Security says. One of the most interesting and successful stunts, exhibitors report, is "flapper" contests. The experiment is inexpensive and yet is said to be a sure-fire business puller.

Prizes are offered for the most beautiful "flapper," and the girls merely parade on the stage one at a time. The vote is left to the audience.

Canadian Buys

Charles Stephenson of Stephenson Attractions, Toronto, has contracted with Arrow Film Corporation for the rights to "Night Life in Hollywood" for the Dominion of Canada. Mr. Stephenson, prior to his recent departure from New York, expressed himself as being highly gratified with his purchase and confident that it would prove one of the real successes of the year.

Forms Own Company

Frank S. Mattison announces his resignation from Sanford Productions, of Hollywood, to organize his own producing company.

F. S. Mattison Sells Sanford Films 100 P. C.

Los Angeles—(Special)—Frank S. Mattison of the Sanford Productions of Hollywood, has returned to the Coast after a trip covering the entire United States distributing centers where he was successful in closing all of the territories for both the series of eight semi-western features in which Pete Morrison is the Star, and the new series of twelve two-reel comedies featuring Tweedy.

Following are the independent exchanges that have purchased the Pete Morrison features for their respective territories: Reliance Film Exchange of Seattle; Fontanelle Film of Omaha; Standard Film of Kansas City; Fine Art Exchange of St. Louis; Favorite Players of Chicago; Ludwig Film Exchange of Milwaukee; Tri-State Film Exchange of Minneapolis; Minter United Amusements of Detroit; Western Feature Exchange of Cleveland; S. & S. Film & Supply Company of Pittsburg; Dawn Film Corporation of Syracuse; Myriad Exchange of New York; Eastern Feature Film of Boston; 20th Century Exchange of Philadelphia; Reliance Film Exchange of Washington; Southern States Films for the entire South; Progress Features for Los Angeles and San Francisco, and the Export and Import for all rights outside of the United States.

Tweedy comedies are being released by the following: Myriad Exchange in New York; Dawn Film Corporation in Syracuse; Sam Grand of Boston; Ben Amsterdam of Philadelphia; Favorite Players of Chicago; Minter United Amusements in Detroit; Lande Film Service in Cleveland; S. & S. Film Supply of Pittsburg; Fine Arts in St. Louis; Richards & Flynn of Kansas City; Ludwig Exchange of Milwaukee; Tri-State in Milwaukee; Fontanelle in Omaha; Reliance Film Exchange in Washington; Eltabran Film Corporation of Atlanta; Pearce of New Orleans; Peerless Film in Los Angeles and San Francisco, and R. D. Lewis Exchanges of Dallas.

Houdini Opens Tour in Boston

Boston—(Special)—Harry Houdini made a personal appearance here on Monday, Oct. 2, at the Globe Theatre in conjunction with a showing of his latest picture, "The Man From Beyond," directed by Burton King. This picture is being shown as a road attraction and the Boston date is the first stop. The Great Clayton is co-featured with the picture, which opens to a big business, despite the opposition furnished by Howard Thurston, the magician who opened his road tour here this week.

Sell Warners in Buffalo

A deal involving three Warner Brothers' pictures was recently consummated with the Film Exchange, Inc., of Buffalo, by Harry M. Warner, it is announced.

The Film Exchange has purchased for the Buffalo territory the exclusive rights to "Your Best Friend," a Harry Rapf production starring Vera Gordon, "Parted Curtains," with Henry B. Walthall and Mary Alden, and "Ashamed of Parents," which was edited and titled by Eddie Bonns and Lou Marangella, of the Warner publicity staff.

ZENA KEEFE

Charmingly clever and popular star who is co-starred with Dore Davidson in "When the Blind See," a State Picture Corporation feature, directed by Burton King.

C. B. C. Issues Novel Press Sheet

One of the most novel publicity and exploitation sheets is that which has been issued this week by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation in connection with its distribution of its series of Six Box Office Winners, of which "More To Be Pitied" has already gone over big and the second release, "Only A Shop Girl" is now in production with what is literally an all-star cast.

This is a facsimile in every way of an actual trade publication in style, make-up, and every other detail, with the exception that everything in it—advertisements, news stories, stills—have to do with "More To Be Pitied" and "Only A Shop Girl."

The new sheet is being sent to all exchanges handling the Box-Office Winners series with written suggestions for its use as a publicity, exploitation and sales aid.

"Rags to Riches" in Indianapolis

Indianapolis, Ind.—(Special)—Indications on Wednesday of this week at the Circle Theatre, where Warner Brothers' Wesley Barry feature, "Rags to Riches," a Harry Rapf production, was shown for the first time in the Middle West, were that the house record would be at least equalled. The picture was cleverly exploited and opened Sunday, Oct. 1, to a turnaway business.

F. & R. Road Shows Start

Minneapolis—(Special)—As was exclusively announced in this department three weeks ago, the first road-show units of pictures distributed by the F. & R. Exchange here were sent out this week by J. Fred Cubberly.

"Atmosphere great"
"Story backs up good title"
"Title will get them in"
"The picture will please"
"Two prime requisites of a money maker"—

The above is a sample of the way that Critics, Dramatic Editors and Exhibitors themselves all over the country are talking about

"What's Wrong With the Women"

Written and Produced by DANIEL CARSON GOODMAN

WHEREVER "WHAT'S WRONG WITH THE WOMEN?" has been shown, whether to audiences, dramatic critics, reviewers, or exhibitors themselves, it has been an immediate and instantaneous sensation.

The foremost first-run theatres throughout the entire country are booking it where it has already been released.

In last week's ad we published a partial list of prominent houses that have booked it.

We could fill three pages of space in this paper with the booking list that has come in since last week. It is going over like a house a-fire.

It is delighting audiences—it is delighting critics—it is doing more for exhibitors than any independent picture in the last ten years.

To see it is to book it. Make it your business to have it screened for you.

The press book, advertising and exploitation are immense. No cast ever assembled in all the history of independent productions, and few even in regular producing companies' pictures, equals this cast. . . .

You simply cannot afford to miss "WHAT'S WRONG WITH THE WOMEN?" Territory selling fast. Independents, communicate with us. Exhibitors, write us, and we will inform you where you can book the picture.

"Rags to Riches" Gets Big Praise

"Rags to Riches," the Warner Brothers' picture featuring Wesley Barry, which was shown at the Capitol Theatre last week, is declared to have played one of the biggest business weeks in the history of the theatre.

The trade paper critics, following the unanimous praise heaped upon the Harry Rapf production by the New York newspaper critics, characterize the feature as a sure-fire box-office attraction, a film that will please every member of the family.

Substantiating these laudatory comments, S. L. Rothafel, director of presentation of the Capitol, upon being queried about the picture is declared to have remarked: "It's a peach of an audience picture."

Moving Picture World said: "Warners offer a human interest knockout that promises gold mines for exhibitors. Here's a production that is that big and that promising to warrant cancellation of any contract in order to show it at the best houses everywhere."

Motion Picture News said: "Here is a photoplay combining all the elements which build smashing returns at the box-office. Don't hesitate. Get this picture. Then take your money to the bank."

Film Daily said: "Barry's latest is another sure-fire box-office hit that you don't want to miss. Put in your order as early as possible and start getting them interested as soon as you are sure of it. You can't beat this for clean entertainment and a real family picture. It is for old and young alike."

Exhibitors Trade Review said: "'Rags to Riches' is rare entertainment. It's a wholesome story, a story for the whole blessed family, filled with laughs and many alternating chokes. In reply to an inquiry as to how this feature was going, Rothafel, the chief of presentations, remarked that it was 'a peach of an audience picture.' Mr. Rothafel was right. It is!"

New York Telegraph said: "'Rags to Riches,' that good old melodrama that we used to laugh, cry, applaud and hiss over, has at last reached the screen, thanks to the Warner Brothers, and is being presented at the Capitol this week. It's going to be just as big a hit as the stage version. The film has something to please most everybody and ought to create as fine a cinema record as it is a speaking stage production. Barry is excellent throughout and places this feature film high up in the success class."

"After Six Days" in Indianapolis

After several weeks of negotiation contracts have been closed between Louis Weiss of Articles Pictures Corporation and Lee Boda for a special engagement of "After Six Days" at English's Opera House, Indianapolis, Indiana beginning Sunday, October 22nd. This theatre is the leading legitimate house of Indianapolis and the presentation of the Bible feature marks a distinct innovation as regards the policy of the management, inasmuch as it presents during the season only the best theatrical attractions of the Shubert, and Klaw, and Erlanger offices. Outside of the leading D. W. Griffith film successes, including "Birth of A Nation" and "Way Down East," "After Six Days" is the only film offering the Indianapolis house has considered worthy of presentation. Extraordinary plans have been laid to give the Bible film a tremendous advance publicity campaign.

Bert Ennis will leave for Indianapolis next week and devote two weeks to an advertising campaign in the newspapers as well as several stunts, in which he will have the co-operation of the leading city officials. An augmented orchestra of twenty men will interpret the musical score prepared by Orville Mayhood and a special staging will be given the production under the direction of Addison Miller, managing director of the theatre. Prior to the opening of the picture on Sunday evening, October 22nd, a private showing will be held for the benefit of the Mayor of the city and leaders in society and civic life. This opening is the first of several which Weiss Brothers will give "After Six Days" in Cleveland, Minneapolis, Detroit and other key cities within the next few weeks.

"Sawing Expose" Suit Is Finally Settled

After several months of legal entanglements in connection with Weiss Brothers' Clarion Photoplays, Inc., film called The Expose of Sawing A Lady In Half, all difficulties with Horace Goldin, the famous stage magician and performer of an illusion called Sawing A Woman In Two, in vaudeville, have been straightened out. The film expose is now sanctioned and endorsed by Goldin and all exchanges and exhibitors throughout the world can rent and exhibit the picture without fear of legal action on the part of the magician. The settlement effected between Weiss Brothers and Goldin marks the end of a lengthy legal battle which involved the Expose of Sawing A Lady In Half for several months and gave the film unusual publicity in the newspapers throughout the country.

The following statement from Harry G. Kosch, attorney for Clarion Photoplays, Inc., has been made public:—

"Application was made by Mr. Goldin for the appointment of a receiver for the motion picture "Sawing A Lady In Half" with authority on the part of the receiver to consummate existing contracts and to negotiate further for the distribution of the picture. Messrs. Louis Weiss and Avel B. Silverman were appointed joint receivers by Justice Isadore Wasservogle on September 28, 1922."

In addition to the foregoing, Horace Goldin has provided Clarion Photoplays, Inc., with a letter giving his sanction and endorsement to the film expose. This letter will be made public in the form of an advertising announcement next week to the exchanges and exhibitors throughout the entire world. It is expected that the settlement effected will give fresh impetus to the picture in several unsold territories.

Shallenberger Goes On Trip

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, President of Arrow Film Corporation, is on a swing around the circle, during which time he will combine the selling of Arrow's new Fall product with a critical analysis of motion picture conditions in the centers he will visit. His itinerary, at the present time, includes a brief stay in Philadelphia and other cities.

Has Plan to Revive Northwest Business

Forty exhibitors have signed with the F. and R. Film Company for its road show attractions plan, according to reports from Minneapolis. This is the new scheme to revive business in the small towns of the Northwest which J. F. Cubberley has developed.

The Cubberley plan includes the distribution of unit shows composed of a feature, and a variety of short subjects. The product handled by the F. and R. exchanges in Minneapolis and in Milwaukee will include the Lichtman product, the Warner Bros. product and a varied assortment of individual pictures for which the exchange has contracted.

The plan is this: For example, all of the small towns in North and South Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin and the upper peninsula of Michigan which Cubberley serves by virtue of his Lichtman franchise will be offered the service, a franchise under a percentage arrangement going to one exhibitor in every town of 5,000 population or less. Percentage is the only manner in which the service will be booked. There will be a treasurer appointed in each town to look after the financial returns for both exhibitor and exchange.

Closes Foreign Deal

Under an agreement entered into by Second National Pictures Corporation and Ferdinand H. Adam, the latter has arranged for the distribution of Second National releases in South America, Central America, Mexico and the West Indies.

Trade Commissioner Accuses Exchanges

Washington, D. C. (Special).—The Federal Trade Commission has issued a formal complaint against a number of film companies charging them with unfair methods of competition in the issuance of an old film renamed to simulate the title of a competitor's film. The respondents to the complaint are: The Films Distributors League, Inc., of New York City, and its incorporators; Eastern Feature Film Company, of Boston; Favorite Players Film Corporation, of Chicago; Lande Film Distributing Corporation, of Cincinnati; Lande Film Distributing Corporation of Cleveland; Supreme Photoplay Corporation of Los Angeles; Favorite Film Company, of Detroit; Friedman Film Corporation, Minneapolis; Alexander Film Corporation, New York; Supreme Film Company, Los Angeles; Quality Film Corporation, Pittsburgh; Leo G. Garner, doing business under the trade name and style Reliance Film Exchange, Washington, D.C.; Mr. Brown, doing business under the trade name and style Capital Film Exchange, Philadelphia; William Alexander, of New York; Maurice Fleckles, Chicago, and Herman Rifkin, of Boston.

The complaint charges that the respondents issued to exhibitors a photoplay bearing the title "Three Musketeers," which was accompanied by advertising material that did not disclose to the public that such photoplay was a reissue and was formerly exhibited under the title "D'Artagnan." This old renamed film was exploited about the time of the production of a widely advertised motion picture, "The Three Musketeers," which was being produced by the Douglas Fairbanks Picture Corporation, with Douglas Fairbanks in the star role. These alleged acts, the complaint states, had a tendency to mislead and deceive the public into the belief that the respondent's "photoplay was the one produced by the Douglas Fairbanks Picture Corporation, when such was not the case.

The respondents have been given 30 days in which to file answers to the complaint with the commission.

Press Book Contains Novel Showmen Aids

The eight page broadside press sheet that has been published for the first Warner Brothers' release, "Rags to Riches," a Harry Rapf production featuring Wesley Barry, is said to contain many novel publicity and exploitation aids for use by exhibitors booking the picture.

On the first page there are feature and short newspaper stories dealing with the picture, in addition to a number of scene cuts suitable for newspaper reproduction. The second page contains advance notices, current reviews, scene cuts and a striking four column advertisement.

The third page has been devoted to two feature stories of six nationally known men who have risen from rags to riches. These have been made available for newspaper use, and they are said to serve as a keynote for exhibitors who can play up local men of prominence along the same lines.

Page four is filled with stories on Barry, and four attractive newspaper ad suggestions. On the fifth page the entire array of novelties have been reproduced. These include what are declared to be five unique and attractive cut-outs suitable for co-operation window tie-ups with local merchants, two life-sized papier mache novelties, a paper hat, novelty showing Barry in riches and then in rags, blotter, lithographed herald, and a door knob hanger.

Page six is devoted to exploitation suggestions, scene cuts and newspaper stories; seven is utilized by lobby display photographs, oil paintings and a number of teaser ads, and the eighth page is given over to lithographs and slides.

Second National Has Three for Fall Release

"One Moment's Temptation" is announced as the second release for the fall season by Second National Pictures Corporation. The scenes are laid in Maryland. Marjorie Villis, James Knight and Bernard Dudley are featured.

The first release by Second National for the fall season is "Broken Shadows" and "Nance," by Charles Garvice, featuring Isobel Elsom.

Arrow Closes Foreign Sales

David J. Mountan, manager of the Foreign Department of Arrow Film Corporation, reports the signing of an important contract with W. A. Robbins, acting for the Co-Operative Film Exchange in Melbourne, Australia, under the terms of which Mr. Robbins' organization obtain the distribution rights for Australia, New Zeland and Tasmania for a minimum of twenty-six Arrow features, including four James Oliver Curwood's, four Peter B. Kyne's, two Rubye de Remer's four Neva Gerber's, eight Jack Hoxie's "Love, Hate and a Woman," "The Splendid Lie," "The Innocent Cheat," "Ten Nights in a Barroom" and others. Also included in the contract were a minimum of fifty-two comedies made up of Mirthquakes, Speeds, Cruelyweds Hank Manns and Eddie Lyons, as well as eleven Sport Pictorials.

Lichtman Deal Covers South America

One of the outstanding foreign deals of recent months was closed this week between the Al Lichtman Corporation and the Sociedad General Cinematografica of Buenos Aires.

The entire list of Lichtman releases for the first year is involved in the transaction which covers seven South American countries: Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador. Juan Kunzler, local representative of the Sociedad represented his organization while Lichtman personally closed the deal for his firm.

Trade Papers Are Responsible

Franklyn E. Backer, president of East Coast Productions, who is distributing the Crescent comedies directed by Bruce Mitchell, has received many telegrams and letters from interested parties. The reviews which the Crescent comedies have secured in the various trade publications are responsible for these letters and telegrams and prove that a screen comedy that does not depend on hokum only is more satisfactory than just simple slap-stick.

Di Lorenzo Sales

DiLorenzo, Inc., announced this week the following sales on their series of six "Big Boy" Williams' productions produced by the Frederick Herbst Productions: to Dave Segal, of Royal Pictures, Inc., Philadelphia, Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey; to Harry Segal, of Pioneer Film Corporation of N. E., Boston, the six New England States; and to Herbert and Moe Kerman, 130 West Forty-sixth street, Greater New York and Northern New Jersey.

Vogel's Deals

William M. Vogel, exporter, located at 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York, has closed a deal with C. C. Burr, president of Mastodon Films, Inc., for exclusive foreign rights on "Sure-Fire Flint," with Johnny Hines. Mr. Vogel has also purchased the complete foreign rights to the next six-reel comedy special, featuring Johnny Hines, as well as the forthcoming Whitman Bennett-C. C. Burr six-reel special, "The Secrets of Paris."

Storey Signs Haynes for New Series

Al Haynes in a series of one reel comedies, one every two weeks is the latest offering of Storey Pictures, Inc., for the independent State Rights market. Haynes will be remembered for his work in Christie comedies and in the new series of twenty-six single reelers in which he is featured he is supported by many of his former associates in Christie Comedies, including George French, Vera Reynolds, Billie Bennett, Tom Dempsey and Jack Henderson.

Elsie Davenport, featured in Burlesque Photoplays, a two-reel satire every month, has resumed production work on the series released by Storey Pictures, Inc. Included in this series of satires are "Ham Omelet," "No Darn Yeast," "Four Coarse Men," "Salami," "The Sheik" and others. Miss Davenport is supported by Edward Anthony, Edmun Loew, Jack Costello, Jack Welcome, Gladys Davis, Billie Davis and Ruth Young.

Begin on Second of Blythe Series

The second in the present series of Betty Blythe special star pictures now being made by B. B. Productions, Inc., is well under way at the Whitman Bennett Studios in Yonkers.

The title of the picture is "The Darling of the Rich." The five leading artists in the supporting company are Montagu Love, Charles Gerard, Gladys Leslie, Julia Swayne Gordon and Leslie Austin.

The story and continuity are both by Dorothy Farnum, who has been Mr. Bennett's staff writer for the past two years.

The plot is a sensational melodrama of New York "high society," telling the amazing adventures of a poor country girl who comes to the big city, exchanges identities with a refugee Russian Princess and finds herself in a maelstrom of unexpected events.

Exploitation Angles of "The Sin Flood" Offer Unusual Opportunities for Gain

By EPES W. SARGENT

SOMETIMES it happens that a special feature is of such a nature that to attempt to obtain extra business through exploitation will hurt even the regular business. Some pictures are of a type to appeal to a class of persons who will resent ballyhoo methods. Such pictures, as a rule, cannot be made to yield their full value at the box office because the advertising is limited chiefly to newspaper work and the mailing list.

In "The Sin Flood" exploitation is not only possible, but even indicated and a most characteristic stunt is a street ballyhoo, the use of which would ruin some titles. The Goldwyn super-release offers some very interesting and unusual problems in selling.

This does not mean, however, that this exploitation can be crudely done. If not done with care it will react against the picture, as surely as it will against some others, but well done exploitation will help to interest both the lovers of melodrama and those who do not regularly attend picture theatres, but who can be attracted to the best in production.

Before trying to put this picture over it will be well to see the film, even if this may entail some expense for travel. You cannot do the picture full justice until you have seen it yourself. You can read and gather that it is a most unusual story with an exceptional cast, but you cannot get sufficient enthusiasm from that to do your best work for this title. You must see it for yourself. You must come under the grip of the story as it is told by an almost flawless cast.

Communicating Enthusiasm

You can tell your patrons all you read, but you cannot tell it with the same enthusiasm and sincerity as you can if you have first sat through a presentation. You cannot otherwise put yourself fully behind the picture.

The best start on your exploitation will be a street man. Get someone who can make up to at least suggest the street preacher in the play. Get a man with dignity and of sufficient ability to give full value to the denunciations on Cottonia which can be taken from the subtitles and adapted to your own town through the substitution of the name of your city or town.

In a small place it will be best to bring someone down from the city or some town not too close, that his identity may not be suspected. Let him go around the streets uttering the warnings. Be careful not to let him be connected with your theatre in any way, but it will be only natural if he is found near your house as the spectators are coming out.

Make It a Mystery

Make the man as much of a mystery as you can. If the newspapers come and ask you if it is one of your stunts, tell them frankly that it is, but ask that the fact be not mentioned.

Use this man three weeks in advance of the showing, and do no special advertising until he is done. The last day start your first advertising smash, linking the street worker to the preacher in the story. Tell how this man changed for a few hours the souls of the men trapped in the basement saloon of the Mississippi town. Use reader ads instead of display.

Start off with a repetition of one of the warnings your man has made familiar. Use ten point for a two-column space or fourteen point for a three and run on to tell the big situation.

Don't be afraid of telling the story. The plot of the dramatic version is too well known to permit you to get away with the curiosity angle. Make a virtue of necessity and instead of concealing the plot, sell on the unusual situation, but always stop with the opening of the doors. Use such terminals as:

"——— and then this curiously assorted group, who had faced death together and in the gasping hell of the hermetically-sealed room had found a new religion, went forth into the world again; the everyday world they had never expected to see again —the preacher and the cotton gamblers, the free lunch grafter and the girl of the chorus, the seedy actor and the derelict engineer. Some carried the lesson with them. Who——?"

Reserve the Surprise

You must tell the story to sell the play. You must hook it up to the success of the stage version. This is what you have to sell, and you must display your goods. Even with the speculative terminals you cannot preserve curiosity, for the story is too well known.

And you cannot afford to slide on the list of important players in the cast. These, too, are a part of your stock in trade and you must put them on the counter. The one thing you can hold in reserve is the excellence of the work; the unusual ensemble effect of a body of capable players working under competent direction.

Keep this for the surprise. Tell your patrons it is good, but don't tell them how good it is. That is what is going to send people out looking for friends whom they can send to see the production, so hold that back, but make a special effort to sell big houses the opening day.

The Best Advertising

No matter how competent your advertising approach may be nor how varied your appeal, your greater sale will be upon the word-of-mouth advertising to follow the first-day showings.

The play will make a profound sensation. It is an unusual production in that it will appeal to all grades of patrons according to their mentality.

Drive on the Opening

For this reason devote the greater portion of your endeavors to assure a good opening. The best stunt, of course, would be the private showing a week before the opening. If this can be arranged, it is most strongly to be urged, for it will bring pulpit and newspaper comment worth many times the advertising space you can afford to buy.

Build on this. Prepare a series of readers on the characters. Take each one and tell the stories of their lives. Use one-column measure in a ten-point face with an eighteen-point bold heading, giving only the name and work along these lines: was a chorus girl with the stock opera company in Cottonia. She met Billy Bear, who worked for a cotton broker. It was the same old story. Success came to the man. The girl had lost her novelty. He was her first love and her last, but there was but one thing she could do when he deserted her. Then came the storm. Drenched to the skin she sought refuge in the back room of the basement saloon where, in happier times she and Billy had spent such happy hours. When the waters burst she was among those locked into the air-tight refuge, a bit of floatsam on the Sin Flood of the bustling, gambling town. And with death staring her in the face—but see what happened at the Capitol all next week."

Work With Posters

Make a profuse use of posters, chiefly as cutouts. Emphasize the cast through the use of their pictures. Make a drive on window displays for cutouts and stills. Use 24-sheets for the boards and mount and cutout the smaller paper. Use plenty of the large sheets, for they will suggest by their own size the bigness of the play. Gamble a little money on some extra paper. It is practically a sure thing.

As soon as you have seen the play yourself, go to the leading ministers, if you cannot obtain a private showing, and tell them about the play. If you cannot talk well, get someone who can, and who can interest them in the theme. Even without a preview you can probably get some pulpit mention, and you can pull a lot of church business on this picture.

Special Lists

Make every effort to get hold of the address lists of the exclusive clubs, particularly women's organizations. Write a better pictures letter. Have it printed in first-class style, and make a special drive on the "best" people.

Even better would be an arrangement whereby four or five girls are engaged to make a personal canvass. In most places you can find a few who can get to the real people and who will be glad to make a little money through their social connections. Get them to talk it up. Pay them to do it, either in cash or a theatre party tickets.

The Production

Unless your house policy commits you to it, don't try to use a prologue on this. No prologue can properly lead up to the story. It would be better to put the money into a larger instrumentation and get a better musical selection. Larger orchestras can find in "The Creation" a fitting musical prelude. Play it to a bare stage with soft, changing lights. Use blues and pinks and amber, rather than reds and greens.

Then look to your effects. If you do not feel that your stage crew can do these right, cut everything out. Poor effects will be worse than none at all. An overworked wind machine and rain effect can undo all the efforts you have made. Use these sparingly in the flood up the valley and during the storm scenes in the city.

Work Up the Singing

Use musical effects for the two hymns sung. Get the best soprano voice you can hire, a clear lyric soprano; a girl who will sing straight and without florid effects. Let her clear, high voice lead in "Lead Kindly Light" and use a male quartet, without the girl, for the first hymn. Don't let them attempt part-singing. These men in the saloon are not practised singers and harmonizing will not give you the proper effect.

And as the doors are thrown open at the last work for the noise of street traffic, keeping it up only during that scene. Use a soft hoof effect and run loaded children's express wagons around the stage for the noise of the drays. Stop all sounds when the doors are closed, and play the scenes in the closed saloon in silence, save for the songs at the indicated points.

Ralph Ruffner's Fire Regulations May Profitably Be Copied by Others

WHEN we were in Vancouver this summer, Ralph Ruffner showed us the fire drill regulations posted all over the Capitol Theatre where the employees could see them, but not in view of the patrons. They were so good that we asked Ruff to send a card along.

The regulations are reproduced here in the hope that it will lead others to follow this example and prepare now against an emergency likely to happen even while you are reading these lines.

Adapt the instructions to your own house and staff and have a drill at least once a week.

Few Are Prepared

Some twenty-five years ago, following a disastrous fire, Leander Richardson, then editor of the Dramatic News, had this writer make a canvass of all of the theatres in New York City as to their preparedness.

Only one house, a Bowery theatre, had any provision made, and this was because the manager had been a member of the old volunteer fire department. All of the other houses had absolutely no preparation other than the standpipes and hose required by the fire regulations.

Still Napping

Some few theatres put on some sort of a drill, but when the Iroquois disaster in Chicago, shocked the continent some years later the same state of unpreparedness was discovered by investigators. We were then with the Proctor theatres, with headquarters at the Fifth Avenue, and for months the station drill was held every day, just before the house opened. Then it gradually drifted into disuse.

The only way is to adopt some system and then follow it up with daily or at least semi-weekly drills. You may never need to meet the emergency, but if emergency does arise much injury and perhaps loss of life may be avoided by having the staff so thoroughly drilled in its duties that it acts automatically.

Here They Are

Adopt these rules; perhaps with the aid of your local fire chief, and then make them effective through constant drill. There are few fires, and there may seem to be no real necessity for all the trouble, but you can never tell.

Instructions Governing Employees of the CAPITOL THEATRE
In Event of Fire, Panic or Emergency

DOORMEN

OUTSIDE MAN:
On signal, you will fasten back all doors at Granville St. entrance; shove frames even with wall, and then direct attention to panic or disorder.

DOORMAN, GRANVILLE ST.:
On signal, you will fasten back all doors and then direct attention to panic or disorder.

DOORMAN, SEYMOUR ST.:
On signal, you will fasten back OUTSIDE doors. Usher, on left centre aisle, will fasten back INSIDE doors. Both of you will then direct attention to panic or disorder.

USHERS

BALCONY:
On signal, one usher will assist doorman in fastening Granville St. doors back. Other usher will station himself at head of stairways and direct all balcony patrons through Granville St. entrance.

MAIN FLOOR:

LEFT LOGES: This usher will open all doors at cross-aisle on Seymour Street side—THEN break glass in signal box and turn in fire alarm (if fire or smoke prevails, or if judgment indicates that FIRE DEPARTMENT is necessary) after which, will direct attention to panic or disorder.

LEFT CENTRE AISLE: One usher from this aisle will fasten back INSIDE doors of Seymour Street entrance, returning immeditately to head of aisle and attending to panic or disorder. OTHER USHER will station himself at cross aisle (ROW "S") and direct all patrons of front section out side doors through cross aisle to Seymour Street.

CENTRE: One usher remain at at head of this aisle and direct attention to panic or disorder, indicating Seymour Street to exit passing patrons. OTHER USHER will station himself at ROW "T" (opposite Seymour Street exit) and direct patrons to that exit.

RIGHT CENTRE: One usher will open all doors on lane, returning immediately to head of this aisle and directing attention to panic or disorder. OTHER USHER will station himself at cross aisle (ROW "S") and direct patrons to loge exit on lane, at the same time directing attention to panic or disorder.

RIGHT LOGES: Ushers will open all doors at cross aisle exit on lane, remaining at station and directing attention to panic or disorder.

STAGE

STAGE HANDS: ELECTRICIAN, on signal or in Emergency, will FIRST bring up house lights and drop main curtain. Carpenter will lower asbestos curtain and report to Electrician. IN EVENT OF FIRE BACK STAGE, after asbestos curtain has been lowered, both Electrician and Carpenter will man chemical extinguishers on their respective sides.

ART DEPARTMENT: On signal, all employees on duty will man fire hose on their side of building and STAND READY.

ORCHESTRA: LEADER will see to it that music does not stop in any emergency. If orchestra is off duty at moment, ORGANIST will CARRY ON. Music is the prime essential in a crowd emergency, and mostly in the hands of musicians lies the safety and sane conduct of a crowd of people. Train yourselves, THINK; PREPARE for that eventaality which may come at any moment you are on duty. "Auld Lang Syne" in customary key will serve as a suitable theme to play until house is empty or margin of safety is passed. After margin of safety is passed, IF NECESSARY, ORCHESTRA members are requested to man hose line at head of orchestra room stairway; others to assist stage hands in any BACK STAGE emergency.

CHECK ROOM: On signal, attendant on duty will notify Sey. 89 of fire in Capitol Theatre. Speak quietly and clearly. 10 Rings on house telephone means same thing. For instance: — — — — — — — — — —

OPERATORS: In event asbestos curtain is lowered during a performance, and house lights are suddenly brought on, you will immediately break glass and turn in alarm from station in booth. THERE ARE NO EXCEPTIONS TO THIS RULE. The management assumes full responsibility for house lights or asbestos curtain interrupting performance. DO NOT drop ports—let them down without noise. In event of fire in booth and time permits, close ports quietly. If emergency prevails, drop ports, pull fire alarm and ring STAGE and CHECK ROOM TEN (10) times. Then Open man hole door in roof as well as windows in Transformer room and booth.

ENGINEER: IN EMERGENCY, if on duty on floor, you will assist house attendants in quelling panic or disorder. In event of SMOKE from fire within theatre, you will immediately start INTAKE and EXHAUST fans full speed.

Fruity

Getting a lot of bananas cheap from a commission house, O. W. McCutcheon, of the American Theatre, Charleston, Ill., used them for heralds, tagging each with: "This banana put Wallace Reid to work and made him the Dictator." To borrow a current phrase, the populace ate it up.

THEY ARE STILL SUMMERING IN FLORIDA AND "SMILIN' THROUGH"

An unusually pretty latticed lobby for Norma Talmadge from the Beecham Theatre, Orlando, Fla. This is a cutout from the six sheet which works in well with the potted plants and gives a much better effect than a cutout without some surrounding.

A Mystery Bugler Stirred Up Town

Because the Rivoli Theatre, La Crosse, Wis., was putting over a go-to-the-movies week about the time, "One Clear Call" was booked in, and decided to give them both a bump with one stunt.

For several evenings a bugler appeared at the most prominent corner in town about the time the offices let out, and sounded the Klan call. He refused to tell who he was.

Friday and Saturday an advertisement was run which commenced: "If you have been wondering why the solitary bugler——" and adding that the reason would be given at the same corner Saturday night.

Some fifteen hundred persons were on the corner at the appointed time, being entertained by a fake radio concert from the broadcasting station of the Bingville "Bugle" in the wait. Then the bugler blew and from an alley came the riders shown in the cut, the blanketed horses advertising the feature, the week and the house.

A two-hour parade showed the outfit to most of the town, and both the play and the week were put over.

Another idea was a man whose straw hat was supplied with a flash. When he removed the lid he would put on the flash to light the sign which adorned the inside of the crown.

NIGHT RIDERS SERVED DOUBLE PURPOSE IN LA CROSSE

They not only helped to tell about "One Clear Call," but they also put over a Go-to-the-movies week planned by the Rivoli Theatre, the stunt being worked up through the week by a mysterious bugler and other helpful devices.

Cutting the Prices on a Safe Robbery

To point up the fact that "Fools First" is a crook play, the Palace Theatre, Cedar Rapids, Ia., offered ten dollars in gold to any person who could open a Herring-Hall-Marvin safe in the lobby and take cut the coin.

The safe agency guaranteed the house against the loss of the ten spot and supplied the safe free; offering to duplicate the stunt anywhere in Iowa. Probably the other agencies in other states will be open to argument if properly approached.

No self-respecting burglar would fool with a safe for a piking little ten dollars, particularly as tools and explosives were barred, but the general public had a lot of fun with the combination knob, and provided a self-renewing ballyhoo all day long.

It would probably pay to have a good "shill" to start the crowd going whenever the stunt died down, and in a small town the local cut-up could probably be persuaded to give a newspaper reply to the implied challenge, and hang around to keep things stirred up.

The stunt costs nothing, is away from the usual, and can be made a powerful worker for the box office.

Honest Cops

Write it in the book that when E. W. Irvin, of the Ideal Theatre, Columbia, S. C., played "In the Name of the Law," he followed the general practice of offering the police ten per cent. of the gross. The police were afraid to accept, and so were the firemen, when he turned to them.

Then comes the odd part. The unaccepted offer pleased both the department heads so much they let him go the limit with tack cards and banners, only stipulating that the advertising must come down if the citizenry objected.

Old Pro Bono Publico did not pen a single line to the newspaper and the stuff stayed up until the end of the run, and it did not cost a penny.

THIS STUNT WAS SAFE IN A DOUBLE SENSE

The Palace Theatre, Cedar Rapids, Ia., offered the ten dollars the safe contained to any person who could open the burglar-proof without tools or explosives. As Harry Houdini was not in town, the house kept the ten and still got a big advertisement. The safe people supplied the tin box.

Old, but Good

Leslie F. Whelan, Washington Paramounteer, is using the "drive carefully" campaign idea for "Manslaughter," using tack cards for the stunt. These can be put where ordinary advertising will not be tolerated, and in Richmond it was used for advance work, being tacked to every police semaphore in the city.

THE MANSLAUGHTER CARD

It is a direct tie-up with the play, which is based on this very point, and more apt than the Wallace Reid hook-ins which have proven so successful. This also suggests that you make a drive on the local autoists with a somewhat similar mailing piece, adding that proof can be found at your theatre. This will work even where the speed campaign has been overdone.

Got Young and Old

To get interest in Universal's "In the Days of Buffalo Bill," Manager Estes, of the Phillips Theatre, Orlando, Fla., offered coupons good for matinee admissions to all attending the night shows. The result was that the children deviled their parents into going to the theatre that they might get the free coupons. In spite of this there were 469 paid admissions to the matinee in addition to the 515 coupons.

Spread Out

Even living in a town like Punxsutawney, Pa., does not dim the enterprise of McCarthy, who is the manager of the only house in town. There is another town. Du Bois, only a short distance away, and he keeps his eye on their bookings. When he beats them to a feature he swarms over and gets half the town to come to his house.

He figured that he could get quite some people to come over to see Norma Talmadge in "Smilin' Through," and he plastered the town with the joy slogan, until the only man left in Du Boise was a chap who stuttered so he could not say, "Let me off at Punxsutawney." We don't blame him. Neither can we.

WE ARE FILMING THE POLICE PROLOGUE FOR
"IN THE NAME OF THE LAW"
TO BE SHOWN AT THE LIBERTY STARTING

An F. B. O. Release

KANSAS CITY COPS DOING THEIR STUFF FOR AN AD

All over the country the police departments are being turned over to the theatres using "In the Name of the Law." Hal Horne pulled a fake prologue film for the Liberty, Kansas City, and had the use of practically the entire force.

Police Ballyhoo for in the "Name of Law"

It comes pretty soft for the managers who are playing "In the Name of the Law," for all you have to do is to tell the police what you want and you get it.

Down in Kansas City Hal Horne, an F. B. O. exploiteer, staged a film prologue to the picture, employing most of the police force. Had he run all the film he pretended to turn, he would have had a forty-eight hour show, but he took a little real negative and a lot of fake turning and the entire city saw the stuff.

In Des Moines he pulled a fake street fight with a bannered patrol wagon rushing up to make the arrest, the banner being tricked to roll down when the excitement was at its height. Here they even made the police sell tickets.

About the same stunts are being worked all over the country through the campaign the F. B. O. has made.

Used Gilded Cage to Confine a Wax Model

J. F. Clancy, of the Capitol Theatre, Hartford, used a gilded cage to house the handsomest wax model he could find working in the department stores. The model was dressed in silver beads and spotlighted with the result that she made a real flash.

The cage was of wicker and was built in three parts to facilitate handling and storage, for of course Clancy plans to use the stunt again some time.

THE HARTFORD CAGE

The same idea has been used in other cities with a living model, but it is rather hard on the girl, and the wax figure will get almost as much attention.

The large cut shows such a frame planned by A. B. Morrison, of Loew's Theatre, Memphis. This case was built for the display of three sheets, as shown on page 678 of the issue for August 26.

In the game of business, it is not the fighter who gets hurt, but the non-combatant. Get a hustle on.

Used Real Rain in His Animated Scene

Real rain was one of the accessories of a convincing animated display at the Phiel Theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla., for "The Bonded Woman."

J. T. Freeman made two sets of profile waves; big rollers to suit a stormy sky backing. Miniature boats were mounted between the rows and there pivoted so that a current of air from an electric fan kept them rocking up and down. In front of the scene, at the top, was a length of perforated pipe, connected with a hose from the nearest faucet, the water being discharged into a gutter below the scene and run off through a larger hose. Artificial lightning and thunder were added, though Mr. Freeman does not state the means by which these were produced. The general effect was very realistic and the appreciation the display gained was subconsciously transferred to the credit of Miss Compson and her play.

The stunt only cost $7, plus material on hand, and the house was bettered about twenty per cent. on a two-day run.

Issued Rain Checks Against "The Storm"

Issuing rain checks was one way to put over "The Storm" used by the Sheridan Theatre, New York. The face of the ticket was in simulation of the rain checks given out at the Polo Grounds except that it carried the line: "Rain Check issued in case of 'The Storm,'" but the back read that "This ticket and forty cents will admit you, etc."

It's almost too late for the ball season, but perhaps you can put it in moth balls until the hurlers begin again.

Warned by Wire

A "Storm" warning by wire was the way Irving Klein, of the Arverne Theatre, in a New York suburb, put over the Universal title. It was sent out on a telegraph blank.

As now and then a storm will sweep a few summer cottages into the sea, the warning naturally was read to the point where the house name came in.

ANOTHER USE FOR MORRISON'S DISPLAY CABINETS

As shown in a recent issue, this was built for the lobby display of three sheets, but by removing the sheet frames and substituting bars, it made a fine display for "Her Gilded Cage," at Loew's Palace Theatre, Memphis.

Spectacled Ushers Served As Prologue

No prologue was used at the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, on "Grandma's Boy," but all of the ushers were provided with horn rimmed glasses, and De Sales Harrison found that they served even better than a prologue to get the crowd into the spirit of the play. The ushering staff is composed of young boys. The idea might not work as well with girls or with men, but the spectacled kiddies were funny; the incoming spectators laughed and settled into their seats in a proper frame of mind for the play.

Mr. Harrison frequently uses a similar idea in place of a prologue, finding that it does not matter what he does, so that it gets the crowd in a receptive mood.

Gets New Idea for Hook Up Page Use

George Watter, of the Capitol Theatre, Little Rock, Ark., evolved a scheme for making people who read a hook-up page visit the store of each advertiser.

He hooked twenty-three merchants to a co-operative space, and offered a set of prizes for the best and neatest list of stars appearing in the Paramountown film.

To get the names you had to visit the stores of all the merchants and copy from the gold stars in the display windows the names of two or more stars displayed there. To get the entire fifty-one, you had to make the rounds of all the stores, and a surprisingly large number did so.

It's a new idea and useful in that it delivers the promised patron right at the store door.

Added Trimmings

Several houses have sent out a masked rider in an automobile for Guy Bates Post in "The Masquerader," but the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, gave him a companion. The sign on the car read "I am the Masquerader" when the man was in the car, but when he left to carry out a shopping campaign, announced in advance, the girl sat in the car and the sign was reversed to read "I am waiting for the Masquerader."

Guy Bates Post gave the prizes at a dinner dance at a local hotel that was much advertised, and the ballyhoo man gave out 3,000 packages of toilet powder for a drug store, the samples being pasted for the attraction.

PUTTING OVER "MAN—WOMAN—MARRIAGE" IN SYDNEY, AUSTRALIA

The Haymarket used wedding bells on one side of the banner and horseshoes on the other, while the three armed cross was planted in several places. Below the banner is the slogan "9 Mighty Reels, 9" to give emphasis to the extra length of the feature.

Schooled the Kids

Because the large stage of the Rialto Theatre, Sterling, Col., had been used through the summer by a dancing teacher, E. P. Briggs got an idea for a publicity stunt for "Nice People."

When he got Bebe Daniels' hints on deportment for nice people, he got the teacher to start a class for children between seven and fifteen years of age, which was held three mornings a week until school opened. The papers gave him columns of write-up, and when the picture lands in town he is going to offer a graduation exercise as a prologue to the picture. You can figure the money that it will bring in.

Worth the Finiff

When Alex P. Roberts, of the Strand Theatre, Salisbury, N. C., paid an aviator five dollars to go up and throw out some Paramount star heralds, he not only boosted the receipts on "While Satan Sleeps" about fifty per cent, but he got a big reader in one of the hardest boiled newspapers in his section. He figures that it was worth the five.

Free admissions were given the first twenty-five persons to correctly list the seventeen Paramount stars, but that by no means meant the first twenty-five persons to turn up at the theatre.

Two Paramount banners on the underside of the wings did not hurt any in helping to put over Paramount Week.

A GALLOPING HORSE SOLD RUTH ROLAND SERIAL

The cutout was mounted on cords which were worked from the box office. They can be tied to a motor or actuated by the opening and closing of the doors. Designed by the Pathe Exchange, Charlotte, N. C., for the Ottaway Theatre, of that city.

Buried Treasure

The buried treasure stunt is particularly good for "Monte Cristo," and the Capitol Theatre, Altoona, Pa., cleaned up for a week's business on four gold watches. As the name of the jeweler supplying the watches was prominently mentioned, these prizes cost nothing.

On the day of the hunt the advertisement stated the location of the buried treasure—a vacant area of about three acres in extent—and added that none of the certificates representing the watches was buried deeper than six inches.

Shortly after the advertisement appeared the lot was covered almost two deep, and the resultant talk told everyone that the Fox production was at the Capitol, which was all Manager Russell needed to get a full week of capacity.

A Bull Fighting Band

William W. Roberts, of Poli's Palace Theatre, Bridgeport, used a boys' band and a bannered trolley to put over "Blood and Sand."

The car was sent over the usual routes and the band was paraded through the business section. There were twenty-two men in the band, and as they were all costumed as toreadors, they attracted no little attention and aided in keeping business to capacity for an entire week.

ADAPTING THE WORLD'S LOBBY SUGGESTION IN ROCK ISLAND

Evert R. Cummings, of the Fort Armstrong, used the canopy idea, but cut it short to let in an even more pretentious lower display with 'dobe buildings, a cavalier and a passionate embrace. It all helped to make "Blood and Sand" a knockout.

Added New Touches to Suggested Lobby

Taking his cue from the lobby suggestion printed in this department, Evert R. Cummings, of the Fort Armstrong Theatre, Rock Island, Ill., used the red and yellow awning effect for his top banner, with bannerettes at the sides lettered with selling talk. This very faintly shows in the photograph because red and yellow are so nearly of the same actinic value.

But once below the headline, Mr. Cummings worked out a more ambitious idea. He blocked in the entrance with compo board painted in imitation of adobe. On one side was a Spanish cavalier leaning against the wall beside a bill in Spanish "Teatro. Esta Noche. Grande Programma." The rest of the announcement was in English. The companion arch was cut away for a window and backed with black velvet. In front of the backing was Valentino and Miss Naldi in a clutch, lighted by hidden lamps.

At night the entire display was flooded with straw spots and with purple lights under the arches. A phonograph with a repeater attachment played "La Paloma" continuously.

Mr. Cummings also sends in his "September" advertisement in the form of a calendar sheet with the titles superimposed. With "Monte Cristo," "Blood and Sand," "Nice People" and "Manslaughter," we'll admit he must have shown them.

Manslaughter Idea Wins the Policemen

Doing well with the drive carefully campaigned for "Manslaughter" in Richmond, Fa., Leslie Whelan, Washington Paramounteer, went down to Norfolk and blew the idea up to double size.

The police and Director of Public Safety were enthusiastic, and the police urged motorists to call at headquarters for windshield stickers with the "It may mean the penalty of 'Manslaughter—'" legend. Every traffic post was provided with a similar sign and the trolley company gave permission to hang an unlimited quantity of placards on the cross wires supporting the trolley wire.

This stunt looks as though it might be developed into something bigger than the Wallace Reid drives, for there is more of a punch to the warning. It's a spouting whale.

Poor Repertoire

For advance work for "Her Gilded Cage," A. B. Morrison had a lot of kewpie dolls in canary cages, and also five parrots. Four of them were by way of being dumb bells, but the fifth could say "Gloria Swanson." Also it could say "Go to hell." Morrison was in doubt, but he took a chance and the parrot rattled off the star's name without telling her where to go, so all was well.

Cards for Nice People

Getting a twenty per cent increase on "Nice People" on a longer than usual run is the feather Ray Beall, of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., is wearing in his cap just now.

The chief factor was three thousand manila cards, six inches square, on which only the title was lettered. These were tacked to posts and trees, thrown on doorsteps and placed in automobiles. They were simply laid on the seats of the cars, but a majority of the drivers put them on their windshields and those who got none came down to the theatre and asked for one.

The lobby suggested a the dansant, with Conrad Nagel and Bebe Daniels standing behind a latticed opening.

Stills and Frames Make An Attractor

Art appeal was the trump card played by the Strand Theatre, Cleveland, to get over "Monte Cristo." This followed the New York lobby idea, for practically every Broadway independent run uses the same appeal with oil paintings. The Strand could not get the paintings, but made up its own, in about one-sheet size, and more than brought the money back.

The lobby is rather narrow and very deep, which makes the best form for this sort of display. The walls were done over in ivory to supply a proper background and seventeen gilt frames were provided. These were set 18 inches apart, and separated by inverted triangles of bunting, as shown in the cut, the colors being the red, white and blue of France. Below the frames were narrower ones, set end to end, each containing five photographic stills with explanatory captions, brief but informative.

Tri-color bunting was suspended from the ceiling, and purple hangings gave color to the box office. Bunting was used over the lamps, which were increased in power to give the same relative illumination.

The underside of the marquise was also draped with bunting, and a cutout of Dantes standing upon the world was used for a cutout.

The net result was a display emphasizing the importance of the production, and good business was the result; a better business than even "Monte Cristo" would have done with a less adequate display, for even the best self-seller requires to be put over.

THE STRAND, CLEVELAND, SELLS "MONTE CRISTO"

Painted frames, separated by festoons of tri-color and with still frames below turn the lobby of the theatre into an art gallery well worthy of a visit. Hundreds came in to see the pictures and remained to witness the feature.

Difficult Lobby Was Inspiration

About the meanest lobby on the Southern Enterprises to decorate is that of the Rex Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C. It is long and generally dark in spite of a generous use of lights. It is very narrow and most displays seem cramped.

But that only makes A. C. Cowles hustle the more, and for "Nice People" he evolved an idea that helped to break all one-day records since the Fourth of July, and did it on a Monday, at that. More than that, it beats all records for the three days except for pictures at an advance.

A Paramount Release

THE REX LOBBY

A succession of arches capitalized the depth, and the light surfaces reflected back the lights, giving plenty of illumination. Potted plants were banked along the walls in the space cut off by the arches, and these made a pleasing contrast with the light colored work on the drops.

The title was illuminated, hat boxes being used for the individual letters.

The awning front suggested in this department by Paramount was used for the front and helped to bring them along. The advertising ran 148 inches, with ten one-sheets, five threes, four sixes and three 24-sheets.

Painted for Signs

Almost as old as patent medicine is the stunt of painting the farmer's barn in return for the advertising privilege. A signboard in Lima, Ohio, needed painting badly. Howard Phillips, of the Sigma Theatre, offered to paint the structure if he could have the use of it for two weeks.

He painted up a sign for "Smilin' Through" and then repainted, getting more than he paid for, and yet the owner was just as well pleased as was Mr. Phillips; which is the ideal exploitation situation.

Gritty Heralds

Eli M. Horowitz, the Philadelphia Paramounteer, got out some novelty heralds on "Blood and Sand" for the Stanley Theatre. The first word was printed in properly red ink and the last was sanded.

Max Rosenfield says the last impression was done with the rollers inked with glue. Max is still Goleming. Don't try the stunt. Get gold size ink and dust the impression lightly with very fine sand, the same as bronze is worked and you'll have it. Try glue and you will have a printer who will never, never go to heaven.

They make showy displays, yet they cost only $7.50 per thousand.

Telling It to Max

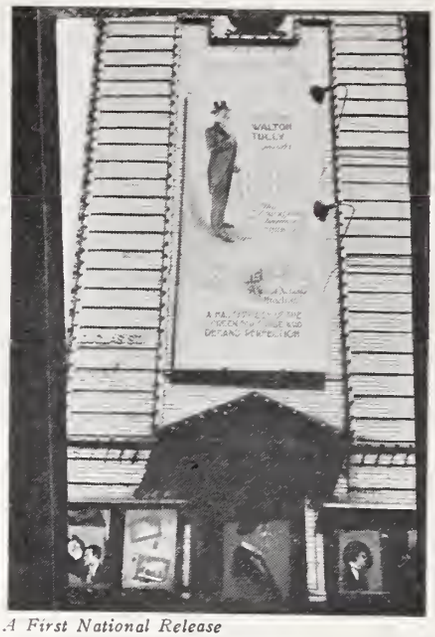
Here's one Max Rosenfield, of Paramount exploitation, has not yet discovered.

The current show at the New York Hippodrome is "Better Times," and the slogan signs on the Forty-third and Forty-fourth street sides of the big structure announce that "Better Times Is Just Around the Corner at the Hippodrome."

That is the slogan that was used all over the West when "Just Around the Corner" was new. Perhaps the exploitation gave the hint to the Dillingham management. Probably Claud Saunders will claim it now that he has found out about it.

A 24-Foot Poster

Owing to the angling of the camera to get as close a view as possible of this giant poster, the apparent size is reduced through foreshortening, but it gives a hint of the flash it made on the front of the Strand Theatre, Omaha.



A First National Release

THE GIANT POSTER

It was painted by J. Gordon Bennett, the house artist, for "The Masquerader," and ran up twenty-four feet, giving emphasis to the theatre's opinion of the offering. The outline of the structure in lights is more popular in the west than in eastern cities. It costs big light bills, but it makes a great attractor. In spite of the multiplicity of the lights, however, two reflectors were used to illuminate the picture at night.

Through the location of the house, this sign could be seen clearly two blocks distant.

Getting about four hundred feet of local people from a resident photographer was Ed Helmt's prologue for "Nice People" at the Des Moines Theatre. The camera was then driven through the streets with a sign reading: "We are taking pictures of Nice People. See yourself at the Des Moines Theatre next week." They could not resist that.

TWO DISPLAYS FROM THE FROLIC THEATRE, SAN FRANCISCO, FOR UNIVERSAL FEATURES

The left hand cut shows the display worked by F. A. Flader, for "Foolish Wives," using one of the "Monte Carlo" miniatures with a roulette wheel which spins and stops automatically, and which held the attention of the Broadway crowds when the picture was first shown at the Central Theatre. The other is a racing car exhibit, with a wax model for "The Married Flapper," in which Marie Prevost is starred. It crowded the lobby, but it brought its own crowds.

TWO OF THE SMASHING CLIVE POSTERS FOR THE INCE PRODUCTION OF "SKIN DEEP"

On the left is shown the one-sheet and the right gives the 24-sheet, both closely linked to the title. The six is a spectacular airplane crash and is less in the style of this artist, but gives a good action cutout for lobby and marquise work. The color values are lost in these reproductions, and the colorings are more than half the attraction of the posters—with no disrespect to the drawings.

Did His Best

Recently we spoke of a creditable special herald gotten out by R. B. Wilby, of Montgomery, Ala., for the eight pictures which constituted his five offerings for September. It was an exceptional publication.

Roy Smart, of the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala., liked the idea, but he could not afford rotograveure. That did not bother him. He did not lie down because he could not do what Wilby did. He framed his stuff with press book cuts, printed on news print, printed the back cover for a self mailer and shot out his twelve pager—and got the same proportionate business.

The inside back page gives a recapitulation of the entire program for the month, with an x designating pictures which would make an especial appeal to the children. That's the real spirit. Do the best you can. Don't do nothing because you cannot do better.

H. E. Farley, of the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, could spend more money, so he used a stiff paper back for his "big eight," and added a calendar blotter with the titles printed in. He used no cuts, but got a very neat effect through merely boxing in the title with one-point rule. It is as neat a job of composition and printing as we have had from the South since May's Print Shop, of Sylacauga, Ga., apparently went out of business.

Lightning Changes Help Oscar White

Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., is making a name for himself as a lobby artist, and he will have O. T. Taylor running for cover pretty soon.

Mr. White's latest is to make practically the same lobby work for three pictures with only minor changes.

He started with a house in the lobby, designated as "The Home of Nice People," then he added some foliage and it became "The Old Nest." After that was played out, it snowed, and next morning they found a trading post to advertise "The Siren Call."

And with each change the interest grew, and Mr. White could have held the house a second week with results beneficial to the box office.

Here's Good Dope on Gilded Cages

Most Southern Enterprises' managers have used a cage for Gloria Swanson cutouts for "Her Gilded Cage," following the general idea, but A. C. Cowles, of the Rex Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., adds the details. He got a very sightly cage at small expense.

HAD CANES HANDY

He had recently played "The Dictator," with a jungle lobby made chiefly from canes, and these were well dried. He obtained a pair of old wagon wheel rims from a carriage shop and obtained a smaller rim about two feet in diameter. The larger rims were drilled with 3/16-inch holes four inches apart, and to these were lashed the lengths of cane by means of picture wire run through the holes. Then the canes were bent over and tied to the smaller rim, to gain a dome effect. Then the entire outfit was gilded.

It cost very little, for the rims were beyond their original use and already on the junk pile, but it just about doubled the usual business with only 31 inches of advertising, six ones, a three, two twenty-fours and fifty window cards.

MAKING ONE LOBBY EFECT WORK FOR THREE DIFFERENT PICTURES RUN IN ONE WEEK

Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., used the top lobby for "Nice People," with a "real" house with real wood and real glass and real door. A few vines and a couple of small trees worked it over to "The Old Nest," after which he pulled away the picket fence, put in some cotton snow and turned the same structure into a trading post for "The Siren Call. We are willing to gamble he could have worked it over for "Her Gilded Cage" had he had that booked.

Monte Cristo Ads Started a Season

Earl S. Nesbitt, who has just started in for the Liberty Theatre, Kansas City, asks for comment on a set of displays he worked out for "Monte Cristo." He writes he wants the truth as he is just starting on the big time and feels that he can get help from comment. Two of them are four columns wide, 65 and 70 lines deep, the top being a generous 65. This top one shows two panels split by a plan book cut. Considering that the main essential in selling this story is to get the title over, almost anything would be good, but to put the display under the microscope we would offer these somewhat

A Fox Release

TWO "MONTE CRISTO" ADS

finical suggestions to the end that succeeding displays may be better planned. In the first place we do not like the small signatures on top of either panel. There is just one thing to be sold in this stunt and that is a play which has made money year after year on the dramatic stage. The title alone will do most of the selling, and to sell to the best advantage the house should be linked to the title as largely and as intimately as possible. The third most important fact is that the usual price scale prevails. Next to that is the bigness of the Fox production to assure the prospect that this is an unusual picture. This was covered by the line "The first of the Fall's Big Pictures," which was stripped on the posted paper and used in every angle of the campaign. With the knowledge that these facts constituted the sale business, we would make a big display of these facts and throw away the rest. To this end we would have used a larger Liberty signature, even having one made if there was no three-column size in stock. Then we would have used a larger "Monte Cristo," so placed that the eye could conveniently drop from the house name to the title. Below this we would give the assurance that there was no advance in prices and across the bottom we would have stripped the "One of the biggest and best of a new big season." Then we would have stuck cuts in where they would not detract from the announcement, using one of the single figures, worked by Mr. Nesbitt as teasers. And all this would have gone into a single section display without any barricades in the shape of border strips. We would have put it all into one large space instead of decreasing the apparent size through paneling. We think that both this and the lower display prove that Mr. Nesbitt is laboring under the delusion that a picture-title is the best. It is not. The best announcement is a nice, fat black letter in type as large as you can put into the space without crowding. Cut titles look pretty, but they don't sell as many tickets. Probably they got full houses on the title in spite of the handicap, but where the title is not self selling, the use of the plainest, most conspicuous type is always to be urged. Heavy paneling should never be used in spaces smaller than half pages, and even there a one-point straight or a hairline parallel rule is better than six-point border. Keep the heavy border over in the margin if you need it to cut off adjoining spaces, but even here a light rule and some white space is better than the blackest border you can buy from the foundry. The second display is better than the first because it gives more the effect of spaciousness and because it does not talk more than is necessary to sell the picture. For teaser work Mr. Nesbitt used three single 55 lines with the famous "One! Two! Three!" These were run one at a time. We think that these three, stretched across the space, with the title eliminated and a big type title below would do more toward making an ideal Sunday layout than any of the other cut or cuts in the Fox press book. People know the story of "Monte Cristo" and these three cuts, and the whiskery Count clinging to the rock with "The World is Mine!" are the real selling ideas for the play. Using the three as teasers the previous week and then combining them for a Sunday splash would have yielded the best results. Mr. Nesbitt has done very well with this campaign, but we take it that he wants to do even better, and these suggestions are offered in that spirit rather than in correction of his present work.

—P. T. A.—

Misplaced Cut Hurts Display

This 145 by three from the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, is a bit amateurish in its cut selection and construction. This plan book cut is useful if properly placed, but here the glance and every line of movement carries the eye away from the announcement. If used at all in a space of this shape, it should be moved over to the left hand margin, where the action will carry the reader over to the right. It is not as good as the average plan book cut, and is about the last we should select for use in any space.

The text is informative, but it lacks the suggestion of something good, though the lines are intelligently written. There is lacking the ring of conviction and the talk sounds as though the copy writer were seeking to sell something in which he did not himself believe. The only thing really to be said in its favor is that it does not crowd the space, but apart from this it is decidedly damp, not to say wet. It is not in any sense inviting, and we do not believe it sold tickets on other than the star name. There is no money pulling force to "A romance based on the belief of a successful Broadway producer that publicity alone will make famous an actress, even without ability to back her up." That is not going to jolt forty cents out of you. It does not even run true to the film, for the story clearly tells that she is a success, at least from a money-making point of view. Better copy would start off: "Come and see how a little seamstress of the Latin Quarter in Paris was turned into a reigning star, almost overnight. They said she was the mistress of a king—which would have been news to the king, had he heard of it. It's a snappy little story of how stars are made and you'll have no difficulty in spotting the original of the story, even though she is called 'Flour d'Amour' instead of Gaby des Lys. A king just looked at her—and her fortune was made, though she hated the deception and it nearly cost her the love of the one man worth while." That might start something.

Trinidad Typos Do Poor Display

J. V. Hirsch, of the Colonial Film Exchange, Port of Spain, Trinidad, sends in a display from one of the Sunday papers to show what they are doing down there. He asks for comment, though he knows that he cannot get results with the local compositors. The display is a drop of eleven inches across five columns, and we think that there is a lot of waste in this large space, due chiefly to a lack of large display faces. Like most small offices, it is probable that there is not a very large supply of any one face. This makes for the use of small faces and a suggestion of smallness and the only thing to be done is to hold everything away from the boldface in the hope that through this device the letters will at least appear to be important. The Empire is a big modern house and is given more than half the display, while the London and Olympic share a crossline for a serial and then get individual panels for the separate attractions. We believe that a smaller space would be more effective. Cutting the space down to the relative size of the display faces will give a more compact and therefore more pretentious display. Those lines for the Empire attractions would look more important if held in a four-column space, and the shorter lines can be extended by spacing between the letters with three-to-em spaces and using a two-em quad between the words. Then the lesser houses could be given two-column panels and the desolation of the bare white spaces would be killed. White space is an excellent thing in a display when used properly, but here it is a dreary waste. We think it would pay to have special signature headings drawn for the Empire in two, three and four-column widths. If this is impractical, it will at least be possible to purchase a font of job type from which the house name can be set in proper size. But the chief lack would seem to be a want of selling talk. No matter what the paper may print as a press notice, the argument should be included in the advertisement. There is much to be said about the sprightly Constance Talmadge comedy, as much for the Norma Talmadge drama and space to match for the Hart production. Adding some talk would help to make the features seem important, and would also give more the suggestion of solidity to the space. One interesting point is selling the chief features of the news reel in detail. Even more might be done along this line. It is difficult, if not impossible, to get good work out of colonial compositors, as a rule. Generally they are the only printers to be had and you can take it or leave, as you please, but it might be possible to get the foreman interested in better displays. Probably his paper cannot afford a better dress of type, but he can at least be coaxed into making more intelligent use of the metal in his cases. This can be done through a judicious combination of passes and persuasion, using the examples shown in this department each week as samples of what can be done. It will take time and effort, but it might be worth while. We used to get some very decent work from China set by coolie compositors, many of whom did not know what they were setting up, but going by the letters on the copy and using what knowledge of display they had acquired from their foreman. Even in Trinidad this should be possible. There is a suggestion to American exhibitors in the Girls' Whistling Contest featured at the London. This seems to be new. Try it out and report.

A TRINIDAD SUNDAY AD

Storm Lettering Is an Earthquake

W. Griffith Mitchell, of the Family and Majestic Theatres, Port Huron, Mich., sends in a half page he used on "The Storm," the text showing that he made an unusual splurge because of the fact that the author is a local man. The lettering for the title suggests the effects of an earthquake rather than a storm, but he is not selling the title so much as he is the author, and his text copy is smashingly good. There is the appeal to local pride through the fact of residence and the more adroit appeal in the reference to the New York hit. Just a New York hit means little these days, but that a Port Huron man was able to jolt us made the fact important. This is capital copy for the purpose for which it is intended and it brought in the business. The cut works in well and sells the action idea strongly. Mr. Mitchell is using new signature cuts. That for the Majestic carries a couple of figures supposed to be a jester and a dancing girl, since the house also uses vaudeville, though for "The Storm" the entire space was taken for the picture.

MR. MITCHELL'S HALF PAGE FOR "THE STORM"

This Art Work Is Very Inexpensive

The art work on this page display from the Colonial and Virginia Theatres, Atlantic City, cost fifty cents. It is a seven-column mat, from the Paramount plan book, adapted to an eight-column newspaper by pulling the top ears off to the sides and adding the house signatures and the top lines. It is a better cut than the houses could have prepared at a much greater cost and gives both the picture and the text. It offers plenty of copy and yet it keeps the space clean and open. Here, again, the value of a good copy writer is apparent, and this is thrown in along with the fifty cent. mat. There was a time when the plan book advertisement was so impractical that they were either irritating or amusing, according to the mood in which you happened to be, but today you cannot only get real help from the plan books, but you can get as good art work for a small house as the largest theatres can afford. This does not always hold true, but the larger companies have worked great reforms in this matter.

A PLAN BOOK FULL PAGE

Too Much Reverse Held Back Effect

George M. Nye, of the Strand Theatre, Lynn, Mass., sends in one of his spaces compared with that for another house. His is 115 lines double and the other 125 lines across five. He adds that his attraction played to packed houses for three days. That seems to be the answer, but the point Mr. Nye takes is that he held his own with 230 lines against 625 used by the other house and he is taking his point on the display value. The display value of the larger space is better because it gains a lot of white space which makes the reverse ribbon and a silhouette cut appear more prominent. The relative display value of the larger space is better because of this white space. Mr. Nye could have done better by keeping down some of his ink and trusting more to white space, but Mr. Nye is the house artist and probably feels that the more he does, the better the display. He is not one of those who insist upon lettering in the entire display. He has the good sense to know that type is better for type work, but he puts too much ornamentation into his work to gain the best results. He does some fine displays, and he holds his own notably well, but he has not got the other fellow licked as much as he thinks he has.

American Releasing

BELLE OF ALASKA. Good Northwest picture. Pretty scenery. Advertising: four ones, set 11x14s. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. Chas. F. Johnson, Plaza Theatre, Punta Gorda, Florida.

MY OLD KENTUCKY HOME. One of the kind that pleases the public. Brings in those who seldom come. It does its own advertising after the first day. Satisfies 99 per cent plus. C. M. Gott, Skydome, Warrensburg, Missouri.

SISTERS and MY OLD KENTUCKY HOME. Very good. Hero in "My Old Kentucky Home" not suitable for part; he nearly spoiled picture. G. W. Bays, Crane Theatre, Carthage, Missouri.

F. B. O.

BEYOND THE RAINBOW. A really fine production, splendid cast; one that should please all classes. Drew well. .William Noble, New Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

ONE MAN IN A MILLION. A good picture, only too long. Everyone pleased and it didn't cost me the house to get it. Advertising: usual. Patronage: country town. Attendance: good. H. V. Harvey, Palace Theatre, Dixon, California.

SHEIK OF ARABY. A very good picture which drew on account of title. Advertising: newspaper, handbills and posters. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. W. H. Hufford, Lincoln Theatre, Petersburg, Indiana.

TWO KINDS OF WOMEN. Just enough Society stuff in this to take the curse off of Frederick trying to act in a Western. Patronage: small town. Attendance. good. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

First National

CUP OF LIFE. Never ran a poor Thomas Ince production yet. Settings splendid. Picture pleased majority. Advertiisng: newspaper, photos, slide, posters. Patronage: highest class. Attendance: fair. J. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

GAS, OIL AND WATER. Another one of those Ray pictures directed by himself. When will the actors leave the direction to directors who can direct? Last three Ray pictures, for us, rotten. Advertising: ones, threes, sixes, slide. Attendance: very poor. Liberty Theatre Company, Silver City, New Mexico.

LYING LIPS. A very good picture. Plenty of comment; my patrons liked it. Advertising: three ones, three, six, photos, window cards. Patronage: family. Attendance. fair. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

MASTER MIND. A wonderful production, one that you can go out and boost as a special. Barrymore is great in this one. Advertising: regular. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: drew fair first night and big second night. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

MOLLY O'. I didn't see this but heard a great deal of favorable comment. According to my patrons, it had everything. Pleased practically all of them. Advertising: regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. A. La Valla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

NOT GUILTY. Good acting, beautiful photography; goes well with the best audiences. Advertising: regular. Attendance: fair. J. A. Flournoy, Criterion Theatre, Macon, Georgia.

PENROD. The best and funniest comedy feature we have had; we advertised it as a "humdinger" and humdinger it is. We woke the old town up with it. Print excellent. Price satisfactory. Neilan came across splendidly; so did Barry and the support. Advertising: usual. Patronage: small town. Attendance: light. H. S. Mitchell, Opera House, Windsor, Nova Scotia, Canada.

PENROD. It's a bear, both for business and as a show. In conjunction with "Leather Pushers" it made a hit. Advertising: heavy lobby, papers, freckle contest. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Thetare, Charlotte, Michigan.

POLLY OF THE FOLLIES. Splendid. Good business as usual on Miss Talmadge's productions. She always draws. Advertising: ones, threes, sixes, photos, slide. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: good. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

SERENADE. Good, snappy show. Went over fine with my patrons. Would like to get more on the same style. Advertising: newspaper, posters. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: very good. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

SILENT CALL. A wonderful picture with fine scenery, and the acting of the dog is remarkable. Many said it was the finest picture they ever saw. No chance of disappointing anyone on this. Advertising: extra in every way. Patronage: rural. Attendance: extra good. L. P. Frisbee, Community Theatre, Meredith, New York.

YELLOW TYPHOON. Drew a good attendance and pleased the majority. Advertising: posters and press. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

Fox

CONNECTICUT YANKEE. Very good attraction. Well liked by those who saw it, but did not get the people in. Advertising: extensive. Patronage. mixed. Attendance: poor. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

FOOTFALLS. Simply too poor for expression. They have the nerve to call it a "special." Motto: look before buying. Advertising: window cards, newspapers, photos, six sheets, etc. Patronage: country town. Attendance: very poor. H. V. Harvey, Palace Theatre, Dixon, California.

LITTLE MISS SMILES. This picture pleased our patrons very much. Shirley Mason as the star is very good. Advertising: posters, handbills. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. W. H. Hufford, Lincoln Theatre, Petersburg, Indiana.

ROUGH DIAMOND. An out of the ordinary Mix picture and a good one. Ten misframes my only kick. Advertising: ones and threes. Patronage. small town. Attendance: fair. C. C. Johnson, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SELF-MADE MAN. Fair program picture. Will not stand up for a run. Consider it about the poorest thing that Russell has ever done, and some of his pictures, for me, have been pretty poor. Advertising: regular. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

SHAME. A good program picture, that's all. Do not advance your admissions as it will not stand up. Few liked it; others didn't. Advertising: sixes, slide, photos. Attendance: fair. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

SKY HIGH. A good Mix picture. No better and no worse than the others. Some unusually fine scenic shots of Grand Canyon, also some fine airplane stuff. Advertising: usual. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fine. Marsden and Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

THUNDERCLAP. Best Fox picture ve ever played. People pleased. Paid too much for it to make any money. Advertising: ones, photos, newspaper, window cards. Patronage: country town. Attendance: fair. H. V. Harvey, Palace Theatre, Dixon, California.

Goldwyn

ALWAYS THE WOMAN. Miss Compson is very popular here. Where such is the case this is a good story, will stand boosting. Advertising: heavy newspaper. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

DUST FLOWER. Good picture. Everybody satisfied. Drew a good house. Helen Chadwick is a good star, fit to show in any theatre, and will please them all. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

EARTHBOUND. A good picture but with not much drawing power. Those who saw it were pleasced. Advertising: lobby, slides, newspaper, window display, billboards. Patronage: high class. Attendance. poor. C. R. McCown, Strand Theatre, Nashville, Tennessee.

GLORIOUS FOOL. A delightfully human dramatic comedy. Almost perfect in technique, and sure to please. Advertising: usual. Patronage: high class. Attendance: fair. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

GUILE OF WOMEN. High class program picture. Will Rogers' acting, together with many interesting scenes of vessels, wharves, docks and the high seas, makes the picture distinctly different. Advertising: slide, one sheet, newspaper. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

GRAND LARCENY. Very good triangle picture without objectionable feature. Advertising; posters and newspapers. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. A. B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, N. J.

HIS BACK AGAINST THE WALL. This is a Western with a wonderful bit of character work by Raymond Hatton in the lead, it was satisfactory for about ninety per-cent of our audience, personally considered it a mighty good production. Arthur Hancock, Columbia City Theatre, Columbia, Indiana.

HIS OWN LAW. This picture could have been ranked real high if the supporting cast were only good. Bosworth really good, but the rest of the cast was not. However, picture pleased 100 per cent. Advertising: threes, ones, slide. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

MADE IN HEAVEN. Very good comedy drama with Tom Moore at his best, and the sub-titles are very pleasing. The film, though, was in such poor shape that it lost interest. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

REMEMBRANCE. A great picture, and by many thought to be the equal of "The Old Nest," "Over the Hill" and "Humoresque." William Noble, Orpheum Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

WALLFLOWER. A good little comedy. Our patrons like Colleen Moore very much. Advertising: photos, slide, three sheets. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. D. D. Purcell, Muse-U Theatre, Cortez, Colorado.

WATCH YOUR STEP. A cracker-jack comedy-drama, that reveals the fact that Julian Josephson's stories had a great deal to do with Charles Ray's rise to fame. It's a Ray type of story with Cullen Landis in the Ray part. He does good work and the picture pleased our patrons thoroughly. Advertising; usual. Patronage; high class. Attendance; above average. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

YELLOW MEN AND GOLD. This, "Old Nest" and "Dangerous Curve Ahead" have been the only pictures from Goldwyn this year that we consider worth the price we paid. This is a real picture for all classes. It will satisfy. Arthur Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

Hodkinson

FREE AIR. We liked this story and the acting was good but the photography was so dark it was hard to tell what was going on in places. Our comedy was bright and clear, so we know it was the print we got. E. T. Dunlap, Dunlap Theatre, Hawarden, Iowa.

FRENCH HEELS. Very pleasing picture. No kicks from any patron. Advertising regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. Leslie Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, California.

Between Ourselves

A Get-Together Place Where We Can Talk Things Over

Straight From the Shoulder is just a year old. Pretty young! Yes, but you've made it talk straight and stand on its own feet. That's a lot for a one-year-old.

Every one of you who has helped deserves a place on an honor roll; but you'll probably be better satisfied to see the space filled up with live tips, so please take this as appreciation of the real good you have done and the fraternal spirit you have built up among the members of a great crowd—the exhibitors who count.

That "Dear Van: keep up the good work" scribbled on the corner of a report, stands for confidence and good will. These will never be abused here. Thank you all. VAN.

MARIONETTES. Picture very poor, no acting at all. Plot good but ruined because of the acting. Advertising; one sheets, photos, newspapers, etc. Patronage; country town. Attendance; poor. H. V. Harvey, Palace Theatre, Dixon, California.

JACK O' LANTERN. Very good, but will pass only as program picture. Would be a dandy for Hallowe'en Night. Advertising: regular. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: fair. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

JANE EYRE. The kind of picture any exhibitor can be proud to show. Directed by a man who caught the inspiration of its brilliant author. Brought in many new faces: everybody seemed pleased. Don't be afraid of "period" stuff. The people know and love this play. Just advertise it honestly. Advertising: newspaper, extra space, lithos, lobby, telephone, mailing list. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: very satisfactory. J. J. Wood, Redding Theatre, Redding, California.

OTHER WOMEN'S CLOTHES. I cannot give this more than just plain ordinary program picture. Outside of two or three scenes it fell flat (weather threatening). Advertising; big. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; poor. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Ark.

Metro

CAMILLE. A high class feature of rare beauty and splendid acting. To those who can swallow the unhappy ending it is a rare treat. Advertising; extra campaign. Patronage; high class. Attendance; good. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

FACE BETWEEN. My patrons considered this picture Bert Lytell's best. Do not be afraid to advertise it. Will not stand raise in admission prices though. Advertising; ones and threes, 11x14, newspaper. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Chas. F. Johnson, Plaza Theatre, Punta Gorda, Florida.

FASCINATION. Mae Murray at her best. A favorite with our audiences. She more than pleased in this picture. Excellent cast. Good story, fine direction. Advertising; regular. Attendance; very good. Thos. K. Lancaster, Apollo Theatre, Gloucester, New Jersey.

FIGHTING MAD. A good western with considerable humor, but where do they get that "special" stuff? Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. A. LaValla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

HOLE IN THE WALL. A very good mystery play well done and pleasing. Above average program stuff. Advertising; usual. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. E. W. Collins, Liberty Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

PEACOCK ALLEY. A beautiful picture that should please everyone, especially the women. Mae Murray was perfection in her acting. The Prizma effects added greatly to the beauty of the film. Advertising; double the ordinary amount. Patronage, small town. Attendance; good. A La Valla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

PEACOCK ALLEY. The first Metro picture we ever ran that did not lose us money. Advertising; window cards, billboards, photos, liberal newspaper space, heralds and slides. Attendance; good. Patronage; mixed. Big Ben Theatre, Ilion, New York.

RIGHT THAT FAILED. Lytell is a finished actor and most everything we have played with him in has been satisfactory; this one is a clever picture. Nothing big, but mighty satisfying to run. Attendance; fair, Arthur Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

SEEING'S BELIEVING. Good, Delightfully entertaining and well presented. Patronage; general. William Noble, New Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

TURN TO THE RIGHT. This picture went over big. Will please any audience, but the print I got was very dark and I wish this mist photography had never been discovered. I don't like it. Advertising; two newspapers, sixes and threes, ones and photos, slide, heralds. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. E. T. Dunlap, Dunlap Theatre, Hawarden, Iowa.

Paramount

DON'T TELL EVERYTHING. Ordinary; stars pull it through. Advertising; billboards. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. L. A. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

EXPERIENCE. My first Paramount picture in my house and did a good business with a reasonable rental price. Everybody had a good word for this picture. You cannot go wrong when you book it. Advertising; ones, threes, photos, and lobby frames. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; good. G. K. Nenes, Liberty Theatre, Miami, Arizona.

FOOL'S PARADISE. Splendid picture. Pleased all. Advertising; newspaper and poster. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. W. T. Edom, Dixie Theatre. Rosboro, Arkansas.

FORBIDDEN FRUIT. A good picture, never heard a kick. Advertising; slide, photo, three sheet. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. D. D. Purcell. Muse-U Theatre, Cortez, Colorado.

GREEN TEMPTATION. Was liked here. Advertising; usual. Patronage; health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

HER FIRST LOVE. A fine little program picture. While I hate to give them credit, but you have to give the devil his dues.

Can't make any money with Paramount; well, all you boys know the trouble. We are all in the same boat. Advertising, regular. Patronage, neighborhood. Attendance, fair. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

HER HUSBAND'S TRADEMARK. A good picture, well acted and if bought right you can get by. This town is in an "attendance slump" and I lost money on the show. But through no fault of the picture. Advertising, usual. Patronage, health seekers and tourists. Attendance, poor. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

HER OWN MONEY. Good family picture that pleased. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre, Jerome, Idaho.

HER WINNING WAY. The M. P. W. did not give a favorable write-up on this, but they are away off; if your patrons like Minter, book it. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall Theatre, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

IS MATRIMONY A FAILURE. Good comedy drama, but attendance very slim. Cast an all-star one. A good one-day program picture. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Chicago, Illinois.

A KISS IN TIME. A very clever Hawley picture. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. Trags Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

L'APACHE. Poor. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair. G. H. Jenkinson, Victor Theatre, Minocqua, Wisconsin.

LAST PAYMENT. Failed to satisfy the patrons. Very weak; although the picture did not cost much, it was not worth much. Advertising, usual. Patronage, better class. Attendance, poor. K. H. Sink, Wayne The atre, Greenville, Ohio.

LOVE'S BOOMERANG. Good feature A nice, sweet, little story. Advertising, regular. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, fair. F. S. Widenor, Opera House Theatre, Belvidere, New Jersey.

MAN FROM HOME. Picture seemed to please. Fair business on account of hot weather. Advertising, newspapers. Patronage, general. Attendance, fair. Stanley Chambers, Miller Theatre, Wichita, Kansas.

MAN FROM HOME. We call this one of the season's best. Will go big when high class pictures are appreciated. Attendance: big. Strand Theatre, Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

MAN UNCONQUERABLE. Very good program picture. Advertising, newspapers, photos, one sheets. Patronage, first class. Attendance, fair. J. Kenrick, Strand Theatre, Ithaca, New York.

MISTRESS OF THE WORLD. The more they come, the worse they get. The last two are worse than the first. Very poor. Advertising, posters, newspaper, programs. Patronage, mixed. Attendance, poor. Daniel Buss, Star Theatre, Tonawanda, New York.

Oklahoma's Opinion

William Noble reports for many Oklahoma City houses and has been good enough to shoot in a tip on what the Oklahoma Theatre Owners and Managers Association thought of these pictures, which were shown to them at a private screening:

REMEMBRANCE (Goldwyn). At private screening this picture was pronounced "excellent."

GRANDMA'S BOY (Assoc. Exhib.). This was also a private screening and was pronounced excellent by all who saw it.

ONE GLORIOUS DAY. This one went over very good. Quite different from the usual run. Rogers good as usual. Advertising; usual. Patronage; neighborhood and transient. Attendance; fair. J. A. Emory, Star Theatre, Bar Harbor, Maine.

ORDEAL. Proved an excellent picture for me; the star does some mighty fine emotional acting which ranks favorably with anything I have yet seen. Advertising; newspapers, lobby, billboards, V. Ps. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; hurt by heavy rains. W. C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

SATURDAY NIGHT. DeMille a good drawing card, but think feature is below his average. Matinee hurt night attendance. Advanced admission. Advertising; twice usual amount. Patronage; small towns. Attendance fair to poor. C. L. Smith, Victoria Theatre, Winnfield, Louisiana.

THE SHEIK. A splendid picture that will be remembered for some time. We raised our price on this one, but I believe we did wrong. They just haven't got it. It kept many away who wanted to see it. Advertising; ones and sixes, heralds, slide. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. J. F. Schlez, Columbia Theatre, Columbia, North Carolina.

THREE WORD BRAND. A good picture. Well liked, as Hart is a good drawing card for my house, but it is not as good as his other pictures. Advertising; sixes, twos, ones, slide, photos. Patronage; average. Attendance; good. R. L. Harding, Plaza Theatre, Little Rock, Arkansas.

THREE WORD BRAND. One of Hart's best and will please all of Hart's admirers. You cannot go wrong on it. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

Pathé

ISLE OF ZORDA. A good imported picture, very similar to "Monte Cristo" in plot. Not a special. Advertising: posters. Patronage: rural. Attendance: poor. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

LURE OF EGYPT. Good entertainment: superior performance by all in the cast. Excellent choice of sets. Attendance: fair. Harold F. Wendt, Rivoli Theatre, Defiance, Ohio.

NANOOK OF THE NORTH. Did not see this myself but received a few adverse criticisms. I advertised it only as an educational and novelty, and played it for usual admission. Business fair, but patrons not well pleased as a rule. I find Pathe splendid; they are at least good people to do business with, and prices fair. Advertising. lobby, newspapers, slide, window cards. Patronage: college town. C. W. Camp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

Selznick

MAN OF STONE. A dandy picture ruined by the coarse taste of the person responsible for that subtitle containing the word "ass." Advertising, regular. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Arkansas.

RECKLESS YOUTH. Just when they are cleaning up the screen, here comes a questionable picture. Not fit to be shown in any house. Advertising; photos, posters, slides, newspapers. Attendance; fair. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

REPORTING MISSING. A fast moving, clever show that delighted 90 per cent. of our patrons. Some few disregarded our advertisements and took it too seriously, therefore they did not like it, but it is a mighty good picture. In advertising it, we cautioned our patrons not to treat it seriously, that it was a farce done in a big way and for amusement only. Certainly it is one of the best we have played this year. Advertising; two column ten-inch, two newspapers, throwaways and regular lobby. Attendance; good. Arthur Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

REPORTED MISSING. Greatly surprised after all we had heard to have this one fall down completely. Sunday matinee the best in weeks, but evening worst business for Sunday in months. Booked two days, but took it off after first day. Very few liked it, except youngsters, and many criticised it. Advertising: extra newspaper, lithos, novelties, lobby, slides, etc. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: very bad. J. J. Wood, Redding Theatre, Redding, California.

United Artists

RULING PASSION. George Arliss and perfect cast make great entertainment. While entirely different from "Disraeli" patrons enjoyed it immensely. Advertising; usual. Patronage; health seekers and tourists. Attendance; good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

TAILOR MADE MAN. The first public showing in the East. An almost perfect production. Charles Ray never was better. Advertising; so new that outside advertising was inadequate. Gave extra newspaper publicity. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; good. A. Davidson, Strand Theatre, Brockton, Massachusetts.

THRU THE BACK DOOR. A sure pleasing subject for exhibitor and patron. One of Mary's good ones. Advertising; good. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. E. J. Breggar, Gem Theatre, Crystal Falls, Michigan.

Vitagraph

DIVORCE COUPONS. An excellent picture with Corinne Griffith at her best. Advertising: newspapers, handbills, posters. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: poor. W. H. Hufford, Lincoln Theatre, Petersburg, Indiana.

RECEIVED PAYMENT. Good story, well acted by popular star. Pleased over 90 per cent. Rental too high though. Came out in the hole. Advertising: threes, ones, screen ads. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. C. C. Johnson, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Comedies

APRIL FOOL (Mermaid-Educational). One of the best comedies we have had in some time: in fact, all Educationals have seemed to be good comedies. L. P. Frisbee, Community Theatre, Meredith, New York.

BLOWING BUBBLES (Federated). Hank Mann. This is a peach of a comedy. If you haven't run it, better get it. Wm. Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas

Serials

CAPTAIN KIDD (Star Serial). Notwithstanding I started this on one of the hottest days of the year, I had to hang out the old S. R. O. sign. If you want to get away to a good start this fall, be sure to book this fast moving serial. Thomas James, Comet Theatre, St. Louis, Missouri.

Short Subjects

SELZNICK NEWS. The best ever had thus far. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Ohio.

SCHOOL DAYS (Warner). Ran this with "Pay Day" just before school opened. Both of them took fine and "School Days" was acclaimed by all who saw it to be far above the average. Advertising: tied up with book store and stationery dealers and used double newspaper space. Patronage: small town. Attendance: extra fine. A. La Valla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

TWO RICHARD TALMADGES (Goldstone). "Taking Chances" and "Watch Him Step." Patrons liked both pictures. Richard Talmadge is going to be a winner. Book his pictures and clean up. Advertising: four ones, one three, six, set 11x14s. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. Chas. F. Johnson, Plaza Theatre, Punta Gorda, Florida.

Consensus of Published Reviews

Burning Sands

(Featured Cast—Paramount—6,909 feet)

M. P. W.—"Burning Sands" is hot stuff. It is a fast moving melodrama staged with a lavish hand.

E. H.—"Burning Sands" is an exceptionally well produced melodrama of the desert, colorful, swiftmoving and impressive.

N.—The story is too obvious, too sugar-coated with sentiment and virtue to quicken the pulse and stir the imagination.

T. R.—There is nothing that is especially novel about the plot but the handling is first rate.

F. D.—The familiar love theme running through and the conflict of the desert tribes.

Fools of Fortune

(Featured Cast—American Releasing Corp. —5,609 feet)

M. P. W.—If some of the over-drawn comedy scenes were eliminated, which would speed the story up considerably, "Fools of Fortune" would serve as a light summer attraction where audiences like comedy of the broadest sort.

F. D.—May do it if it isn't difficult to make them laugh.

N.—It strikes us that the director of this picture did not take advantage of the comedy angles of W. C. Tuttle's story, erstwhile known as "Assisting Ananias."

T. R.—It is altogether too slight and inconsequential when stretched out to feature length.

T. R.—There is some good comedy back of it all but the production is slow and draggy, being padded with material that only indirectly concerns the plot.

How Women Love

(Betty Blythe—Whitman Bennet—5 reels)

M. P. W.—For, after all, it's Betty Blythe first, last and all the time. Everything else seems to have been a secondary consideration.

E. H.—This should prove a fairly good offering on its merits alone, and may be put over strong by exploitation of the star.

T. R.—A colorful picture, a good picture, one that will stand on its own feet and please the clientele of any house.

N.—An all-around good picture.

F. D.—Should prove a money maker, especially if exploited.

The Married Flapper

(Universal—Five Reels)

N.—The offering being well titled and acted up to the handle will interest most every spectator.

T. R.—Besides making out a case for the flapper the picture affords a thoroughly satisfactory hour of entertainment.

E. H.—A lively little flapper tale that wins your attention at the start and holds it right through to the thrilling finish.

F. D.—Fits in admirably for your hot weather program. . . . The sort of material that is particularly well liked by the younger element—the "flapper" crowd.

Remembrance

(Featured Cast—Goldwyn—5,650 feet)

M. P. W.—Will probably be a sure-fire hit with the public in general.

N.—Will undoubtedly be one of the most talked of pictures of the new season. Here is a feature so far above the usual run of filmplays that it sets a new standard.

T. R.—This is a "poor old father" story which was bound to follow the "poor old mother" series of last season.

F. D.—A deft combination of humor and pathos.

E. H.—This bears all the earmarks of a sure fire box office hit.

Timothy's Quest

(Featured Cast—American Releasing—6,377 feet.)

M. P. W.—So rich in human appeal that it will reach any class of patrons.

T. R.—The story is delightful.

E. H.—Katherine Stuart adapted this "story of the heart," and, we fear, stuck too closely to her text.

F. D.—A mighty fine picture.

N.—A simple, homespun story filled with a great heart tug.

The Wildness of Youth

(Virginia Pearson—Ivan Abramson—7,000 feet)

M. P. W.—A powerful, dramatic story.

T. R.—The subject will rank with the best of the recently screened State rights subjects.

N.—Those who follow melodramatic subjects and enjoy rapid happenings, pathos uninterrupted by comedy incidents and happy endings, will likely look with favor on "The Wildness of Youth."

F. D.—Likely to be a good box office number for many exhibitors; has good audience appeal but is not a high class entertainment.

E. H.—Here is a well directed, well cast and cleverly told picture story which should prove a good offering in the state right market.

"The Old Homestead"

James Cruze's Version of the Denman Thompson Play, Released by Famous Players, a Combination Triumph

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

James Cruze, through his production of the screen version of "The Old Homestead" has lifted himself close to the pinnacle of his profession. He has made an even greater personal triumph in this production than has the star; not that Theodore Roberts has failed to exhibit his usual artistry, but because Roberts is always good and few productions bring such laurels to their designer.

But all the credit does not go to the director. The scenarists, Perley Poore Sheehan and Frank E. Woods, are entitled to full share for taking a familiar, loved, but none too exciting rural drama and, without changing its structure or altering the theme making it over into a gripping, appealing drama.

To the lay mind, the paying patron, these points of technical excellence will not be appreciated. The man who puts his money on the box office ledge will know only that he is witnessing an unusually fine play. He will not see the carefully concealed mechanism of production, but here is a play which through intelligent effort has been lifted almost to an achievement. The heart appeal which has always been the chief strength of the stage version is built up with the same species of material. It has not been torn apart and made anew to reveal the superiority of the continuity writer to his source. The play has not been changed. The loved story is materially the same, but it has been developed to a much higher point of appeal through tactful additions made possible through the wider range of camera scenes as contrasted with stage settings. It is "The Old Homestead," but the old play plus.

Photographically the work is excellent, both as to straight exposure, composition and finish, but the nature of the play holds it chiefly to the rural settings of New Hampshire, and the beauty of the scenes is pastoral rather than awe inspiring. But when the storm hits Ganzey the effects are unusually convincing. It looks more the work of the elements than the achievement of the photographer with mechanical aides. Nothing better has yet been offered in this line, and the effect has been so cunningly worked into the story that it seems to belong.

The comedy relief has been handled as well as the main thread of plot and one humorous touch near the close contributes importantly to holding up the action to the climax.

The highest praise that can be given Mr. Roberts is that he does not dominate the cast save through the importance of his role. He is so thoroughly Uncle Josh that he becomes that character and ceases to be the star performer. Physically he is the reverse of the Denman Thompson type, but his farmer is no less real, and his work is so fluently done that you do not remember that it is acting.

George Fawcett does capitally as the hard-bitted, money-lending storekeeper, and Fritz Ridgway, as Ann, makes a personal appeal to sympathy through her acting quite as much as through the situations in which she finds herself. T. Roy Barnes gets well away from the stage tramp and the others are of a uniform excellence. They gain no especial distinction because they are all held to their characters.

"The Old Homestead" is one of the outstanding features of a season already rich in notable productions.

The Cast

Uncle Joshua.....Theodore Roberts
Eph Holbrook.....George Fawcett
Happy Jack.....T. Roy Barnes
Ann.....Fritzi Ridgway
Reuben.....Harrison Ford
Lem.....James Mason
Rose.....Kathleen O'Connor
Aunt Matilda.....Ethel Wales
Ike Goodsell.....Edwin J. Brady
Si Prime.....Frank Hayes
Seth Perkins.....Z. Wall Covington
Gabe Waters.....Charles Williams

Story adapted from Denman Thompson's play.
Scenario by Perley Poore Sheehan and Frank Woods.
Director James Cruze.

The Story

Reuben Whitcombe, who clerks in Holbrook's store, is accused of the theft; the money really being stolen by Holbrook's son, for the purpose of getting out of town Rose Blaine, who he has wronged.

Reuben is arrested and put into the town lockup with Happy Jack, a tramp. In the night the tramp makes his escape, taking Reuben with him. Uncle John Whitcomb, Reuben's father, gives Holbrook a mortgage on the farm for the missing money on condition that Reuben be not prosecuted. Ann, Josh's ward, is desolute at the report that Reuben has left town with the Blaine girl.

Desperate at his financial straits, Josh comes to town to plead with an old schoolmate for the money with which to meet Holbrook's demands, but is rebuffed. He encounters Happy Jack, who tells him that Reuben has gone to China. Josh returns home and the tramp ships for China in the hope of finding the boy. In this he is successful.

Back in Ganzey Josh has come to the end of his rope, and is forced to sell his belongings to meet the last payment on the mortgage. A terriffic storm blows up and Lem Holbrook, awed by the conflict, confesses his theft as Reuben arrives, bringing with him the Blaine girl, whom he has met in New York. This verifies Ann's worst fears, and there is a race between her and Reuben to the local Lover's Leap, where he arrives just in time to save her from self destruction.

Exploitation Angles: Hook to the stage success and arouse curious comparison between the work of Roberts and the original. Use plenty of paper and circus your town. Paper will work better than newspaper advertisement.

"A Woman's Woman"

United Artists' Release With Mary Alden is Amazing in Its Naturalness and Appeal

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Once in a while a picture comes along that tempts one to write a superfluous editorial on the superiority of the screen to all other means of expression. A picture such as "A Woman's Woman" makes one realize the scope of the cinema.

As a production, it achieves something that baffles criticism. It is the type of attraction that because of its fineness and high mental quality, is more like literature than a "movie." Yet it is understandable to all. It has a message that any woman of any age or class will appreciate.

It has been called a mother-love picture, but it is something more than that. Contrasted with ultra sentimental treatments of this subject, "A Woman's Woman" has a new and vital appeal. It is a tribute not so much to the sacrificing mother, resigned to her lot, to the woman who finding that she is no longer of service to her family, except as a domestic drudge, looks outside the home for a means of expression.

The manner in which Densie Plummer, played by that actress who is real every moment, Mary Alden—finds herself, is one of the most quietly thrilling accomplishments ever produced on the screen. Mary Alden does not play for sympathy, obviously; but she gets it beyond all doubt, and she wins intense admiration as an actress.

Little short of marvellous is Charles Giblyn's directing. A hundred touches in the handling of small incidents and a swift, positive way of managing the big moments is his art. The husband fumbling at the job of cooking his first meal; the daughter discovering her father with another woman in the cafe; the mother's unwelcome visit to her daughter's apartment in Greenwich Village. These are only a small representation of a skill that gets unfailingly natural results.

The trend of the story is serious throughout. Its appeal to the sympathies is a certainty and the pathos is the more affecting because it is not on the surface. When the picture was first shown in a New York theatre, it demonstrated that its emotional power was felt by men and women alike.

In commenting on the excellent work of the supporting cast, it seems that impartial praise is the only fair method. In view of the difficulties of his role, however, Holmes E. Herbert is worthy of great appreciation for a characterization that is amazingly accurate.

The Cast

Densie Plummer.....Mary Alden
Harriet Plummer.....Louise Lee
Sally Plummer.....Dorothy MacKail
John Plummer.....Holmes E. Herbert
Kenneth Plummer.....Albert Hackett
Dean Laddbarry.....Rod La Roque
Sam Hippler.....Horace James
Iris Starr.....Cleo Madison
Rex Humberstone.....Donald Hall
Senator James Gleason.....J. Barney Sherry

Adapted from Mrs. Nalbro Bartley's Story of the Same Title.
Scenario by Raymond S. Schrock.
Direction by Charles Giblyn.
Length, 7,900 feet.

The Story

Densie Plummer after twenty years of the most faithful service to her husband and family, realizes that she is so busy in supplying their daily wants that she has fallen way behind the times, and her family is proud only for her cooking. Her son, Kenneth, loves her and is devoted to her. John, her husband, is trying to get in with a younger set, and unknown to her is spending much of his time with another woman. Densie interests herself in other things and presently becomes the foremost clubwoman in town. From then on, the estrangement grows, a crisis comes in the love affair of her daughter and the realization of her husband's folly comes to her. How tragedy finally brings about a saner condition for all, is the rest of the story.

Exploitation Angles: .Work the mother angle on this to the limit, for the story will back you up. Get after the women's clubs and church societies and give a free matinee to the flappers, if the newspaper will take the matter up for you. You have something real to work with. Go to it strong.

"Trifling Women"

Rex Ingram's Newest Production for Metro is Powerful and Impressive, But Has Tragic Theme

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In "Trifling Women," his newest production for Metro, Rex Ingram has employed the device of a story within a story, the purpose being to prove to a flirtatious girl, by example rather than precept, the error of her ways. Mr. Ingram is not only responsible for the direction, but wrote the story as well, and as it is the purpose to point a moral it is natural that the inner story should go to extremes to show what may ensue when a woman trifles with the affections of men.

This picture will be judged largely by the inner story and the reaction it produces on the spectator for it occupies all of the nine reels with the exception of a few hundred feet at the beginning and end. Two of the principals portray the characters in both stories. The inner story is melodramatic and extremely tragic, but the effect of the composite stories is more pleasant, as the very tragedy of one story brings about a happy ending by causing the girl to whom it is being told to accept her devoted admirer.

To point the desired moral Mr. Ingram has selected a Parisian enchantress, a kind of modern Circe, who toys with men's hearts. In the unfolding of her career he has produced a story which has many dramatic moments and a terrific though horrible climax where the woman, a vamp, if there ever was one, is thrown into a dungeon with her dead lover. Her outraged husband then locks the door and falls dead as the result of a wound previously inflicted by the woman's lover.

Mr. Ingram's direction of this production is superb and practically faultless. The story moves along at a deliberate tempo which allows the full force of every scene and act to be impressed on the spectator, and the picture holds your undivided attention throughout. It is from every standpoint an impressive production, handsomely mounted, pictorially striking, with many weird and even grewsome effects, as for instance, where the young lover's father dies from drinking poison he intended for another, and the scene closes with the old roue still seated at the banquet table with a chimpanzee drinking a toast to him. Artistically the production is an achievement.

To heighten the effect, Mr. Ingram has set the action in weird and bizarre surroundings with the climax beginning on a duelling field, thence shifting to a tomb and ending in a gruesome cobwebby place with medieval atmosphere known as the sorcerers' tower. In fact, once having decided on the type of story, he appears to have given free reign to his imagination and ideas and done everything to accentuate the artistic, pictorial and dramatic values of the tragic story.

It would be difficult to imagine any woman being unable to appreciate the situation which Mary Alden so beautifully sets forth in "A Woman's Woman." It is superbly natural and real.

In the class of mother pictures it is distinctive because it follows a new angle. United Artists has in this, a production that has already proved its emotional appeal both to men and women.—M. K.

In vitalizing the characters of this unusual picture, Mr. Ingram has the assistance of an exceptionally well selected cast composed almost entirely of players who were in his "Prisoner of Zenda," and all give brilliant performances. Naturally, the foremost role is the enchantress, which is portrayed by Barbara LaMarr. A beautiful woman, she is excellent in the role and a wonderful selection for type. Edward Connelly is fine as the old roue who is the rival of his own son for the hand of the enchantress, and Lewis Stone, as her husband, who wreaks such an awful vengeance on her and her youthful lover, gives a wonderful performance. Probably the most striking member of the cast is Ramon Navarro, as the youthful lover. Here is a young man with a striking personality and undoubted ability from whom big things are to be expected. In his work and appearance he impresses you as a kind of combination of Rodolph Valentino and Richard Barthelmess. He will be remembered as portraying Rupert of Hentzau in "The Prisoner of Zenda." A subordinate member of the cast, who must not be forgotten, is the chimpanzee, Joe Martin, who adds much to the wierd effect and in some of the scenes brings to mind strongly the tales of Edgar Allen Poe.

The audience reaction toward this picture will probably be varied. While it is undeniably impressive, many may not like the tragedy and horror of the inner story, others will be enthused by the artistry, splendid action, direction and photography, while others may see in it only a vamp story in another guise.

The Story

Beautiful but flirtatious Jacqueline is incined to trifle with the affections of her admirer Henri. Her father, to impress her with what this attitude may lead to, calls her in and reads to her his novel "Black Orchids." The story concerns Zareda, a modern enchantress and crystal gazer. In love with her is Baron Maupin, an elderly roue who finds his son Ivan is also infatuated with the woman. Wishing her for himself he arranges for Ivan to go to war and in the meantime introduces her to Marquis Ferroni. Zareda transfers her affections to Ferroni because of his great wealth and marries him. Maupin, in attempting to poison Ferroni, is himself poisoned when Zareda has her chimpanzee switch the glasses.

Returning from the war, Ivan again declares his love. Zareda, tired of Ferroni, brings about a duel between them. Ferroni is mortally wounded, but learning of his wife Zareda's love for Ivan, determines to live to carry out his revenge. He causes Zareda to go to the Sorcerers' tower, appears, and drags her to a dungeon. When Ivan comes on the scene he shoots him and throws him into the same dungeon. Locking the door he places on it the wreath of black orchids Zareda has placed on his own tomb, then falls dead. The scene then shifts back to Jacqueline and her father, and Jacqueline is so impressed that she accepts Henri.

Exploitation Angles: Advertise this as a terrific tragedy with a happy ending and use other phrases to get the general idea over, then go on to sel lthe novelty and point out that few tragic stories have ever been filmed.

Mixed Faces

William Russell Doubles in Amusing Story Pictured by Fox

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

The long stretch of coincidence inevitable in dual personality pictures, is less objectionable than usual in this Fox production in which William Russell does a double. This is largely because of the story's value. While it is not unusual, it follows a popular trend and arouses enough curiosity to make one forget almost completely the implausibility of the tale. The only time when this fault might be criticized is in the handling of the love interest. But so frequently has the heroine in pictures been deluded by accepting someone who looks exactly like her sweetheart that by now this situation is perhaps generally acceptable.

Small town politics and salesmanship stunts enliven the action and furnish some spectacular scenes. A pompous office-seeker is outwitted by his opponents, and his place on the speaker's platform is taken by a double who starts something when he comes out in favor of a wide-open town. The offender proves to be an innocent sort of person who gets the sympathy before the end.

Some of the settings stand out as being unusually attractive. William Russell should make a decided appeal to his admirers by the way he plays the typical upstart salesman; and his leading woman, Rene Adoree, proves a pleasing choice. The photography is not always up to the best standard.

The Cast

Judge J. Woodworth Granger / Jimmy Gallop	William Russell
Miss Sayre	Rene Adoree

Direction by Rowland V. Lee.
Length, 4,400 feet.

The Story

Jimmy Gallop, enterprising salesman for a patent fire-extinguisher, starts a fire in the hotel in Media City so as to demonstrate his company's product. Judge Woodworth Granger, aspiring to the mayoralty, comes into the hotel and is blamed for Gallop's act because he looks exactly like him. The mistake is discovered but the complications continue. Gallop unintentionally fools Granger's sweetheart, Miss Sayre, and falls in love with her before he knows it. She notices the change in he, "Granger," but does not suspect. Gallop gets involved in politics, makes a speech in place of Granger, and it ends in his being almost murdered. He finally saves himself, however, helps the Judge to be re-elected, and finds that the girl is in love with him because he is Gallop, not Granger.

Exploitation Angles: Sell Russell and use the "would you know your own sweetheart?" to get interest in the production. You can get money with an offer of free admission to all doubles if you have not already worked this stunt.

Vitagraph Presents Earle Williams in Colorful Adaptation of O. Henry Story

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Highly colored with the theatrical aspect of Central American politics and Mexican romance, Vitagraph's latest vehicle for Earle Williams is a painstaking production that will please greatly where the spectacular is well-liked. It has human interest value, too, although that is not the most prominent feature. With Patsy Ruth Miller in the cast, the romantic appeal seems assured. As the lovely senorita, she gives one of the most accomplished performances of her career and with a role that is not great in its opportunities, gets surprising results. Her appearance in this is an exploitation feature worth noting.

The story is one that will not be taken seriously. Adapted from O. Henry's "Cabbages and Kings," it is highly seasoned with imagination, and a convenient sense of humor. There is even a touch of burlesque in the portrayal of the fat Commandante. The complications are ingeniously worked out, Maloney's escape from prison being an example of this. Politics are wisely kept in the background, with just enough emphasis to supply a little mystery. The star gives an unusually enthusiastic performance, and his admirers should be more than ordinarily pleased with this production.

Scenario by C. Graham Baker.
Direction by Robert Ensminger.
Length, 4,975.

The Story

Dicky Maloney drops down on the Central American town of Coralio from nowhere and proceeds to stir things up. He sets up drinks for the entire city, falls in love with the prettiest senorita in the country, and beats up half the standing army. For this last breach of the peace, he finds himself lodged in the calaboose on the eve of the day when his presence is urgently required to be the leader in a revolution. His escape from jail and arrival on the field of action just in time to give a surprise to the town as to his real identity, gives the final punch.

Exploitation Angles: Play on the O. Henry angle for your best sale, and follow up with the cast. The locale will provide ample opportunity for lobby displays and windows. Use the opening.

"On the High Seas"

Tense Melodrama of the Sea Stars Dorothy Dalton and Features Good Cast—Paramount

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Plenty of sea thrills, a sharpness in character contrasts and an absorbing story secure the box-office value of this Paramount feature, "On the High Seas." It has many a high wave of action, as the title suggests. It should satisfy those who are enthusiastic over sea melodramas to a greater extent than have many other pictures of this type if the footage of water scenes, and the abundance of storms and fights is any criterion. Except for the last few scenes, the sea is the stage for the entire action.

While Dorothy Dalton's role is somewhat reminiscent of her last appearance in a sea picture it is, in this case, more varied and conventional. She has less abandon but more opportunity to wear beautiful clothes. Her association with the ship stoker is forced and temporary, her return to society, inevitable.

An unusual feature is the ending which is almost burlesque in its humor. This strikes a note not entirely in keeping with the original spirit but because of its novelty and brightness it will have considerable appeal.

The story has been conceived more with the idea of presenting an interesting panorama of incidents rather than constructing an altogether smooth plot. It is highly fictitious at times. The love motive which has scarcely been indicated, follows headlong after one of the big melodramatic scenes, and afterward recedes, then revives in rather unconvincing fashion. Such inconsistencies, however, are almost submerged in the swiftness of the action. It is constantly entertaining.

Story by Edward Sheldon

Scenario by E. Magnus Ingelton
Direction by Irvin Willat
Length, 5,050 feet.

The Story:

"On the High Seas" is a tale of the seas in which two stokers and a pampered beauty fight out their battle for existence on a deserted ship in mid-ocean. Driven into a small boat by a fire on a steel liner, they seek refuge on a wind-driven derelict that has been swept by the plague. Here the two men fight for her possession, the scenes later shifting to society circles, where the young woman is to be married to a man she does not love. What happens to her just before the wedding ceremony and the fate of the expectant bridgeroom furnishes a comedy ending to the drama.

"Notoriety"

Will Nigh Makes His First North-Weber Release The Best Production Of His Career

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

Will Nigh is concededly the business man's director. In this particular instance, business man is synonymous with exhibitor. And Mr. Nigh is the exhibitor's friend, if that gentleman ever had a true blue friend. With Mr. Nigh picture making is a gol-darn serious business proposition. He loves art and, like all successful directors, has a maximum value for art and all that it implies. But without financial support, with public endorsement, without exhibitor patronage, no picture ever will reach the heights to which the truly worthy ones are deserving to attain, and, apparently, no one is better acquainted with this fact than the man who insists on setting precedent after precedent. He set a precedent when he made "My Four Years in Germany" and again when he made "Why Girls Leave Home" and later repeated when he produced "School Days."

Now comes "Notoriety." The release of this picture is a blessing to the independent market. But its value reaches outside the boundaries of the independent market, for "Notoriety" is truly a masterly production. And when the term production is used, one should not construe it to mean that it is "one of those pictures." For "Notoriety" isn't. The pity is that there are not more productions like it. It is not melodrama, nor hokum. It's good, clean, wholesome common-sense stuff, blended into a picture that will live for no brief period. It delivers a message entertainingly and interestingly without taxing the mentality of the individual who is looking on, without burdening his imagination.

"Notoriety" is episodal in presentation, for it deals with two varied episodes in the life of a sweet innocent young girl. It deals with a phase in every day life that is so common that the wonder of it is that no one thought of the theme before. But, then again, it's the little things that count in life—and the picture business is seemingly a very vital part of this existence called life. And Will Nigh, who conceived the story, borrowed one of "these little things," incorporated it into an intelligent, easy and smooth-moving story that made the best picture he has ever offered his public. He found characters that live their roles, that are so real one often forgets that, after all, the story is being unfolded in celluloid form. It's that real.

Commercially, Mr. Nigh has taken into consideration his public from every angle, for he has combined in "Notoriety" all the elements of intelligent drama. It is clean, wholesome, and superlatively entertaining, with pathos, thrills and enjoyable humor running through it at such a pace that one does not realize the length of the feature until after the Ingersoll is brought into play. Then comes the realization that the picture as it stands now can stand a little more cutting.

But "Notoriety" as it was shown to New England exhibitors on Tuesday, October 3, in Boston, under the auspices of Sam Grand, of Federated Exchange, that city, represented, in the humble opinion of this writer, the very best work of Mr. Nigh. He combined showmanship with art, backed with an ever present knowledge of the commercial value of the celluloid product, and by these applications produced a picture that should gloriously survive any test. Its exploitation possibilities are innumerable, for there is not an item in any newspaper that cannot be intelligently tied up with this story.

"Notoriety" is replete with thrills, this writer counting no less than five powerful punches. One of these comes in the early stages of the production when the defending attorney makes a heart-rending appeal to a jury for the exoneration of a publicity-seeking young girl, who is charged with murder. Another is the scene wherein Mary Alden, as a mother of the tenements, discloses herself as a once famous star of the stage. Then comes the unexpected regeneration of a typical Broadway cake-eating "promoter," quickly followed by as realistic and desperate a battle as has ever been shown on the screen. Another is the surprising "confession" of the girl that she did commit murder.

The photography is flawless with picturesque shots frequent. There are plenty of luxuriously elaborate settings. The lighting is good, but the direction, as stated above, is a work of art.

The cast is a splendid one, with Maurine Powers as "Pigeon" Deering carrying off the premier honors. She is childish and plays her role with an air of understanding that makes her work stand out pleasantly. But there is no one who hogs the histrionic faction, for all contribute consistently and do their work creditably well. Mary Alden as Ann Boland is lovably motherly, while Rod La Roque never gave a better characterization than that of the "divorce expert." Richard Travers as Tom Robbins was wonderful. George Hackathorne as "Batty" does well, as do J. Barney Sherry, Mona Lisa, John Goldsworthy, Anders Randolph, Ida Waterman and William Gudgeon.

The Story

This is the story of "Pigeon" Deering, a misled young orphan girl, who mistakes notoriety as the quickest road to fame. She is absolved of murder and is about to be entangled in another complication when the folly of her ways is forcibly brought to her attention and she concludes that ill-fame leads but to one goal—disaster and eternal oblivion.

"Bluebeard, Jr."

Mary Anderson Star in Clever Farce—American Releasing Corporation

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

"Bluebeard, Jr." is a well-acted farce built upon the dilemmas of an innocent married man who finds himself with too many wives. The situations are technically new, but similar in spirit to other comedies on married life that have demonstrated their success. It is a good laugh-getter with the average audience.

"Notoriety," Will Nigh's initial offering to exhibitors, through L. Lawrence Weber-Bobby North, outshines anything that this director has done in the past. It constitutes a remarkable metropolitan character study, backed up with a powerfully human story that can be tied up with any local happening of news interest. It is clearly cast with players of box office value. Picturesquely staged and with numerous pretentiously luxurious sets, "Notoriety" bids fair to outdraw at the box office anything that ever had the name Will Nigh labelled on it.—R. F.

Jack Connelly handles the role of husband skillfully. Tom Beech is so much in love with his charming wife that he enjoys the spice of a quarrel now and then. He selects the wrong time and in order to obtain an inheritance of $50,000, he has to improvise a wife and a beautiful home and register prosperity and happiness when the lawyer visits him. The plot it entertainingly set forth in the picture. There is constant action, an abundance of amusing complications, and a few really hilarious moments.

Mary Anderson is the star of a cast that is unusually clever. Her own performance of the petulant wife is fine and the manner in which George Hernandez, Lila Leslie and Laura Ansen swing into the spirit of their characters is a great aid to the effectiveness of the comedy.

The Story

The story is told of a young wife and husband whose trouble becomes most involved through the greediness of a landlord's raising their rent to the limit.

How the couple rent a small apartment, the only one in town, only to find that they cannot occupy it for another day, how they sleep in a worn out old "flivver," how they quarrel, as all couples do and decide to go their own way, how the husband becomes involved with three "wives" and earns the sobriquet of "Bluebeard, Jr.," is all amusingly pictured.

The Pep of the Program

News and Reviews of Short Subjects and Serials

Rivoli and Rialto Book Educational's Thrilling Two-Reeler "Man vs. Beast"

For late October release, Educational is offering a two-reel special, "Man vs. Beast," which is said to be a remarkable picture, notable for its large number of thrilling close-ups of conflicts between men and vicious beasts, many being unique and of a nature never before shown on the screen.

This special has just been shown to Hugo Riesenfeld and he was so impressed with it that he immediately booked it for two of his Broadway houses, for the Rivoli week of October 15 and for the Rialto during week of October 22.

"Man vs. Beast" presents the high spots of a pictorial record of an expedition to the African wilds by the scientist, explorer and sportsman, Louis Shuman, and the result is said to show that Shuman's spirit in taking these pictures was that of the big game hunter, the sportsman who risks his own life to bag his game.

Accompanied by cameramen and a retinue of about 150 natives, Mr. Shuman started out from the East Coast of Africa. A large amount of film telling graphically the hardships undergone, was brought back, but the expedition lost its leader. Out of this vast amount of material Educational has taken the most thrilling portions and embodied them in two reels. Among the stirring scenes are the hunting of the wild gnu, the hippopotamus, and the capture of great birds. Particularly thrilling is the conflict with a giant hippo at close range. Another remarkable shot shows a hyena at close range. It is stated that seldom, if ever, has this animal been photographed, due to the fact that it is not only exceedingly wild but is a nocturnal animal. The pictures were obtained just at night-fall after baiting the animal with a zebra skin and waiting through many weary hours.

Educational will also release during October another special, Warren E. Newcombe's beautiful work, "The Enchanted City."

Pollard and Maloney in Two-Reelers Head Pathe Schedule for October 15

Ten varied subjects comprise Pathe's schedule for week of October 15. Heading the list are two two-reelers, "Snub" Pollard in "The Old Sea Dog" and Leo Maloney in "Rough Going."

"The Old Sea Dog" is "Snub's" second appearance as a star in two-reel comedies. He is shown as a spinner of wonderful yarns who actually runs a comic ferry-boat and meets with exciting experiences.

"Rough Going" is marked by plenty of action, hard-riding, hard-fighting and pep combined with a pretty love story in which the hero proves his nobility of character by branding himself as an outlaw in an effort to save the man he thinks his sweetheart really loves.

The current Hal Roach comedy is "Out on Bail." Paul Parrott is the star and the fact that he falls in love with a tough girl who vamps him to the extent of putting up bail for her uncle who is a "bad man" leads to an awful rumpus with plenty of excitement and comedy.

In "The Timber Queen," the serial which is now nearing the end, Ruth Roland meets with more exciting adventures back at her home in California. "Two of a Trade" is an Aesop Film Fable dealing humorously with the adventures of Tom Cat. "Chop Suey & Co." is a humorous Harold Lloyd reissue staged in Chinatown. A Pathe Review and two Pathe News complete the week's schedule.

Events of the Past Are Interestingly Shown in Universal's "Mirror" Series

"Mirror No. 2," the second of the International News Reel Corporation's unique reels, showing events of more than a decade ago, will be ready for release by Universal at an early date. This reel presents an interesting record of the great San Francisco fire which occurred in April, 1906. In contrast, there are also scenes showing San Francisco as it looks today.

This single reel is one of a series of "Mirrors." The first one, which has already been issued, showed the inauguration of President McKinley as contrasted with that of President Harding. Among the subjects to be shown in the forthcoming issues are the following: Intimate pictures of the Czar and his family as contrasted with the present Soviet government, the Wright Brothers' first aeroplane contrasted with modern flyers and gliders, building and opening of the Panama Canal contrasted with the canal full of shipping as it is today, the Battleship Maine and the burial of its heroes, the destruction of the Lusitania, the capture of Vera Cruz during the Mexican rebellion in 1912, famous people of ten years ago and queer styles in vogue, champions of former days in every kind of sport, investiture of Prince of Wales and coronation of King George in 1910.

In connection with this series of "Mirrors," Universal is getting out special accessories, including several styles of paper, lobby photographs, testimonial letters and other exploitation material. Each reel is a full 1,000 feet in length.

Books Christie Series

Reserving his policy of booking short subjects separately, Sid Grauman has booked the entire fall series of Educational-Christie comedies for his big Los Angeles Theatre. It is announced that this contract was signed after Mr. Grauman had viewed the first two of the new series. "That Son of a Sheik" will be the first subject shown.

Fox to Help Showmen

Fox Film Corporation announces that Fox Educational Entertainments, the first six of which are now being released to exhibitors, may be booked singly or in a group at any Fox exchange. The organization is now extending effective co-operation to exhibitors by selling the idea of these subjects, being both instructive and entertaining, direct to the public. Brochures have been prepared and are being mailed to prominent persons, including the clergy, educators and parent-teacher organizations, and this will be followed by advertising campaigns.

Burr Finishes First All-Star Comedy

The first of the series of "All-Star Comedies," featuring Ray McKee, Charlie Murray and Mary Anderson has been completed and turned over to W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for distribution. It is titled "Faint Heart." This series, which consists of twelve two-reelers, is being produced by C. C. Burr, with Gregory LaCava directing. The second of the series is now under way and will be ready for distribution October 28. At a trial showing of this picture at the Gotham Theatre, New York, it is said to have gone over big.

What Century Offers

Century Comedy Company has an attractive list of offerings for release through Universal during the month of November. They include "Gingerface," with Johnny Fox as a troublesome small town boy; "Hello, George!" featuring Lee Moran in a story of married life; "Just Dogs," a unique picture directed by Arvid Gilstrom and portrayed by an-all dog cast; "True Blue," a love story with Queenie and Betty May, and "Rookies," starring Brownie and his boy pals.

Brooks on Tour

Serial Sales Manager Edgar O. Brooks, of Pathe, is now on a visit to branch exchanges, beginning with Buffalo, in connection with the new serial, "Speed," starring Charles Hutchison, which is scheduled for release October 22. Mr. Brooks reports that this serial is being booked heavily in all parts of the country and his trip is in connection with preparations to be made for first-run showings.

Praises Trimble

Little Arthur Trimble, who is being starred by Frederick G. Becker in a series of two-reel child-lore specials, has received unusual praise from the celebrated author, Rupert Hughes. Arthur has a prominent role in "Remembrance," Mr. Hughes' latest picture, and Mr. Hughes pronounced him the most lovable and aristocratic child type he had ever met.

Newsy Notes

A feature of Educational's new screen magazine, "The Graphic," will be a series dealing with leaders in sports. In the first issue is Becky Lanier, champion equestrienne.

Timely Films, Inc., and Fable Pictures, Inc., producers of "Topics of the Day" and "Aesop's Film Fables," which are released through Pathe, have moved to larger quarters at 318 West Forty-sixth Street, New York.

Harry Pollard is now making the second six rounds of the "Leather Pushers" series for Universal, starring Reginald Denny, and founded on H. C. Witwer's stories. Realistic combats with real prize fighters battling with the star are a feature of this series.

A unique feature in connection with the showing of a recent issue of Pathe News by Manager Downs of Loew's State Theatre, Newark, was the personal appearance of Mr. and Mrs. Logan and their thirteen children who were shown in the news reel as having won a prize as being Newark's largest family. The children are all under seventeen. The stunt went over big.

Lewis Sargent is now working on the eighth of the series of "Messenger Boy" comedies in which he is being featured by Universal. "Speed" the seventh has just been completed.

It is announced that over 900 theatres have shown "A Trip Through Filmland," the story of film making at Kodak Park. This includes a showing at the Rialto Theatre, New York, and many other prominent theatres.

Because of the success of "The Fire Fighters," one of Pathe's "Our Gang" comedies at the Capitol Theatre, New York, Manager Rothapfel has included it in the special program for Children's Day, October 14.

Lee Moran has finished "Three Game Birds," a century Comedy for Universal, which is described as a tale of the hunt. Betty May, Queenie and Kewpie King are in the cast.

Universal is now filming a new chapter play, "Wolves of Society," a modern romantic adventure drama. Jack Mulhall will be starred with Margaret Livingston opposite. Robert F. Hill will direct.

An attractive section of Pathe Review 177 is a picturization of Longfellow's poem, "Daybreak," beautifully photographed and titled with excerpts from the poem. This is one of the "Photographic Gems" series.

Joe Rock has completed the second of his two-reel comedies for Federated Exchanges of America. It is entitled "Aladdin" and is now at work on the third "Little Red Robinhood".

Monty Banks is not only appearing in his new series of comedies for Federated Exchanges, but is assisting in the direction, writing the stories and inventing new gags. His newest release is "Try and Get It".

Kathryn McGuire has the leading feminine role in what is said to be an unusually clever and humorous film burlesque which has been produced by Mack Sennett for release through First National. It is titled "The Shriek of Araby" and satirizes Shiek pictures. It was directed by F. Richard Jones.

Clarence Bricker has begun work on the first of the series of two-reel comedies starring Frankie Lee, the celebrated child-actor who made a hit in "The Miracle Man". They will be released on the state right market through East Coast Productions.

The third of the series of Plum Center Comedies, featuring Dan Mason, has been completed and shipped to Film Booking Offices of America. It is titled "Pop Tuttle, Fire Fighter".

Wants Films

The Journal of Engineering and Industrial Chemistry desires to get in touch with producers and distributors of films dealing with chemical subjects or technical processes in which chemistry is used. A list of such subjects will be published in the "Journal" for the information of chemical societies who may desire to use them. This data may be forwarded direct to Mr. D. H. Killeffer, who is associate editor, at 19 E. Twenty-fourth Street, New York, or may be sent to this office.

"The Old Sea Dog"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

There are a lot of laughs in this Pathe picture which marks Snub Pollard's second appearance as a star in two-reelers. It is largely slap-stick and considerable ingenuity has been displayed in the comedy situations. Snub is seen as a wonderful spinner of sea yarns, in which he is a peg-legged pirate, one of a crew, all of whom are peg-legged. In truth, it develops that he is the captain of a comedy ferry boat which meets with a series of remarkable adventures. Marie Mosquini plays opposite the star, and for what we believe to be the first time since she became prominent, appears in an abbreviated bathing suit. She makes a good appearance.—C. S. S.

"Rough Going"

(Pathe—Western—Two Reels)

Here is another rattling good Western two-reeler distributed by Pathe, with Leo Maloney in the title role. There is action aplenty with fine horsemanship and hard fighting. The hero is cast as a rancher who, as he goes to propose to a girl, finds her in another's arms. Believing it is her lover and that the sheriff is after him, the star assumes the other man's guilt. All is straightened out when it develops that the other man is the girl's brother. This is an old situation, but it has been well handled and serves as a basis for a lot of fast action.—C. S. S.

"Some Family"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Based upon a situation that will be appreciated by almost everyone, "Some Family", a Century comedy with Lee Moran, offers two reels of lively amusement. Sister's beau finds that he has to propose to the whole family before winning her, and afterwards finds himself married to them all. The family is almost unlimited as to number and variety and much of the comedy is derived from this angle. Father-in-law invests the young couple's bank deposit in a car for his family's pleasure, but the bridegroom slices the car in half and elopes with the "better half".—M. K.

"Pop Tuttle's Clever Catch"

(F. B. O.—Comedy—Two Reels)

Action is not too abundant in the first part of this Plum Center comedy, but the clever titles, the well-known characters and the punch at the close leave a favorable impression. The titles, written by A. H. Giebler, are teeming with originality and go over with a laugh at times when the scenes are not as successful. Pop Tuttle's hold-up stunt has been cleverly conceived and is well done. Dan Mason is up to his excellent standard and the supporting cast includes the tried and true types that have given character to the earlier numbers of the series.—M. K.

"The Tin Broncho"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

If it is safe to predict the success of any comedy before it has been publicly tested, "The Tin Broncho" will offer hilarious amusement to any audience. It almost carries the "Laughing Guaranteed" stamp. As frequently with the funniest comedies, the underlying idea is simple. Two Western ranchmen who are taking a correspondence course fall for an advertisement of a "Klassy Komblex" car. This is the tin broncho. The methods for operating it sound simple, but some of their mischievous fellows change the numbers on the levers. But the best piece of business is the purchase of the giant magnet which they attach to the rear of the machine with wonderful results. Immediately they are dragging along half the town with them. As a finale, when the Klassy Komplex fails them, they return to their best friend, the old, black horse. The comedy is a Sunshine.—M. K.

"The Priory School"

(Educational—Drama—Two Reels)

That deep element of mystery so evident in many of the Sherlock Holmes stories, where the great detective starts out with apparently nothing to work on, is lacking in this number. It involves the abduction of the son of a titled couple who are estranged; you immediately surmise that either the mother or father is responsible, and very soon suspicion points to the father. Nevertheless, the production has been made in such a manner that it will hold the interest, and there is a pleasant ending where the estranged pair become reconciled.—C. S. S.

"Love Drops"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

A powerful love potion and a trip to the bathing beach prove too much for the hero in Universal's one-reel comedy "Love Drops". Neely Edwards is the star. The subject matter has an assured entertainment value and, as it has been cleverly handled, the comedy should be popular. Upon receiving news of inheriting a large fortune the hero falls unconscious and is revived by a flask of love drops. The result is that every woman who sees him thereafter recognizes in him her soul-mate, an affliction which defies the color line and extends even to mermaids. Some attractive girls are used in the cast, and the comedy contains an unusual amount of entertainment for a one-reeler.—M. K.

"Smyrna On Fire"

(Pathe News—Special)

Pathe has achieved something in this that cannot fail to be of wide interest. The beginning and rapid spread of the disastrous fire that formed so tragic a part in the recent Turko-Greek conflict has been vividly pictured. Its appeal is far greater than the average news reel. It is not only informative and pictorial but far-reaching in its human interest.—M. K.

"The Skipper's Sermon"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

As with the earlier numbers of this series of Toonerville Comedies, there is a lot of quaint humor in the sub-titles. The story in this instance is slight and the incidents have been spread out in order to cover two reels. The work of the cast, headed by Dan Mason, is good. As a whole, it is hardly up to the standard set by the majority of the offerings in this series.—C. S. S.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Biggest Question

Some time back a San Francisco projectionist propounded the following question:

If you were called upon to design and equip a 2-projector projection room in a high class, straight motion picture theatre, and to advise as to the location and construction of same, and to advise as to the selection of a screen, what would you do with regard to every one of the items concerned, and why would you do it?

This question covered so much ground that it was necessary to spread the reply over many issues. To date sections of my reply have appeared in August 5, 12 and 19, and September 2 and 30 issues. Many have written favorable comments on what has already been printed. We will now proceed.

Ventilation

Ventilating the projection room is a sadly misunderstood problem. Aside from the writer, everyone, so far as I know, has considered projection room ventilation solely and entirely from the standpoint of health, whereas, important as is that item, it is even less important than prevention of fire panic—safety of the audience, which latter is very intimately connected with projection room ventilation, as I shall show.

In September 30 issue, page 403, I have shown you how it is possible to cause the projection room port shutters to close AUTOMATICALLY, within one or at most two seconds of the start of a film fire at any one of the probable points where such a fire would start.

This is extremely important, but it nevertheless will fail of its purpose in preventing possibility of panic in the audence if the condtion be such that the enormous amount of gas generated by burning film can generate pressure, be it ever so slight, above atmospheric pressure inside the room, since in that event the smoke, of which there will be prodigious quantities, will filter out through the crevices around the port shutters and door, into the auditorium, so that Mr,. Miss or Mrs. Solid Ivory Top may see it, whereupon they may, and most likely will scream FIRE at the top of their voices and sprint for the exit (they usually use the main entrance), with a goodly proportion of the audience in their wake and the children under foot.

To insure safety, therefore, and prevent any possible knowledge of the existence of a fire on the part of the audience, or any part thereof, it is necessary to remove the smoke and gases as fast as they are generated, and to actually create a slight vacuum in the projection room interior, so that air is filtering in through the crevices, instead of smoke filtering out.

Can this be done? you ask.

Certainly it can, and at a very nominal cost too, as you will find in next week's issue of this department.

Wheels Running

O. J. Parker, Sherman, Texas, first says that electricity has the wheels in his head running in all directions. He then remarks further, as follows:

You have for the last hundred years or so recommended a carbon combination with a smaller negative than positive.

Several times I have tried it, but am unable to see any improvement in the light. In fact it does not look as good as when I use two carbons of the same size.

Have tried ¾ positive and 7-16 Silver Tip negative, using 55 amperes; also two ¾ carbons with same amperage. The latter gives a better light with same projector optical system in both cases.

I noticed in one issue that a brother was using 90 amperes with a ⅞ positive and 7-16 negative. Now, I want to know how 90 amperes can be forced through a 7-16 carbon. Don't know exactly what the carrying capacity of a 7-16 is, but it certainly is less than 90 amperes.

What would be the result of changing the 7-16 to a ⅞ in the above? Would not it cause an increase in current at the arc? Would like to see it tested with an ammeter in circuit, but I have no such animal. My theory is that the small negative would develop sufficient resistance to decrease amperage.

What He Is Driving at

I agree with you that the smaller negative does not interfere with the light so much, but the decrease in resistance and consequent increase in current flow more than makes up the difference.

I claim to have the best projection in Texas, hence want your comment on my formula, which is as follows: Amperes 55; current D. C.; 6½ plano convex next arc (collector lens. Ed.) 6½ bi-convex front lens (converging lens. Ed.); 15 inches between condensers and aperture (what part of condenser? Ed.); 6½-inch focus projection lens (equivalent focus you mean, don't you? Ed.), with 1⅝-inch active diameter. Throw 85 feet (distance of projection, correct term. Ed.), with no projection angle to speak of. A 12-foot picture on a King screen. Have perfectly clear field with sharp definition.

DIAGRAM of System for O. J. Parker

I Admire You

Brother Parker, I admire you for getting good results and being proud of that fact, but you are due for some criticism just the same, one item of which is that you have not learned to use correct names in connection with the things you handle every day. You must remember that the terms I have corrected you on have all been approved and adopted by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, hence are officially correct. They have been used in our department for a long time.

As to your theory with regard to carbon resistance and increase in amperage, there is too much involved to permit of a general discussion here. The following is the one rule with regard to carbon size that is worth while considering. Your carbons, both positive and negative, but especially the positive, should be burned just as closely as possible to the point where they start to pencil—burn to a slim point.

That is THE rule that counts when it comes to carbon efficiency. You remark that in both cases the projector optical systems were the same, but you make no mention of an even much more important point, viz: was the crater angle the same? A change of so little as ten degrees from the 55 degree crater angle will make a very decided difference in screen illumination.

Would Also Suggest

I would also suggest that "Solid Vs. Cored Carbons" and "Carbon Size," page 377, and "Intrinsic Brilliancy of Crater" will also prove of value to you.

As to your present line-up, I would try out a ⅝ positive, though it is possible it would be a bit too small. I think not, though. The test is, does it pencil? If not, then it is the size you need. As to using the smaller negative, that has been well established as good practice, both in practical projection practice and in laboratory tests. The reason you get better results with the large negative surely is due to some error in set of the smaller negative.

Presumably you mean fifteen inches from face of converging lens to aperture, and we will assume the effective condenser opening to be 4.25 inches.

I have laid out your system on that presumption. If you mean from center of condenser to aperture, then the condition will be better. What you need in plano convex for 55 amperes is a 6½ collector and a 7½ converging lens, spaced not to exceed 1-16 inch apart, with about 16⅜ inches from center of condenser combination to aperture. Your bi-convex shortens the distance condenser to film, which is too short for your projection lens diameter now.

See Diagram

Points A B in diagram represent condenser opening. Broken lines show lines which govern divergence of beam beyond aperture. C D are the aperture opening its wide way. E F is outer margin of beam

Are You Working by "Guess" or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens chart (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) is in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

"Don't guess." Do your work RIGHT. Price, fifty cents, stamps.

beyond aperture. I is your projection lens at about its presumed working distance—which you failed to give.

Broken lines G H show lens aperture at different positions. It will only be able to collect all the light and give an even illumination of screen, with good picture depth, at not to exceed a four-inch working distance. You probably need a projection lens of larger diameter, but first you should have a better condenser combination. A 6½ meniscus and a 9½ bi convex is your best bet, with a bit more than 18 inches center of condenser combination to film. Mind you, I do not question your statement that you get good results, but I do say that you should be able to improve them.

Capitol Adopts Name

A while ago S. L. Rothafel, to whose genius the wonderfully beautiful light effects and presentations in the Capitol Theatre, New York City, are due, put the Capitol projectionists into a neat uniform, and, being a progressive, he had the name PROJECTIONIST embroidered on the sleeve just under the Capitol emblem. The men were well pleased to have it so.

Clever Stuff

Out in Wichita, Kansas, is a projectionist who fully deserves the title, because he uses his brains. Recently I received a Miller Theatre programme, in which I found the name of Seth E. Barnes, Chief Projectionist Miller Theatre, at the head of a two-column article, a portion of which is reproduced herewith. It is clever stuff. I wonder how many of you ever stopped to figure this all out?

You have all at some time or other heard your friends say that they saw a good "picture" at their favorite theatre, but few people know or realize that what they call a "picture" is not really one picture but is made up of thousands of separate photographs.

The average performance at the Miller consists, in part, of about 8,000 feet of film which makes up the various film subjects.

Since there are 16 separate pictures to each foot of film, one can readily see that when you view a performance you have looked at 128,000 separate and distinct photographs, any one of which could be enlarged and mounted as an ordinary photograph.

Stopped for 1/16 Second

In order to produce the effect of motion, each of these individual pictures is stopped perfectly still at the aperture of the projector for one sixteenth of a second for exposure and then the next one is moved into position.

During the period of movement all the light from the powerful arc lamp of the projector is cut off from the screen by means of a revolving shutter placed in front of the projection lens, this shutter being similar to the blades of an electric fan except that it has only two blades of equal width.

* * * * * * *

Appearance of Continuity

As each picture is moved into position the shutter cuts off the light from the screen for a fraction of a second and when the shutter passes you don't see the same picture as before, but another one slightly different. It is this constant starting and stopping that makes the picture appear as one continuous moving picture.

Since the normal speed of projection is about 70 feet of film per minute or 1,120 separate photographs, one can see that they have looked at a good many thousand pictures instead of just one picture.

Seven Performances

The Miller gives seven complete performances a day, which makes a total of 56,000 feet of film, or 896,000 separate photographs, or in other words, a little over ten miles of film shown during the day.

The arc lamp of each machine consumes 90 amperes at a pressure of 55 volts, which is equivalent to 4,950 watts per hour. The theatre being open 11½ hours a day, this would total 56,925 watts consumed a day.

Since 1,000 watts equal 1 kilowatt, this makes nearly 57 kilowatts of electricity consumed each day by the projection machines alone.

Now the average home uses about 35 kilowatts of electricity during a whole month, so one can see that the amount of current used to project the moving pictures at the Miller one day would furnish enough current for the average home for about a month and a half.

Commends Handbook

Joseph E. Bliven, Projectionist, Empire Theatre, New London, Connecticut, has examined his new handbook and has this to say:

The new handbook is without doubt the greatest work on motion picture projection that has ever been compiled. It will outlive anything that will be published for many years to come, because it is built upon the sound principle of understandable language, which the average man should be able to and can very easily digest.

The question section is just the thing, for the reason that it will invite and encourage study, and that is the one thing we need, above all other things, in projection rooms of this and other countries. One bit of information obtained by constructive study will do more real good than all the "questions and answers" ever compiled.

I sincerely hope that the reward for faithful service will be yours, and that the men in projection rooms ("booths" included) of this and other countries will wake up and study the new "BLUE BOOK OF PROJECTION."

Comment is unnecessary, except to say that Bliven is a man well able to judge of the value of such a book. Not only is he a high class projectionist, but also he is a well educated, well read man.

Griffith's Verdict

John Griffith, Ansonia, Connecticut, says:

Received copy of new handbook. It surely is a wonder. Needless to say, I value my copy very highly.

THE PROJECTIONIST WHO FAILS TO PROCURE A COPY IS NOT GIVING HIMSELF A SQUARE DEAL.

The capitals are Griffiths own. Griffiths letter is in line with every one of those received to date commenting on the new book.

From Howard Coles

Many of you will remember Howard B. Coles, who several years ago was with the Nicholas Power Company; later changing to the Precision Company, and then taking up the perfection of and exploitation of the Cameron projector.

Like so many thousands—yes, millions of our men—he sailed the deep blue to France during the war, but unlike most of the others, he remained.

Coles heads a company handling special features and other things. He is doing well. I have a letter from him before me, excerpts from which read:

My Dear Richardson: Just saw the announcement of issue of the fourth edition of your handbook, and of course the natural thing to do was to write out a cheque, hand it to you herewith, and ask you to send me a copy P. D. Q.

Paris is my headquarters. We have a very interesting business here, and have branches in England and Italy. We are agents for the Power company, as you know, and for the Delco Light Company, Dayton, Ohio; also we handle special features.

Keeps me so busy that I have been unable to jump across the big pond for a visit. Hope to before long, though, and I'll certainly look you up when I do.

Wish you knew the French language and could conduct just such a campaign over here as you have so ably carried on over there through the Moving Picture World.

Improvement in projection is needed over here fully as much as it was needed over home ten or twelve years ago.

Yes, Friend Coles, if I knew French and Spanish I could enlarge my field of usefulness very greatly.

Your book has gone forward. Let me know how you like it.

I'm For It

From H. Y. Ballou, San Francisco, comes sample of a projector rotating shutter with request that I express an opinion as to its practicability and selling possibilities.

The shutter is composed of six separate sheets of metal for the 3-wing, and four separate sheets for the 2-wing. Each sheet forms one edge of one of the blades, and the whole is so marked that the projectionist may tell at a glance the exact width of any blade and any opening. The sheets are all movable at will, merely by loosening the clamping screws.

As to the selling possibilities, I would not attempt to express an opinion, but I will say that I am "for" it, and for it good and strong. It does seem to me the time has arrived when we should discard such an utterly foolish device as the shutter made to fit the worst, or even the average, condition.

A Step Forward

An adjustable shutter such as this is a long step forward, and while the incompetent projectionist might mix matters up a bit when it came to the attempt to adjust the shutter blades to the local condition, still that is no excuse for the refusal to adopt so necessary an improvement. Once such a shutter comes into general use the trouble would disappear, because the incompetent would be compelled to learn to use it, and we must remember that the incompetent is not so popular as he once was, anyhow; also a very large proportion of the men are now entirely able to use such a shutter efficiently and intelligently.

I am for it! It can be used with the regular projector shutter hub, hence you won't lose very much by making the experiment of putting it on the market. I am sure that the technical editors of all trade papers will approve of it, and boost it, too.

Better Equipment

Conducted by E. T. KEYSER

Take the Friction Out of House Management With This Equipment

DO you remember the time when the average motor car cost twice as much as it costs today? And when a man paid for a car, the car was all that he got with the receipted bill? And if he wanted a wind-shield, or a top, or head lights, or a speedometer, he could go out and buy them as extras?

And when a large proportion of car owners selected the cars because the color of the paint matched their wives' complexions and had no idea as to why the motor motored?

And when the chauffeur told the boss that one cylinder was missing, the boss wanted to know who in blazes had swiped it?

And the man who had a perfectly competent and honest chauffeur would make just as much of a yell on general principles over a perfectly legitimate repair bill as did the man who was being bilked good and proper six times a month—all to the detriment of the car.

When one contrasts the conditions which prevailed a few years ago with those of the present day, one can see how knowledge shakes out the rough spots if properly applied.

Knowledge as Protection

Because, as a matter of protection and a desire to find out whether the chauffeur was good or bad, honest or the reverse, the majority of owners proceeded to study up on how the innards of a motor car were put together and what said innards were for and also what they would do if given an opportunity.

The result is today that the average car owner knows as much, or more, about his car than the man he pays to drive it. He may not have the manual dexterity to accomplish repairs out of the ordinary, but he knows what these repairs require, about how long they should take and has a fairly approximate idea of what the cost should be. So the grafting chauffeur has, as a general thing, gone into other lines of endeavor and the good men have stuck, and when they say that a car requires something, they do not have to prove it in seventeen different ways.

All of which would be out of place in a motion picture trade publication if it were not that there is a striking similarity between the exhibitors of today and the car owners of the not very remote past.

The average exhibitor has a very slight idea as to whether his projectionist is really earning his salary or laying down on it. He does not know, as he should know, the possibilities of his projection room mechanism and also the limitation of this same mechanism.

When a screen showing is far from what it should be, he does not always know whether he is paying good money to a poor projectionist or whether he is forcing a good projectionist to wrestle with apparatus that should be in the junk room.

And he cannot always understand why he should be asked to extend what looks to him to be a pretty sizable amount for something, the necessity for which he does not appreciate.

MIGHTY GOOD EQUIPMENT for the Progressive House Manager

And just so long as an exhibitor does not know as much, or almost as much, regarding projection as his projectionist, either he or the projectionist will always be at a disadvantage when it comes to explanations of bad screenings and requisitions for supplies, repairs and re-equipment.

No Reason for Ignorance

The curious part of the whole proposition is that there is absolutely no reason why every exhibitor in this country should not know practically everything that it is necessary to know about the projection end of his business. Not that he would have the time to acquire the ability to make himself a first-class projectionist, but a study of Richardson's Handbook will put him wise to the projection game.

It will put him in a position to know when he has a good projectionist who should be encouraged, or a bad one who should be fired. It will put him in a position to keep a check on projection room expenditures and to know which ones are justified and it will enable him to squash alibis while appreciating reasons for poor screenings.

As a matter of fact, Richardson's Handbook is a mighty important part of the exhibitor's equipment, for the simple reason that it enables him to understand every item of his mechanical lay-out.

Important to the Exhibitor

The book is just as important to the exhibitor who is spending his money as to the projectionist who earns it, and at six dollars per copy, it will save the exhibitor, who studys it, many times its cost every year.

Somebody may say that it is not quite decent for me to use editorial space to advocate the purchase of the book. But it is not my fault that our projection editor wrote it or that the Chalmers Publishing Company publishes it. And neither of these facts alters the case that it is one of the best buys of the year for my exhibitor readers and I am advocating it on that account.

Changes in Management

CHICAGO, ILL.—Julius Born has sold Panorama Theatre at 717 Sheridan road to James Henry Harris. New owner will make improvements.

GLASFORD, ILL.—Dreamland Theatre has been purchased by R. E. Groninger.

FARNAM, NEB.—Bayley Theatre, a moving picture house, has been leased by Ray Blackwood.

NEWARK, N. J.—Gus De Pauw has leased Opera House and will reopen in September with photoplays, vaudeville and road shows.

ALEXANDRIA, TENN.—Bethel Brothers have purchased new Princess Theatre.

ABBOTSFORD, WIS.—L. R. Bucholz has sold Opera House to H. E. Crosby, of Colby.

COLBY, WIS.—H. E. Crosby has taken over Rex Theatre.

CASPER, WYO.—Hub Theatre has been purchased by J. E. Scott.

DOVER, DEL.—Anglo-American Film Corporation has been organized with $200,000 capital.

WILMINGTON, DEL.—Utopian Productions, Inc., has been organized with $100,000 capital.

BALTIMORE, MD.—Calvert Picture Corporation has been organized with $1,000,000 capital.

SAULT STE MARIE, MICH.—Temple Theatre will open in September.

CONEY ISLAND, N. Y.—Allwell Development Company has leased site on Surf avenue, between West Fifth and Eighth streets, for theatre, to cost $250,000. House will play pictures, vaudeville and road shows.

NEW YORK, N. Y.—Aaron Miller plans new moving picture theatre to be erected at northwest corner Burnside and Harrison avenues.

ROCKY RIVER, O.—Mrs. U. T. Teshera has plans by W. S. Ferguson Company, 1900 Euclid avenue, Cleveland, for two-story brick, stone and terra-cotta trim theatre, store and office building, to be erected at northwest corner Detroit avenue and Blount street.

ELIZABETHTOWN, PA. — C. Emlen Urban, Woolworth Building, Lancaster, is preparing plans for three-story moving picture theatre, store and apartment building, to be erected on North Market street.

GRINDSTONE, PA.—Globe Amusement Company, Brownsville, has plans by J. H. Harman, Fayette Title & Trust Building, Uniontown, for one-story stucco on tile moving picture theatre.

HAWLEY, PA.—M. E. Comerford and associates, of Reading, plan to erect two-story brick moving picture theatre, 120 by 50 feet, with seating capacity of 1,000, to cost about $70,000.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Richard J. Hill, 340 East Somerset street, plans to erect one and two-story brick theatre and store building, 110 by 115 feet, at Front and Huntington streets.

DALLAS, TEXAS—James P. Thomas will erect moving picture theatre in Oak Lawn district.

NELLIS, W. VA.—Nellis Amusement Company has theatre under construction to be devoted to both pictures and road attractions.

Changes in Management

HOXIE, ARK.—L. L. Lewis and his brother, of Walnut Ridge, have purchased Triangle Theatre.

DENVER, COLO.—Charles Kloeb, of Wray, has taken over Edison Theatre, a moving picture house.

LA SALLE, ILL.—James J. Collins has purchased Marquette Theatre.

OREGON, ILL.—George Mickels, operating Star and Gem Theatres, has disposed of his business to Mr. Mendenhall.

MISHAWAKA, IND.—Oscar J. Lambiotte has sold his interest in Temple Theatre to Robert Robertson and E. H. Ahara.

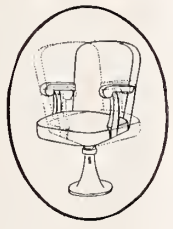
MOV-EZY

(Means Ease at the Movies)



ONLY ONE PERSON STANDING

And that won't be you—unless it's you that's passing along the row. The old method of seating required every one in the row to rise to eramped positions to enable a late arrival to squeeze past, eausing annoyanee to all eoneerned and obstructing the view of those seated in the rear.

But no more! The Mov-Ezy theatre chair, the greatest improvement in scating arrangements sinee theatres were built, has eliminated all that. Its oeeupant ean turn it to either side to allow ample passage spaee, without any one getting up.

The Mov-Ezy has proved itself the greatest individual feature of every theatre where it has been installed. Send for our beautifully illustrated catalogue and see why.

There are no music fools

You can't fool people with poor music—they may stand it while they are there, but they will never come back to hear it over again. Your public will pay you for good music. Even jazz lovers are attracted by that wonderful strain of melody that haunts the Barton Orchestral Organ syncopation, and the real music lovers find endless enjoyment in the great variety of harmony made possible with the Barton Divided Manual.

It costs less to have the right music—the Barton Organ, an instrument of a thousand emotions, can be yours for the same cost or less than an imitation. It makes a big house out of a small one and makes the big house a leader.

You can own a Barton easily—we will tell you how—write for information today.

Charles Ray Studios to Build New Offices

Prosperity among the established motion picture studios is indicated by the decision last week of the officials of Charles Ray Productions, Inc., to erect a new administration building bounded by Commonwealth avenue, Sunset Drive and Fleming street, Hollywood. This structure, which will be ornate Spanish type, will run 200 feet on Sunset Drive and 100 feet on Commonwealth, and is to be the first unit of continuous series of buildings encircling the Ray properties, all of a consistent type of architecture, as fast as the exigencies of photoplay production will permit.

Charles Ray Productions, Inc., under Mr. Ray's recent new alliance with United Artists' Corporation, has extensive plans ahead, and structural improvements and additions planned will constitute one of the most complete and decorative studios in the country. The unit about to go up will be erected by the Nance Construction Company, which has done other important work in the physical development of other studios. The design is from the architectural department of the Nance organization.

RAY'S NEW ADMINISTRATION BUILDING
To be erected at Commonwealth Avenue, Sunset Drive and Fleming Street, Hollywood.

One Incorporation Per Day at Albany

Albany, Sept. 30.—With the incorporation of the Autopitcon, Inc., of Buffalo, capitalized at $1,000,000, motion picture companies filing paper in the secretary of state's office, averaged one a day during the week ending September 30.

The directors of the Autopitcon company include Otto E. Enell and George White, of Buffalo; and Donald McGilliveary of Port Colborne, Ontario. Papers were also filed by the Milton Productions, Inc., capitalized at $10,000, with Henry A. Friedman, Morton M. Mandel and Fanny Edelman, of New York City; Children's Matinee Service Co., Inc., $100,000, Marie Louisa Fulton, John D. Fulton, New York; Oscar W. Lindquist, Boonton, N. Latvia Likes 'Em

Though only about twenty-five per cent. of the films at present exhibited in Latvia are of American make, they seem to carry off first honors for popularity, according to a report just received by the Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C., from Consul Hurley, Riga. Sixty per cent. of the films are German, it is stated, and the rest are supplied from different sources, largely pre-war Russian, some Italian and Scandinavian, and a few French.

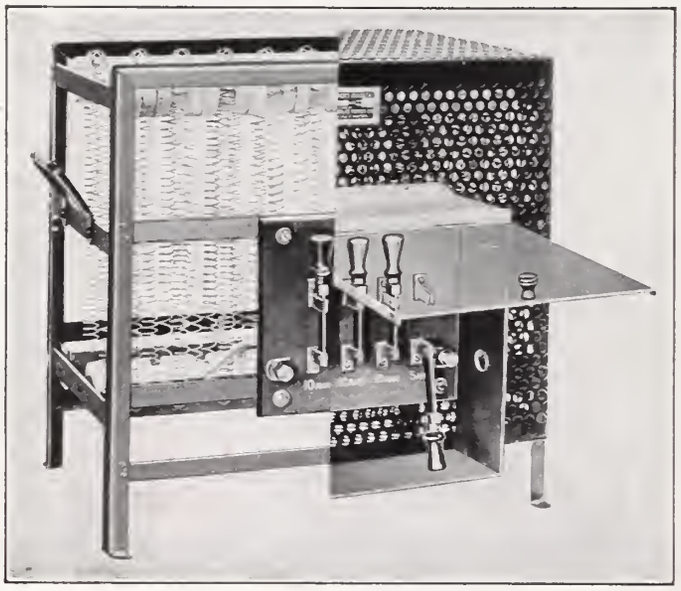
FOR BETTER PROJECTION
POWER'S PROJECTORS

Power's Multiple Coil Rheostat



THE multiple coil rheostat is so much superior to the grid rheostat we have discontinued manufacturing the latter. Power's multiple coil rheostat weighs less than 1/3 of the grid type rheostat and can easily be moved by one man. The multiple coil units are connected across two heavy brass bus bars, one coil carrying five amperes and the balance ten amperes each. The current carried thru the rheostat is easily varied in five or ten ampere steps by means of knife switches.

The loss of one coil does not affect the others, and if entire capacity of rheostat is not being used, a new coil may be immediately switched in. Coils are of a special non-corrosive wire and may be replaced in a few minutes without difficulty. They are exceptionally strong and operate at an exceedingly low temperature. As each coil carries a low amperage (not more than 10 amps) a wire of very small cross-section is used which permits perfect connections to be made to bus bars.

Power's multiple coil rheostats are made in the following sizes:

30-55 amperes	110-115 volts	60- 95 amperes
40-75 amperes	or 220-230 volts	80-125 amperes

"HEART'S HAVEN"

"Should Prove a Sure-Fire Success"

Benj. B. Hampton, producer of so many successful screen plays, has scored another triumph with the adaptation of Clara Louise Burnham's popular novel, "Heart's Haven." For here is a story that is as different in plot construction as day is from night. Based on a theme borrowed from one of the most subtle forces of nature, the story of "Heart's Haven" is carried along with surprising developments, finally culminating in a climax that is as true to life as the changes of the seasons.

Few indeed are the readers of American fiction who are not acquainted with the novels of Clara Louise Burnham. Endowed with one of the most brilliant minds of her profession, Miss Burnham has provided the public with a number of highly successful novels, of which the story of "Heart's Haven" is easily the leader.

Viewed from the angle of the box-office, "Heart's Haven" is a picture that can be depended upon to show extraordinary returns. The exploitation possibilities are practically unlimited.

What the Critics Say:

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW:
This picture will have a tremendous appeal.

M. P. NEWS:
Exudes a wholesomeness sure to be appreciated.

EXHIBITORS HERALD:
Has all the charm and simplicity and wholesomeness of Burnham novels and is a welcome change from the usual hectic drama and domestic tragedy. Its appeal is heightened by very beautiful photography throughout and several well drawn characterizations. Where audiences appreciate simple sentiment carefully portrayed it should succeed.

MORNING TELEGRAPH:
This picture is extremely well made and the cast is a fine one.
The picture is a finished piece of work.

FILM DAILY:
"Heart's Haven" should prove a sure-fire success.

SCREEN OPINIONS:
"Heart's Haven" is a picture that holds inspiration. The production is wholesome and thoroughly entertaining, and has an abundance of human interest and considerable comedy in which Frank Hayes, a tiny dog and two small children play no small part.

Gene Stratton-Porter leads all other contemporary novelists in the number of her readers and book sales. More than

10,000,000 COPIES OF HER BOOKS

have been printed and sold to English-speaking readers, giving her an estimated audience of

50,000,000 READERS and a marvelous sales record, beginning with the famous "Freckles" down to the present time of

1,645 COPIES SOLD EACH DAY FOR 18 YEARS

In addition to this matchless record of sales in the English language, there are EIGHT FOREIGN TRANSLATIONS, including the Arabic, and three Braille point editions for the blind.

The famous Bird Woman of the Limberlost country, in Indiana, is known where ever books are read. Her readers include lovers of clean, wholesome, inspiring fiction and nature studies between the ages of fifteen and ninety.

The first of her personally produced pictures, now being made with an all-star cast at the Ince Studios in Los Angeles, will be MICHAEL O'HALLORAN—a clean, simple story of real people, doing things in a sincere way, under the inspiring influence of an unusual newsboy—Michael O'Halloran, the most lovable youngster of modern fiction.

Up to June 1, 1922, the certified figures of Doubleday, Page & Company, showed that had been sold. Publishers estimate readers on a basis of five readers to the volume, which gives this novel, alone, more than FIVE MILLION READERS who will be anxious to see Mrs. Porter's own screen version of the story.

Gene Stratton-Porter has carefully selected a competent, experienced staff of picture makers to produce her films. She will be with them each day to contribute her own genius to the work, to add the little, intimate, psychological touches that have made her fiction people beloved by all the world; and to assure her millions of readers a film version which will be true in spirit to the books.

MICHAEL O'HALLORAN will be ready for the public early in the Winter. Distribution arrangements will be announced later. Meantime, exhibitors who wish to make plans for booking

LOS ANGELES EXAMINER

Los Angeles Examiner

BY DORIS ANDERSON

THERE will some day soon be an end of producers who claim that pictures cannot be both of high quality and popular. With the advent of Thomas H. Ince's "Skin Deep," and other films of the same standard, one of the best excuses for mediocre productions goes by the boards.

"Skin Deep" is a splendid picture from beginning to end. It has all the earmarks of a popular one.

The characters are made real with a predominating quality. They are good or bad or both, but for some reason other than a subtitle. They do things which make them so.

"Skin Deep" is melodramatic in parts, but it is fascinatingly different melodrama that merges smoothly into drama. It is psychological without becoming immobile. It is active without losing thoughtfulness.

The situation in itself is an intriguing one—the modern miracle of facial surgery. It is a possibility that no one can question. It is still strange and thrilling enough to be imbued with fantastic novelty.

A perfect production, tense, true, and brightly humorous. It is a picture made real by an infinity of tiny little human touches.

One cannot congratulate Hillyer enough. His sure, stern guidance is evident in every detail. Sills does as interesting piece of work as the featured lead.

Florence Vidor is charming. Marcia Manon gives a splendid portrayal. The supporting parts are given capably by Charles Clary, Winter Hall, Joe Singleton, Frank Campeau, Gertrude Astor, Muriel Francis Dana and B. H. DeLay.

Thomas H. Ince presents
"SKIN DEEP"

The story of a "gangster" whose entire character was changed through the "remaking" of his face by the mystery of modern plastic surgery. A powerful, fast moving melodrama with the Ince Punch—unique—different. It is now cleaning up for exhibitors at every showing. BOOK NOW!

Memo for Mr. Hays:

We read in The New York World that Will Hays has been asked to look into the treatment of actors by surly office boys and other guardians of the outer portals at motion picture studios.

This is a vitally important matter.

Something must be done at once.

The other day it was Something Else that Mr. Hays was going to be asked "to look into." Tomorrow it will be Still Something Else.

Well, we hope that Mr. Hays gets quick action in the case of the high and mighty studio attendants. A number of things have been called to our attention which we must ask him "to look into at once."

All vitally important matters.

An exhibitor reader in Pawtuxet, Ohio, has asked us to call to Mr. Hays' attention the quality of the cigars being dispensed by the film salesmen this season.

The salesmen, says Exhibitor Joe Glumphus, must be falling for this stuff they read about the return of the good five-center.

This is a vitally important matter.

Something must be done at once.

Mr. Hays has an opportunity here to show his mettle.

From Solid Ivory, Nebraska, comes another urgent letter that will have to be called to the attention of Mr. Hays.

The letter is signed by the secretary to Ike Ingus, the first run and last hope in Solid Ivory. Ike asks Mr. Hays to take immediate action to improve the quality of the paper used in press books, broadsides, catalogues and other free mailing matter.

Ike runs one night a week—and doesn't care much which night it is. The fifty residents of Solid Ivory don't support him very strongly. But the waste paper value of his mail matter has enabled Ike to eke out a more than comfortable existence.

Now that the waste paper market is going up Ike has visions. He thinks he may be able to save even the trouble of running that one night. It all depends on the action taken by Mr. Hays.

This is a vitally important matter.

Something must be done at once.

Mr. Hays has an opportunity here to show his mettle.

Peeved at the action of the actors, The Amalgamated Association of Office Boys has adopted a set of resolutions which will be slipped under Mr. Hays' door some morning.

The boys are up in arms over bosses who force them ninety-nine times a day to pass the lie, "Mr. Uppus is in conference," "Mr. Uppus is in the projection room and won't be free for two hours."

No complaint is made by the boys that the continual lying has a tendency to corrupt their morals. They base their plea for justice on the simple statement that the lack of originality is cramping their style.

This is a vitally important matter.

Something must be done at once.

Mr. Hays has an opportunity here to show his mettle.

These serious tangles cleared up, The International Conference of Trade Paper Editors has a problem to place before Mr. Hays.

They wish him to use his political influence to place before the Federal Trades Commission the unfair competition of Daily Racing Form.

The decision to ask Mr. Hays to look into the matter was reached after a few of the editors had made trips with their eyes open through 729 Seventh Avenue and along the film rows of Chicago and some other exchange cities.

They claim that the Release Chart has no chance in competition with the Past Performance Index.

This is a vitally important matter.

Something must be done at once.

Mr. Hays has an opportunity here to show his mettle.

B. P. A. Incorporates

Plans To Stimulate Public Interest In Pictures

The "B. P. A. of the World" filed papers of incorporation with the secretary of state's office in Albany, N. Y., the past week, and named as its directors Dr. Robert Watson, Mrs. Harry Sternberger and John A. Quinn, of New York; Charles A. McMahon, of Washington, D. C., and Ilsley Boone, of Oakland, N. J.

The papers of incorporation as filed with the Secretary of State, outline the objects of the corporation in part, as follows:

"To prevent as far as possible unfair criticism and propaganda from being circulated against the motion picture art and profession;

"To secure freedom from unjust or unlawful exactions and regulations;

"To stimulate public interest and patronage, and to generally elevate the standard of motion pictures and plays."

The principal office of the concern will be located in New York city. In addition to the ones named as directors, Dan H. Dugger, Jr., Emil H. Eppright and Edward S. Shaw are also interested in the concern.

Big Gathering There

Women's Organizations Pledge Co-operation With Crandall Theatres

The interest caused by the newly established Public Service and Educational Department of the Crandall Theatres, in Washington, D. C., was, it is said, demonstrated by the distinguished gathering that responded to the invitation of Mrs. Harriet Hawley Locher, director of the new public relations department, to attend a reception and tea in honor of Mrs. Woodallen Chapman, chairman of the Motion Picture Division of the General Federation of Women's Clubs and a member of Will H. Hays committee of twenty, in her studio in the Metropolitan Theatre building on Tuesday afternoon, October 3.

Every important woman's movement in the National Capital was represented, all pledged themselves and their respective organizations to wholehearted co-operation with Harry M. Crandall and his staff in their effort to make the Crandall Theatres not merely places of amusement but community centers of genuine value to residents of Washington.

Nolan in New York

Harry T. Nolan, president of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., of Colorado, reached New York Monday and began serving as a member of the First National Rotating Committee. Mr. Nolan is a successful Denver exhibitor.

They're Out of Luck!

Eight years ago Spyros and Charles Skouras were bus boys in a St. Louis hotel. Now they're among the leading exhibitors in that Missouri city. Fast work! But eight years isn't nearly long enough to qualify either of them as the Daddy of Them All. On the other hand, John Karzin's experience dates from 1905 and so he's nominated. See Page 663.

Added to Staff

W. B. Frank, general sales manager of Associated Exhibitors, has announced the addition of three new men to the organization's already large staff of sales representatives. They are Charles A. Kuehle, who joins the Cincinnati forces; W. W. Rowland also has been named to the Cincinnati office; C. H. Stewart has been added to Associated's sales staff in St. Louis.

Holds Convention

M. P. T. O. of Missouri to Meet October 18 and 19

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri will hold its semi-annual convention at Excelsior Springs, Mo., October 18 and 19. Among those who will be guests of the organization and will address the members of the association will be President Sydney S. Cohen, of the national exhibitor organization; Will Hays, of the producers division; Senator James A. Reed, Governor Arthur M. Hyde, of Missouri, and many others of importance.

From every indication it appears that there will be the largest attendance ever had at any of the exhibitors' conventions held in the western states. Exhibitors from other states have expressed their intention of attending the Missouri convention. President Pramer, of Nebraska; President Van Praag, of Kansas; President W. A. Steffes, of Minnesota, and President Cady, of Michigan, have all signified their intention of attending.

Among the subjects to be discussed will be the Music Tax, Lambert Bill and legislative program.

Finds Business Good

South American Outlook Said To Be Flourishing

E. E. Shauer announces that John L. Day, South American representative of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, returned Monday, October 2, on the Pan-American from a three-months' visit to Rio de Janeiro, where he made arrangements for increased Paramount distribution during the coming year. The Paramount offices in Rio de Janeiro and Sao Paulo were found to be in flourishing condition, the business of the last year having shown an important increase over the preceding year.

Prospects for the new year are unusually bright, according to Mr. Day, as the demand for high grade productions is constantly increasing. Foreign competition has made no serious inroads upon the market for the best American productions, in his opinion, and will not do so in the future, unless the high standard set by leading American producers is allowed to lapse.

McCabe in Town

Vincent J. McCabe, Canadian manager for Associated First National Pictures, Inc., came to New York recently after visiting First National Exchanges at St. Johns, Montreal, Winnipeg and Calgary. He said the business outlook in Canada was bright, that exhibitors were optimistic and, in some instances, were paying higher prices than ever before.

Throng Attends Convention of Michigan M. P. T. O.

McLaren Succeeds Cody as President—Cash Collection $11,000

(By Wire to Moving Picture World)

Flint, Mich., October 10.

THE third annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan opened here Tuesday with the largest attendance in its history and with delegates from almost every sectional unit in the country on hand to look in on the business sessions of the body which has been characterized as the best functioning of all those in the national personnel.

The early part of Tuesday morning was devoted to the registration of delegates, followed by the visiting of various exhibits displayed by Detroit film exchanges. It was close to 11 a. m. when Claude Cady, of Lansing, president of the Michigan organization, opened the first business session. The address of welcome was made by William H. McKeighan, Mayor of Flint, and was followed by a short talk by William Holler, managing director of the Flint Chamber of Commerce. Charles Garfield, of Flint, chairman of the convention committee, responded.

President Cady delivered his annual address, summarizing the work transacted by the organization during his administration and emphasized during his address the fact that exhibitors should contract only for such pictures as they can actually play and that any other procedure is unfair to the exchange and detrimental to the exhibitor. He stated that during the coming year it will take $25,000 to finance the organization and that the five per cent. rental tax abolishment had saved the exhibitors $240,000.

The following committees were then announced: Resolutions—J. R. Denniston Monroe, chairman; Charles Carlyle, Saginaw; H. C. Schram, Kalamazoo; A. J. Kleist, Pontiac; Kenneth Fitzpatrick, Chicago. Budget Committee—W. S. Butterfield, chairman; Fred Rummler, Detroit; Herb. Weil, Port Huron; Elwyn Simons, Adrian; H. G. Hall, Detroit. Finance—J. C. Ritten, Detroit, chairman; Blair McElroy, Chicago; Joe Denniston, Monroe; J. M. Slocum, Detroit; H. G. Hall, Detroit.

Dehull M. Travers, of Flint, an attorney, extended a welcome in behalf of the Rotarians, the Flint Chamber of Commerce and Flint Lawyers' Club, and touched upon co-operation in a short address. This concluded the first business session and then the delegates were taken by automobiles for an inspection of the Buick automobile plant.

The Tuesday afternoon session was opened by the reading of the treasurer's report by Fred Rummler, showing the association to be in a healthy financial condition. H. M. Richey, general manager of the organization, made a detailed report of the activities of the association during the past year and at the conclusion, he was accorded a unanimous vote of thanks for his untiring labors in behalf of the members.

M. J. O'Toole, head of the Public Service Department of the National Association, complimented the Michigan organization for its efficient methods in setting an example for all other state organizations in the country. He gave a detailed report of how the five per cent. tax bill was eliminated from the statutes. Mr. O'Toole also outlined the work being done by the National Association and paid high compliments to the sagacity and leadership of the national president, Sydney Cohen. The record booking on Movie Chats by the Michigan organization was also highly lauded by Mr. O'Toole.

The reading of minutes for last year's meeting by H. C. Hall was ordered suspended, following a motion instituted by James C. Ritter. Telegrams extending good wishes were received and read from Rhode Island, Kansas, Illinois and Missouri state organizations. Brief remarks on organization were made by Martin Smith, secretary of the Ohio organization, and W. F. Woodhull, of New Jersey. General Manager Richey then announced the various entertainment features for the remainder of the convention.

The banquet Tuesday evening was one of the most colorful events in the history of Michigan motion pictures. During the dinner and between speeches, entertainment in the form of vaudeville and specialties was provided through the courtesy of the Flint exhibitors. J. R. Denniston, of Monroe, acted as toastmaster. Short addresses were delivered by the following: Claude Cady, president; Sydney S. Cohen, national president; Courtland Smith, representing Will H. Hays; M. J. O'Toole, from the national association; W. S. McLaren, Jackson; Alfred J. Murphy, legal counsel for the Michigan association; A. J. Moeller, general manager, New York; W. A. True, Connecticut; W. A. Steffes, Minnesota; W. F. Woodhull, New Jersey, and a number of other prominent state and city officials.

A gentleman acquainted with the moving picture industry will leave for England and France in a few weeks and will have opportunity to perform any commission entrusted to him. References, if desired.

Wirt McLaren Elected

Flint, Mich., Oct. 11.

(By Wire to Moving Picture World.)

THE first topic for discussion at the Tuesday morning session was that of insurance, by Howard Luce, of the Mills Mutual, who are now insuring exhibitors at a saving of 25 per cent. The main address of the morning was by Sydney Cohen, summarizing the activities of the national body since the Washington convention. He laid particular stress upon the necessity of continued co-operation and the support of the national association. Al Steffes, of Minnesota, and William True, of Connecticut, made brief remarks, the latter discussing the proposed new standard form of booking contract with distributors.

At noon the ladies were tendered a luncheon. Phil Gleichman, Detroit, reported for the credentials committee. Wirt McLaren, Jackson, Mich., touched on the amount necessary to run the state organization for the ensuing year. Blair McElroy, of Chicago, pleaded with the delegates to make liberal contributions in the way of dues, the delegates present responding to the extent of approximately $11,000. It will be an easy matter to secure the necessary balance

Rowland Urges More Attention Be Given Continuity Writing

WHAT are the rank and file of producers, directors, stars, continuity writers and others going to learn from the best of this season's motion pictures? Are they going to profit by them? Or will they go along in haphazard fashion ignoring logical continuity and otherwise turning out pictures that aggravate the public?

These questions were put to Richard A. Rowland, a member of the executive forces of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., who for many years has studied production from every angle and who is an expert on the making of pictures. As president of Metro Pictures Corporation, Mr. Rowland made a big name for himself, both as a producer and executive. As senior member of the firm of Rowland and Clark, with extensive theatre holdings in Western Pennsylvania, he has demonstrated his ability as an exhibitor.

"For the last ten years we have been educating our patrons up to the idea of seeing 'better pictures,'" said Mr. Rowland. "And it has only been within the last ten years that we have had discriminating audiences. We have brought more people into our theatres by showing better pictures. And now we must live up to the standard we have set—or what happens? Use your own imagination.

"To my way of thinking, while the director is a tremendous force in good picture making, the continuity writer is just as important—in some respects more important, because it is he who must visualize and then construct the story which millions will see on the screen. If the story—or play—is poorly put together, then a poor continuity writer is to blame.

"Our early productions were nothing but experiments. We forged ahead gradually, improving in photography, etc. We engaged the interest of the public. We profited by that interest, and at the same time led the public to expect much of us. We now have reached that stage in our development when we must live up to what the public expects of us.

"And what does the public expect? Good stories, told in a logical and convincing manner. Who is primarily responsible for turning out stories of that kind? The scenarist, or continuity writer. The producer gets an outline for a great play. It has big dramatic situations. He talks it over with his director, his star. Then the story is turned over to the continuity writer, who must make it a smooth piece of machinery with logical situations.

"Too often the continuity writer is—let us be charitable and say 'careless.' The machinery of the play is poorly constructed. The situations are not logical. The picture is shown to the public which, in these times, is discriminating, and often insults their intelligence. This is our danger.

"If every producer would bear in mind that his picture is 60 percent made in the scenario department, there would be more big time pictures. The picture should never be made worse than the story. It is up to the continuity writer to see that the story is developed logically before it reaches the camera, and it is up to the director to see that the picture lives up to the strength of story and continuity. We are facing a big danger in finding out how we are going to satisfy the public in motion pictures.

"The remedy is that we must have better scenario writers; the stories must be made more logical.

"We have improved from the standpoint of direction. Scenario writing has great room for improvement; in fact, the scenario writing as it now is being turned out is, to me, a weak spot in the making of pictures to-day. It is weak not only in the continuity of stories, the arrangement of logical situations, but in its seeming lack of knowledge as to what actually pleases or displeases the entertainment-loving public.

"How many of our scenario writers are painstaking enough to systematically go to theatres and study the effect of plays on audiences? How many of them talk to exhibitors and obtain ideas? Until they do these things they will not grasp the angle of 'showmanship' which is essential to the artistic as well as financial success of pictures. It is only by getting showmanship angles that scenario writers will begin injecting into their stories novel or unusual situations brought out in a logical manner.

"The scenario writer of to-day is too much inclined to give way to 'hackneyism' in his or her writing. And he or she will get away from that by studying the effect of plays on audiences."

Legal Battle Goes On

Says Statements Are "Irrelevant, Impertinent and Scandalous"

That the legal conflict between the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and Rodolph Valentino is not confined to the temporary injunction obtained by the Famous Players, restraining Valentino from engaging his services to any one else during the term of a contract they have with him, is disclosed in the N. Y. Supreme Court, on a motion that will come up for a hearing on October 19, wherein the Famous Players ask to have certain allegations in the answer of Valentino to their suit stricken out as "irrelevant, impertinent, and scandalous."

The petition made on behalf of the Famous Players corporation by Ralph H. Kohn, one of its officers, denies that his corporation practised any deception on Valentino when they executed the contract with him for his services. Kohn moves to have stricken from Valentino's answer an allegation wherein Valentino charges Rudolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky and others with "the use of unfair methods of competition in violation of Section 5 of the Act of Congress," thereby implying that the "unfair and oppressive practises" of Famous Players constitute them to be a Trust.

Finally comes the disclosure that Valentino has set up a counterclaim in which he asks $350,000 damages from the Famous Players-Lasky corporation, as a result of the alleged breaching by them of their contract, and of their alleged false representations to him concerning his contract.

Ray Takes Rest

Charles Ray, whose newest picture, "A Tailor-Made Man," a United Artists' release, is playing to big audiences everywhere, with Mrs. Ray recently enjoyed his third vacation in ten years, when he and Mrs. Ray spent two days at Catalina Island.

Holds Big Meeting

Exhibitors of Western Pennsylvania In Interesting Session

Although but a handful of exhibitors were present, the meeting of the Board of Managers of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania, held at the General Forbes Hotel, Pittsburgh, Friday noon, October 6, was the longest and most interesting session held in some time by the local organization. Many important problems were considered, and another general meeting and luncheon scheduled in the banquet hall of the same hotel on Friday, October 20.

Among those present at this meeting were: E. T. Peter of Dallas, Texas, former national treasurer of the organization; Dennis A. Harris, Hyman Goldberg, O. F. Krugh, John Newman, H. B. Kester, Harry Handel, Max Engelberg, Joseph Wagman, Fred Herrington, Harry Davis and Jerome Casper.

Zukor Scents Rival's Plot in Lasky Rumors

Rumors Finally Reach Publication and Bring Vigorous Denial

Editor's Note—Adolph Zukor's denial of rumors that Jesse Lasky and Cecil De Mille were to sever their connection with the Famous Players-Lasky organization takes on importance not so much because of the denial, but because—way back behind the scenes—there seems to be something doing that has caused Mr. Zukor to "hit the ceiling." The usual Film Row rumor, even the one that achieves publication, rarely secures more than a passing smile from the F. P. head.. Occasionally there is the most formal of denials. But the following vigorous statement, both because of what it says in type and what it means between the lines, makes most interesting reading.

THE Famous Players-Lasky statement follows: Unqualified denial of published reports that Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was about to sever his connections with that company was made yesterday both by Mr. Lasky and Adolph Zukor, president of the company.

Informed in Hollywood that a vaudeville paper had printed the report, Mr. Lasky sent the following telegram of denial to the editor of the publication and also to the New York World, which reprinted the story:

"I have just been advised that you have printed a story to effect that I contemplate leaving Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. As this story is absolutely untrue and without foundation I will appreciate it if you will correct your statement by printing my absolute denial. I have no thought of leaving Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and my relations with its chief executive and president, Mr. Zukor, are most cordial as they have always been in the past."

In making public his and Mr. Lasky's denial, Mr. Zukor was vigorous in his denunciation of the shameless trickery which would foment such rumors and the irresponsibility of newspapers which would print them without verification.

"I have no doubt that this story was inspired by men in this industry who wish to thwart the progress which Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has been making," he said. "If this be the case then the newspapers which printed this baseless rumor should in justice to themselves divulge the name of the persons who made them their dupes by supplying them false information. If the papers do not divulge these names we are justified in believing the story was made up of whole cloth in the newspaper offices and is a brazen attempt to make a trade sensation at the expense of this company.

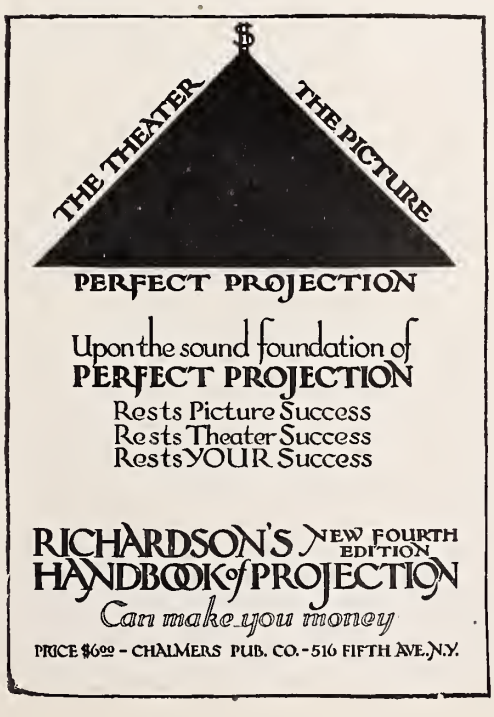
"In support of my original belief that the rumor was inspired I wish to cite a telegram which I received today from Cecil B. DeMille:

"'Received wire yesterday from New York producing firm saying they had definite information I was leaving Famous Players, and last night a representative of another big firm called on me making same statement positively, both firms, of course, laying proposition before me. What is it all about? Kind regards.'

"To this telegram I replied as follows:

"'Answering your wire my personal opinion is that these malicious rumors are being circulated by other producing companies who lament having been left in the shade through the policy which we adopted last winter, which has enabled us to produce and now deliver product of a higher standard and in a quantity which no other producing company has equaled. They are also jealous of our policy of having every contract carry a play date. This has put us so much ahead of other companies and we have established such tremendous confidence and good will among exhibitors that in an endeavor to shake that confidence and break down the advantage we have deservedly achieved they are using every conceivable means however sinister such as the ridiculous story Variety printed last week and the rumor to which you refer. I personally and my associates here are all with you one hundred per cent. and have not the slightest doubt in the world that your feeling toward the company is the same. Will you let me know the names of the people who sent you wires and approached you as I think that will enable us to get to the bottom of the affair. Kindest regards.'

"I think the telegrams I have cited speak for themselves. In making them public I merely want to nail these lies before they wriggle away from me, and I know that I am supported by every right-thinking person in the film industry. These rumors have done us no harm, and cannot do us harm, but they are evidence that there are still left in the picture business a few men who will stop at nothing to win their ends. But the day has gone by in this industry when such tactics can be condoned and I hope to drag these people into the light where everybody can see them for what they are."



Strikes Prevented

United Action Stops Walkout In 79 Cities

Local 95 of the I. A. T. S. E. and Projection Machine Operators at Ottawa, Ontario, celebrated the 25th Anniversary of its establishment by a banquet in the Canadian Capital on October 4, when the guests and speakers included Charles C. Shay, International president of the association; Mayor F. H. Plant, of Ottawa; Controller John Cameron, representing the Allied Trades and Labor Association of Ottawa; William McKinnon, editor of the I. A. T. S. E. Journal, and various local exhibitors, including Captain Frank Goodale, of Loew's Theatre; John T. Moxley, Jack Soanes, Edward Charleston and others. Jack Delaney, president of the Musicians Protective Union, was also present.

President Shay spoke of the value of united action, and pointed out that strikes of theatre employees were threatened in no less than 79 cities in the United States and Canada this season, but, through preventative measures and successful negotiations, all but three of the strikes had been averted.

Hays and Eastman Agree that There Is No Need of Censorship

ROCHESTER'S new Eastman Theatre has been inspected by Will Hays and by him was pronounced "the theatre ideal." Mr. Hays made a trip to Rochester for the sole purpose of inspecting the theatre. "It is beautiful," he said: "it is the splendid realization of the dream of a great man; it is incomparable."

Mr. Hays had been invited to come to Rochester for the opening of the theatre early in September, but found it impossible. He assured George Eastman at that time that he would come at an early date. In Rochester Mr. Hays and his party were guests of Mr. Eastman and in addition to inspecting the theatre paid a visit to Kodak Park, where the bulk of motion picture film is made.

Mr. Hays vigorously denounced censorship in an interview with a representative of Moving Picture World. He said censorship is un-American and unnecessary. He also sees great possibilities for the screen cementing friendship among all races and creeds, because the screen speaks a universal language which all seeing persons can understand.

Hays believes that the "crop of pictures" which is now being released will not need any censorship, but he holds to the idea that censor boards will "mutilate pictures which need no censure."

Mr. Eastman, too, expressed himself as opposed to state censorship. "Censor boards need not exist," Mr. Eastman said. "Let all the necessary censorship be at the source. Let the producers stop making pictures which any can criticise. It is up to the makers. If nothing is sent out which needs censoring, then surely there will be no more censorship boards. I agree with Mr. Hays that censorship is un-American and unnecessary."

International peace is bound to come through pictures, Hays said. Wars cannot be fought if the nations know one another's ideals, ideas and opportunities. Armies of men which see in living, vivid motion picture stories the history of a country are bound to learn that fighting against such a country is wrong.

"Motion pictures are sounding the death knell of fighting," Hays stated. "Right now pictures are going to foreign countries showing America as it is, as we know it. European countries are also using motion pictures to build up a better feeling among themselves.

"The motion picture I have come to visualize as a great three-fold instrument for good. First as an educational means, for children learn quicker by pictures through vision than from printed words. Second as a means for promoting international amity, and last as an amusement for millions.

"There are 20,000,000 people whom we of the industry must serve. And we cannot be false to this trust. We must give pictures worthy of attention and worthy of regard. The motion picture, being the sole amusement of millions and the part entertainment of other millions, must be a power for good if it is to exist.

"The crop of pictures coming out this fall are the best possible. They need no censorship and stand alone on their greatness. That does not mean spectacular greatness alone, but greatness as lesson bringers, drama teachers and comedy-laughter producers."

Cohen, O'Toole and True Start On Extended Middle West Trip

A SOMEWHAT extended trip, which will take in a number of places in the Middle West and may ultimately be made to reach the Pacific Coast, has been arranged by President Sydney S. Cohen, of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

President Cohen left New York on this tour, Saturday, October 7. He was accompanied by M. J. O'Toole, chairman of the National Public Service Committee; President W. A. True, of the Connecticut Motion Picture Theatre Owners; M. E. Comerford, executive head of the Comerford Circuit of Theatres and a member of the National Board of Directors, and others.

The itinerary of the party will include state conventions of Motion Picture Theatre Owners in different states and meetings with exhibitor organizations in many of the large centers.

The first state convention will be of the Michigan Motion Picture Theatre Owners in Flint.

Other conventions will be attended at Indianapolis, Chicago and Kansas City, Mo. If suitable time arrangements can be made, Mr. Cohen will meet with the theatre owners in convention at Omaha, Nebraska and Denver. It is expected that the state meetings and leading centers visited will take in about twelve states with the prospect of extending this program if circumstances permit.

On the tour, Mr. Cohen and other members of the party will carry the message of national organization and its attendant efforts on behalf of the industry to the theatre owner. It will be pointed out that, as is the case in the affairs of the Government itself, all official and other activities logically and properly revolve about the national center.

The work of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, in the matter of co-ordinating exhibitor activity and rendering the same effective in a national way and in the states, will be clearly indicated.

It is Mr. Cohen's purpose in meeting with theatre owners on this tour, to lay before them some of the major evils affecting the industry, point out definite means through which the same may be eradicated and arrange for their complete co-operation to that end. The lines of action thus laid down by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America are very far-reaching and comprehensive.

Talking Films

Dr. Lee de Forest, who recently announced that he has perfected the talking film, is back from Germany and has taken a studio to prepare his first talking films for the public. They probably will appear at the Rialto Theatre, New York, because Hugo Riesenfeld, director of the Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion, is co-operating with Dr. de Forest. His process has sound translated into electricity, photographed and then rendered in sound waves again.

Who is the Daddy of Them All? John Karzin, of St. Louis, is nominated.

Bay State Citizens Launch Anti-Censor Campaign

Brig.-Gen. Cole Heads Influential State-Wide Committee

LEADING Bay State citizens have just joined hands in the first concrete attempt to mould public sentiment in opposition to the state censorship act, which is to be voted upon under a referendum at the state election, barely a month hence. It is a short time to engage in such a stupendous project, and to attempt to counteract the months of propaganda work the proponents of the censorship plan have given to this work, but much can be accomplished in so short a time, and it is evident the campaign from now on is to be a strenuous one.

This state-wide committee, which is headed by Brig.-Gen. Charles H. Cole, bases its opposition to the state censorship of moving pictures, as proposed under the law passed by the last Legislature and held in abeyance by the referendum appeal, on several underlying principles of real Americanism.

It holds at the outset that a state censorship is an unwarranted interference with the rights of the people; that it savors more of Prussian autocracy than American democracy, and that it places absolute power in the control of one man to determine what the other 3,800,000 people shall be allowed to see on the screen.

"Un-American Authority"

It also declares that it gives this man the un-American authority to promote screen propaganda for his friends, and against those whom he dislikes, for social, business, political or other purposes. It can be used as a weapon to destroy organized labor, or to destroy legitimate business. It is an entering wedge to censor away the democratic ideals for which American heroes have shed their life blood.

An interesting thing about this new committee is its personnel, which includes both men and women widely known throughout the state and particularly prominent in the several localities where they live, clergymen, prominent business men, veterans of the World War, sons of immigrants, representatives of sturdy old Yankee families, and others, all of whom have set ideas as to how far a government should be allowed to go on infringing upon the rights of the people.

This committee, which is to work independently from the committee which was appointed last Sunday afternoon by the Boston Central Labor Union, comprises the following:

Chairman, Brig.-Gen. Charles H. Cole; vice chairman, Judge Edward B. O'Brien, of Lynn; treasurer, Former Congressman William H. Carter, of Needham; secretary, Mrs. Albert T. Leatherbee, of Boston.

The complete membership, otherwise, includes Brig.-Gen. John H. Dunn and W. Irving Bullard, Boston; the Rev. William H. Geohegan, of New Bedford; the Rev. Caleb E. Fisher, of Lowell; Col. Peter H. Corr, of Taunton; Capt. Harold Winslow, of New Bedford; Major Carroll J. Swan, of Boston; Major Charles R. Cabot, of Boston; Col. Warren Sweetser, of Quincy; Capt. James E. Donovan, of Lawrence; Major H. D. Comerais, of Newton; Dr. Joseph Santosuosso, of Boston; Dr. Everett A. Bates, of Springfield.

Dr. Edwin Howard Brigham, of Brookline; Dr. Timothy J. Reardon, of Boston; Mrs. Randolph Frothingham, of Boston; Mrs. Arthur W. Marsh, of Worcester; Mrs. William A. Robinson, Jr., of New Bedford; Miss Sybil H. Holmes, of Boston; Mrs. Walter Hartstone, of Brookline; Mrs. Grace F. Cole, of Brookline; Henry Fletcher, of Brighton; R. W. McNeil, of Boston; James C. Fair, of Natick; Edward A. Filene, of Boston; Richard E. Warner, of Taunton; Charles S. Baxter, of Boston.

Bernard F. Wolf, of Boston; Simon Vorenberg, of Boston; Walter M. Pratt, of Boston; Charles S. Ashley, of New Bedford; Joseph Nolan, of Watertown; Abbott F. Lawrence, of Taunton; John A. Brackett, of Lawrence; George E. Curran, of Boston; Mark M. Duff, of New Bedford; Richard M. Suggatt, of Lawrence; Hugh H. Hickey, of Lynn; John G. O'Brien, of Wollaston; John Collins, of Pittsfield, and John McInnis, of Manchester.

Influential Citizens

To the citizens of Massachusets, these names stand for much. Gen. Cole is a former Boston fire and police commissioner, former state adjutant general, former commander of the state American Legion department, and a war veteran with gallant service, emerging as a major-general. Then there is Charles Ashley, for twenty years mayor of New Bedford; Edward A. Filene, Simon Vorenberg and Bernard M. Wolf, big Boston merchants, and others who might be picked out, all eminent in their various fields.

In introducing itself and its objects to the public, this committee promulgates its opposition to state censorship in a statement in part as follows:

"We believe that the institution of a state censor is a dangerous precedent against local regulation and the establishment of an autocratic central control that savors more of Prussian bureaucracy than American democracy.

"We condemn the giving of autocratic power to one man and his deputy to dictate what over 3,000,000 citizens of this state shall see upon the screens.

"We know that censorship of motion pictures is merely the opening wedge to censorship of all information, instruction and amusement offered by books, magazines, drama, newspapers and advertising, as such purpose was openly proclaimed from the floor of the state Senate chamber by a supporter of this measure.

The Evils Foreseen

"We know that it is a physical impossibility for one man and his deputy to review sufficient films to supply the 5,000 exhibitors in this state, and that censorship means curtailment of exhibitions, higher admission prices, and the forcing out of business of many smaller houses, resulting in the handicapping of instruction and entertainment which rightfully belongs to the public.

"We consider the taxpayers sufficiently burdened without instituting a new and expensive department for the suppression of individual rights and privileges, without any advantage to public taste, morals or pleasure."

It is indicated that the committee will begin at once a state-wide campaign to educate the people upon the evils of censorship and that this campaign will be continued right up to election.

Stereoscopic Films

Perfect Pictures Holds Successful Showing in Los Angeles

Los Angeles—Wednesday evening, September 27, was signalized by an unusual event. The occasion was the first public demonstration of the Fairall process of stereoscopic motion pictures, which was held before a large audience of motion picture people at the Ambassador Theatre.

Following a prologue showing views of the Yosemite Valley, a five-reel feature, "The Power of Love," was screened, and the entire performance was enthusiastically applauded.

In viewing these pictures, each spectator is provided with a pair of what may be termed "spectacles," one glass being red and the other blue. When so equipped, you are apt to forget that you are looking at a picture because the scenes seem so real and lifelike that you imagine you are seeing the living characters enacting their various roles. The picture takes on the aspect of real life and the audience experiences the effect of gazing through an open door upon the real panorama of nature and life itself instead of visualized shadows on the screen. With this process, the third dimension on the screen has graduated from a theory into an actual reality.

The tiniest leaf, the smallest pebble and flowers in all their delicate beauty are seen in full detail. The background, even though miles away, is in full perspective even when the players in the foreground are shown acting out their part of the picture; the handicap of being unable to show a detailed background while focusing on the foreground having been overcome.

This presentation was held by Perfect Pictures, an organization which has leased the production rights. Harry K. Fairall is the inventor of this process and it has been perfected after many years of experimenting. There are projected on the screen simultaneously two positive prints superimposed, which have been photographed at the same time through a single camera having two lenses, separated a distance equivalent to the position of the human eyes. Viewing the pictures through the spectacles having a blue and a red lens, which are complementary colors, makes possible stereoscopic vision, each eye seeing a single picture of its own, which is necessary to obtain relief and perspective. It is stated that with this process there is no distortion of the picture when viewed from any part of the theatre, the front corner seats being as good as the centre seats.

An important feature of this process is the fact that the picture can be projected on a standard projection machine without the use of a lot of special equipment.

Perfect Pictures is headed by Eliott Sparling and Daniel Gamble, and the company has leased the rights to this invention from Mr. Fairall and John Sward, who control the patents.—W. E. KEEFE.

Bank Loan Plan

A plan to enable producers and distributors to obtain bank credit, which under present conditions it is sometimes difficult for them to do, has been worked out by the National Agency Company, Inc., in conjunction with the National Surety Company.

The loans which producers or distributors wish to make from the banks are to be bonded by the agency and surety companies, thus assuring the banks against loss and allowing the borrowers to obtain funds with a minimum of trouble.

Loans will be bonded only when approved contracts with exhibitors or state right buyers have been signed in sufficient amount to justify the desired loan.

The offices of the National Agency Company, Inc., are in the Candler Building, 220 W. 42d Street, New York.

from the exhibitors who did not attend the convention.

Joe Denniston, Monroe, presented the following resolutions: A vote of thanks to the mayor of Flint, newspapers of Flint, Flint Chamber of Commerce, Claude Cady, James Ritter, Charles Garfield, Sydney Cohen, visiting national directors and the board of Michigan directors, all of whom had helped to make the convention a success. A vote of appreciation to the Film Club of Detroit, for their splendid co-operation in carrying out the present trade rules was made. Resolution petitioning producers not to give more than thirty days' protection to the Detroit first run houses of features.

A resolution requesting Michigan newspapers not to accept any motion picture advertising that was suggestive, misrepresentative, or salacious. A vote of thanks to the national association for its work on non-taxable music. A resolution expressing regret and hope of speedy recovery for Dr. Francis Holley, now ill at the Mayo Hospital, Rochester, Minn.

Commending Thomas A. Edison for his efforts to dignify American music, a vote of appreciation to United States Senator Robert L. Owen, from Oklahoma, for the kind reference he recently made on the floor of the Senate in behalf of the motion picture industry. A. J. Moeller, of the national association, outlined the work he was doing in behalf of non-taxable music. Blair McElroy, Chicago, in behalf of the directors presented Claude Cady with a beautiful gold watch.

The following new officers were elected: Wirt S. McLaren, Jackson, president; Phil Gleichman, Detroit, vice-president; Harlan T. Hall, Detroit, secretary; Fred Rumler, Detroit, treasurer, board of directors; W. S. Butterfield, Battle Creek; Claude Cady, Lansing; J. M. Slocum, Detroit; Fred Delodder, Detroit; Fred Wurth, Ann Arbor; Herb Weil, Port Huron; Charles Carlisle, Saginaw; Joe Denniston, Monroe; Charles Garfield, Flint; A. J. Kleist, Pontiac. Jackson was selected as the next convention city.

Combine Forces

Paramount and Skouras Will Hold Equal Interest in Two St. Louis Theatres

In accord with the general policy of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to co-operate with independent exhibiting interests wherever possible, negotiations have been practically completed with Skouras Bros., of St. Louis, Mo., whereby the Missouri Theatre and the Grand Central Theatre in that city will become permanent homes for the Paramount Pictures.

To this end a new company will be formed, to be known as the Missouri-Grand Central Corporation, the stock of which will be equally divided between Skouras Bros. and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The house management of the two theatres will be exclusively in the hands of Skouras Bros. In the general management of the combined properties, Herschel Stuart will be the representative of the Famous Players.

While it is the purpose of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to play their extended run pictures at the Grand Central Theatre, the best productions of other producers will be shown at both houses.

The new company will have six directors, three representing Skouras Bros. and three representing the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Those who will serve for the first year are S. R. Kent, Spyros Skouras, Charles Skouras, Harold B. Franklin, Arthur Stickney and Ralph C. LiBeau.

Arrangements have also been made for the showing of Paramount Pictures in other of the Skouras theatres. In the operation of these theatres, Paramount will not be interested.

Legit Booking Congestion An Exhibitor Blessing

Syndicate Situation Forces Immediate First Run Releases

THAT the prevalent reluctance of legitimate theatres to lease their houses to film distributors for special showing and exploitation of big features, will eventually result in the complete elimination of the $2 and $1.50 metropolitan and key city exhibitions was hinted at this week in developments observed by shrewd and careful showmen.

Right now distributors of supers or specials are up against a stone wall for the want of legitimate houses in which to exploit their product. The congested booking situation in legitimate circles, however, has brought about a condition that is forcing the distributors to abandon their "road showing" plans and book these pictures into the picture houses.

The Shuberts have already announced that they will renew no leases with motion picture distributors now utilizing their houses. A. L. Erlanger, who is now associated with the booking syndicate controlled by the Shuberts and involving virtually all the important theatre owners in the country, has taken a similar step. It was only out of respect and courtesy for Douglas Fairbanks, who is a warm friend of George M. Cohan, that the latter, whose attractions are booked through the consolidated booking offices, consented to give that star-producer use of the George M. Cohan Theatre in Chicago for the world premier showing of "Robin Hood" on October 16.

Mr. Fairbanks made a special trip to New York to use his influence with showmen for a big Broadway house, but they refused with the result that Doug had to do business with William Fox who has consented to give him use of one of the houses on which he has a lease. Because of a contract made several years ago D. W. Griffith always will be assured of a showing for any of his pictures at Selwyn's Apollo Theatre, where his latest special, "One Exciting Night," opens late this month. In Boston this picture opened at Tremont Temple, an auditorium located near the Common, which is booked by a committee representative of the congregation of that famous institution.

Virtually all the big companies have made advances to the booking moguls for dates at their theatres, but in vain. Fact is that scores of companies are now travelling on the road because of a marked dearth of houses in the metropolitan centre. Irving Berlin's "Music Box Revue" was forced to leave New York at a time when demand for seats was the greatest in the history of the meteoric run of that production. The show was moved to Boston, where it replaced "Sally" at the Colonial, despite the fact that the latter show could have remained in the Hub City for at least five more weeks. "Good Morning Dearie," another big success, will be switched from Chicago to Boston, with indications that several other important plays now making record top money will have to be switched, because of the congestion.

These switching tactics, however, are far from clearing the situation. As a matter of fact they have had a tendency of completely upsetting the plans of the bookers. This has resulted in a virtual choking of the road theatres, which for the past two years owing to a lack of productions, have welcomed pictures. However, the picture policy at top figures proved uncertain, for it did not take the public long to ascertain that it was only a question of time when they could see the same picture at their favorite house for less than half or one-third the price charged at the legit theatre. This situation forced many theatres to be dark for long periods at a time.

The unexpected shutting down of these houses brought on by the public knowledge that sooner or later these $1.50 and $2 pictures would be shown at picture houses at greatly reduced prices, prompted the powers that be to do some tall thinking. The upkeep of these houses, when dark, always furnished the syndicate men with a perplexing problem that was in a way solved through the organization of the Shubert vaudeville units which took care of some 40 ideal theatres in important cities east of the Mississippi River. These were the houses that were ordinarily open for picture propositions.

The invasion of the Shubert units, together with an increase of 150 per cent. in productions that have hit the road and booking congestion in key cities, has had the tendency of absolutely shutting out motion pictures from legitimate houses. In instances where houses can be obtained the rental figures are so prohibitively high that even the most wealthy distributors find it impossible to continue negotiations.

The exhibitor, however, has seemingly gained from this situation, for the market right now is flooded with important releases that heretofore would have been given their premiers in legit houses. High class productions like "The Storm," "Monte Cristo," "The Prisoner of Zenda," "When Knighthood Was In Flower," "The Old Homestead" and many others all have been released direct to the exhibitor anywhere from one to two months prior to the time originally set for their release.

As a result of this change in plans, brought on directly by the theatre situation, business at picture houses, according to statistic reports from distributors, has taken a decided skyward leap. New England, which was the hardest hit territory because of the recent industrial depression, has fully recovered and houses there are seemingly turning in bigger grosses than ever before in their history. The same is true in New York where turn aways have been the rule for the past three weeks. The Middle West has been equally progressive and has been blessed with early releases of big specials.

"When Knighthood Was in Flower," on which a huge-sized fortune has been spent to exploit the Marion Davies production, is playing to capacity audiences at the Criterion in New York at $1.50 top, while in Chicago the same feature is being shown at first class picture house prices and doing an equally big business.

New England, which should be a mint for Paramount's "The Old Homestead," which always gave Denman Thompson's original company its greatest gross business, saw that feature last week, one week ahead of New York, and at less than one-half the price charged at the Capitol in the metropolis.—ROGER FERRI.

Chicago-Illinois Exhibitor Coalition Has Been Effected

The coalition of the Chicago Motion Picture Theatre Owners and the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners was effected recently. The following directors of the former Chicago M. P. T. O. were elected to serve as directors of the I. M. P. T. O.: Joseph Hupp, L. Frank, A. Sapperstein, M. Siegel and J. Lamm. John Silha was elected to fill out the unexpired term on the board of directors of J. B. Dibelka, who is going out of the theatre business. The first meeting of the board will be held within a few days. L. M. Rubens, president, who has been a patient at a Chicago hospital since his return from Europe, has recovered sufficiently to go to his home at Joliet, and it is hoped he will be able to return to the meeting of the board.

J. B. Dibelka has transformed his Parkway Theatre on Twenty-second street into a dance hall. The alterations are being made now, and it is expected to be one of the popular dance halls in the district.

With two conventions of the M. P. T. O. A. coming in rapid succession, Wm. Sweeney, John Silha and other officials of the association are extremely busy. The first meeting on the program is the Michigan convention at Flint, which is held on the 10th and 11th of the month. Then the Missouri convention will be held at Excelsior Springs October 18, 19 and 20.

The Peerless, after undergoing extensive repairs, was opened last Saturday night under the management of Howard Donaldson. One of his circulars to families in the neighborhood read: "A spotless and shining Peerless awaits you." He was kidded by the boys because it sounded like an automobile ad.

Credit at the movies! Is that the next step in neighborhood picture houses? There's a house on the West Side in a nice, regular "working folks" group of the better sort, where girls can drop in and say, "I don't get paid until Saturday; can I go to the show now and pay you then?" and the manager lets them in. He declares he has never lost a cent by his credit system, and has increased his attendance. He has never been asked for credit by other than girls who work down town during the day and wish to drop into the show near their home on an evening.

The thought occurs that it might not be a bad thing for exhibitors in neighborhood houses to extend weekly or semi-weekly credit to families who receive their pay check monthly or semi-monthly, particularly in railroad towns or neighborhoods. The list of families who pay their debts promptly could be obtained from the neighborhood grocers, and a card similar to a meal ticket could be issued, with a duplicate card kept on file in the box-office. Then, when the family pays the grocer, the iceman, the gas bill and the daily newspaper, that other great family institution, the movies, can be paid. It might be used to good advantage to increase matinee receipts.

Charles J. Schaefer has purchased the Garfield Theatre Building, 2844 Madison street, for a cash consideration of $60,000. The building is 125 by 72 feet and the theatre, which seats 700, is managed by Charles H. Ryan. Mr. Schaefer has paid rent on the theatre for thirteen years.

Hundreds of Indiana People At Kokomo House Opening

Hundreds of citizens of Kokomo and vicinity attended the formal opening recently of the Strand Theatre there under the management of the Consolidated Realty and Theatres Corporation, which has a chain of theatres in Indiana. The Strand is being managed by Charles Raymond, formerly of Los Angeles. The Consolidated Realty and Theatres Corporation comprises the largest chain of theatres in Indiana. G. H. Gruneberg, Sr., is president and general manager of the company; A. F. Brentlinger is vice president and director general of theatres; C. W. Mason, assistant to Mr. Brentlinger; F. H. Rohr, financial operating manager; F. H. Gruneberg, Jr., second vice president; O. H. Olsen, third vice president, and R. L. Martin, secretary-treasurer.

Burglars broke into the Princess Theatre at Laporte on Sunday night, September 25, pried open the safe and helped themselves to Sunday's receipts, which amounted to about $1,000. Police are working on the case but have obtained no clew as to the identity of the robbers.

If the prosperity of a community can be measured by the manner in which people seek amusements, Frankfort and Clinton county seem to be on the road to some highly prosperous times. The theatres of Frankfort have been playing to packed houses for the last two weeks, according to reports from exhibitors there.

The Princess Theatre, owned and operated by Robert Harris and Roy Feltus, at Bloomington, is to be rebuilt early in the spring, it was announced this week. Mr. Harris and Mr. Feltus have bought a large lot adjoining the theatre and will build an addition to the building on the newly acquired site.

George Senger, of Mishawaka, began his thirteenth consecutive season as manager of the Century Theatre there when the Century was opened a few days ago with a program of pictures and vaudeville. Pictures will be shown every night, with vaudeville acts on Friday, Saturday and Sunday nights. The Century was closed during the summer and during that period was renovated and redecorated.

Robert Harris, manager of the Harris-Grand and Princess Theatres at Bloomington, is being mentioned as a possible entry in the automobile races at the Indianapolis speedway on Decoration Day as a result of a showing he made last week in driving from Indianapolis to Bloomington with a film of "Way Down East."

When the film failed to arrive in Bloomington in the morning of the day it was to be shown, Mr. Harris began an investigation and learned it had been missent to Bloomington, Ill. He immediately telephoned to the Chicago agency, which has charge of the booking of the film, and asked for an additional print. The man with the film left Chicago at 12 o'clock and arrived in Indianapolis about 6:30. Mr. Harris was waiting for him in his Packard car and the run to Bloomington was made in less than two hours running time.

Hard to Get, Hard to Keep

SOMETIMES it's worth while for a crook to yank a gun out of his hip pocket, shove it in an exhibitor's face and make off with the day's receipts. That's the discovery many crooks have made, and so another problem is added to the already impressive exhibitor total. In some localities it seems to be a serious problem, an ever-present menace. Now the exhibitor not only has to figuratively fight to get the dollars in, but literally fight to keep 'em.

Regional News and Gossip has published many items about hold-ups, safe-cracking and other crimes against exhibitors. There have been many other instances of such lawlessness recently, that have not found their way into its columns. It seems to be a common stunt for one of a gang of crooks to hide in the theatre during the night show, and let in his comrades after the doors have been locked and the exhibitor has gone home.

Dave Harding, of Kansas City, has only just recovered from a battle with an armed bandit. Burglars got a "goodly sum" from the Elmwood and North Park theatres, Buffalo. Other Jimmy Valentines took $1,400 from a Clinton, Ind., theatre. The Juniata, St. Louis, lost $326. Masked bandits took $2,000 from the Lyric Theatre auditor, East St. Louis. Five hold-up men got the night's receipts at the Royal, San Francisco. C. C. Burkey, of the Summit, Kansas City, had to hand over $400 at the point of the gun. The Castro, San Francisco, lost $75. And so on. The bulging hip pocket no longer necessarily means a flask.—S. S.

Karzin's "Bulge" on Circus Man Got Him His Start as Exhibitor

Founded World Dream on Odeon's Harvest of Nickels and Pennies

N a crisp, sunny day in October, 1905, Harry Miller stood in front of Miller Brothers' Nickel Odeon, 1528 Market street, St. Louis, and watched the frantic crowd trying to get in and out of his 120-seat picture palace through a single store-door entrance. He saw a number of would-be patrons pass up the pleasure of depositing their jitney to see the single reel of thrillers because they couldn't successfully buck the line. And then, for the stenth time, Miller invaded the precincts of the adjoining restaurant to induce "that Greek" to sell his lease and move another door east so that Miller Brothers could open a penny arcade exit for the Odeon.

"That Greek" was a business man. Although the class of patrons that the Odeon, under the Miller management, was attracting hurt his restaurant business, he didn't admit it to Harry. Offers to pay all his moving expenses and refund him the difference in the rent of the two stores proved unavailing.

They argued pro and con for many minutes. Principally con. Finally the restaurant proprietor suggested that Miller take him in as a partner on the nickel odeon and penny arcade venture. Miller at last agreed to the proposition and that is how John Karzin, present owner of the Casino, Olympia and Lincoln Theatres, St. Louis, and dean of the St. Louis exhibitors, entered the film game.

Miller previously had worked for J. Goldgrabber, the first man to open a movie in the Mound City. Goldgrabber started the World's Fair year, 1904, operating a 90-seat house on the north side of Franklin avenue between Broadway and Sixth street. Later he opened another "picture palace" on Sixth street.

Karzin put up $750 for a half interest in Miller Brothers' Nickel Odeon and the new penny arcade. They rented 150 penny machines from John McAllister on a 60-40 basis and went to work. During the winter they did a nice business, sometimes crowding 250 to 300 patrons into their 120-seat house, while they reaped a harvest in pennies as the movie fans were shoed out of the odeon through the arcade. It was an ideal arrangement.

Miller was a circus man and in the spring the call of the tanbark and elephants proved too much and he took to the road, leaving Karzin to operate the picture show. But no provision was made for a salary. John did all the work, put up half the capital and got but the same profits as Miller, who was looking after his other business interests. Karzin protested. He thought he ought to get some compensation. Miller was astounded. Wasn't Miller Brothers' name over the door worth something. He was a showman; Karzin only a fryer of eggs and biscuits. But John thought otherwise.

When Miller returned from the road in the fall, Karzin renewed his demands for wages. He worked from 8 a. m. to 12 midnight daily. He politely informed Miller that unless he got something he would open a house of his own and let Miller arrange for a new manager. Miller laughed and told him to go to it.

John did. On October 17, 1906, he opened the World Dream, a 140-folding chair house, at 1413 Market street. Standing room was provided for 200 additional spectators. Miller was furious, but Karzin pointed out that his partner had other business interests. So they arranged to employ a manager to conduct the Miller Brothers' Nickel Odeon while Karzin devoted all his time to the World Dream. The latter house got the cream of the Market street business and its receipts steadily increased, while the old house slipped backward.

In 1908 Karzin decided to expand. He went to Springfield, Ill., and opened the Casino Theatre in a store room at 621 East Washington street. His rent was $90 a month, while he paid $4 for a rented piano and $8 for chairs. His operator also acted as janitor and received $12 a week. His cashier received $3.50 weekly and the piano player, the "orchestra," $8.

Karzin had to educate Springfield to pictures. It was a hard uphill struggle, but he sowed his seeds well and today the Illinois capital is regarded as one of the best movie cities of its size in the country. During his opening week his receipts ran $3, $3.14 and $4 a day, while Saturday set a record with $9.

Film for the Springfield house cost Karzin nothing. In those days the exchanges were not so strict, keeping but a slight record of reels taken out and not caring much how often a film was shown so long as it was eventually returned. So when John bought a reel for his "World Dream" he later took it out to Springfield for the Casino.

Karzin recalls those early days with much amusement. Originally he rented his film from Eugene Klein at Chicago, paying $25 a week for service and once or twice $35. It included four reels daily. Today he pays $150 a day for features for the Casino. The old operator cost $12 a week. Now he must employ two operators at $50 a week each.

When O. T. Crawford opened his exchange in St. Louis with eleven single reels, Karzin transferred his patronage but again returned to Klein because Crawford opened an opposition odeon to the World Dream. Later, Bill Swanson opened a branch in St. Louis and in 1908 Wagner Brothers and the Western Film Company opened exchanges. Karzin says that in those days an exhibitor walked into an exchange, examined the list of subjects on display and picked out enough to complete a reel, which a girl pieced together.

In 1908 he sold the World Dream and concentrated his efforts in Springfield. He previously had disposed of his interests in the odeon-arcade to Harry Miller, who closed the place several weeks later.

It was in 1908 that Gus Kerasotas, present owner of the Strand and Royal Theatres, Springfield, Ill., entered the movies. He was running a candy store in that city when Karzin approached him to become interested in a new theatre he planned building at 204 South Sixth street. Kerasotas consented, and that year the Royal Theatre opened its doors.

It was a handsome house, with marble front and nice statues in the lobby, and represented an investment of $6,000. Later, when Karzin learned that an opposition house was planned in the vicinity of the Casino, he stole a march on his would-be competitors by opening a new house himself, known as the Bijou, at 724 East Washington street. He operated it for eight or nine months, losing $2,500 on the venture. He explained that he wanted it to prove a failure to convince others there wasn't room for two houses in that vicinity.

The Casino burned down in 1909 but was rebuilt as a 220-seat house, opera chairs being installed while the walls were beautifully decorated and the front entrance finished in marble. In 1912, Al Bernstein opened the Capitol Theatre, with 500 seats, four doors west of the Casino Theatre. Karzin was afraid that this opposition house would put him out of business, but, instead, his patronage was increased. He later disposed of his Springfield houses at a handsome profit.

On February 2, 1912, he met William Tamme, owner of the Casino Theatre, 1624 Market street, who announced he was looking for a buyer for that house. Karzin agreed to pay $1,200 for the theatre and $300 for the lease and Tamme consented. John spent an additional $1,200 in improving the house.

William Flynn owned the Royal Theatre directly across the street but refused to sell, holding out for $10,000. But under Karzin the Casino's business mounted upward while the Royal steadily lost money. On December 23, 1912, Flynn sold the Royal to Karzin for $800. That same year Karzin leased the Easton-Taylor Theatre, a vaudeville house, and converted it into a picture theatre.

In 1914 he built the Majestic Theatre on Franklin avenue at a cost of $22,000. This house is operated by the McKinley Amusement Company in which Karzin is still interested. Karzin inter-

They're Off!

Mr. Karzin's is the first nomination for the honor of being recognized as the oldest exhibitor, in years of service, in the country. His film career began in 1905. Who do you suggest as the Daddy of Them All? Come one, come all.

Old-Time Fronts

In our search for the oldest exhibitor in point of continuous service, we have dug up a rarity in photos of the old theatres run by John Karzin, of St. Louis, including the World Dream Theatre, then the only exclusively picture house in St. Louis; the first "nickleodeon" to pioneer for the wonderful structures now standing. In 1906 this was a fine theatre, but times have changed since then.

Other pictures are included in the list, and through the courtesy of Mr. Karzin these will be published in an early issue. Don't miss this feature. It will take you back to those good old days when the "manager" was also ballyhoo man and puller-in, and perhaps sang the "ill. song" as well.

Exploitation in those days was a mechanical organ or player piano and the "feature" running more than 1,000 feet was apt to be sent back to the exchange as being too long. Can you remember the row they raised when Edison put out "Frankenstein" in nearly 1,200 feet, and was accused of trying to grab off an additional $20 from the exchanges?

Maybe next week, but anyhow, pretty soon.—S. S.

John Karzin Nominated Daddy

ested J. Pappas, present principal owner of the Majestic, to become interested in the new house.

Exhibitors probably will recall the Balkan War picture called "With the Greeks on the Firing Line." It was the first war picture shown in America, and in 1914 Karzin secured the Missouri rights to the picture for $5,000. It was six-reeler. John had visions of cleaning up on the picture and rented the Garrick Theatre, paying $500 for a week, and showed the picture at 50 and 75 cents, with $1 for boxes. The first day he took in $1,400 and it looked as though he would clean up. But on the second day a fellow to whom he had refused to make a "loan" announced to the waiting crowds that the picture was the bunk and they would be robbed if they went inside. That caused the bottom to drop out of the war picture and Karzin scratched off his $5,000 to the red side of the profit and loss account.

In 1915 Karzin operated the Paradise Skydrome at Seventeenth and Chestnut streets. This place had 3,000 seats and proved a big money maker, but was closed when the city banned tent shows. The Lincoln Theatre was purchased in 1919 and in 1920 Karzin paid Spyros Skouras and his brothers $20,000 cash for their interests in the Olympia Theatre. It was at that time the Skouras boys purchased the New Grand Central.

Karzin is also president of the Central Union Amusement Company, a $300,000 corporation which plans to erect a 2,500-seat house on Chestnut street, near Eighteenth street, to be known as The Terminal. This project is held up because of the proposed Market street widening.

He tells with amusement an experience during a state fair in Springfield, Ill., back in 1910. In those days moving picture posters and colored sheets were unheard of in America, but Karzin sent to Paris for some hand-painted two-sheets and plastered the front of his Casino Theatre with the beautiful pictures. He also had a huge banner strung across the street from building to building, announcing that the world's finest pictures and high class vaudeville could be seen inside for 5 cents.

The city was filled with farmers who had never seen a moving picture. Karzin played for them, installing two leather-lunged barkers in front of his house. They shooed the crowds in. There was too much business for a full reel and Karzin cut the picture in half. It didn't make any difference whether it ended properly or not. In one hour, twelve shows were given and the day's receipts were $464 at five cents a head. The vaudeville consisted of a black-faced comedian who welcomed the visitors to Springfield and thanked them for their attendance at the show.

When a performance closed, ushers directed the crowds out the back way up an alley leading to the street on which the theatre was located. Many attended the performance several times, not realizing they had walked into the same house, until they saw the half a picture.

Nate L. Robbins Will Build Million Dollar Utica House

Nate L. Robbins, who owns a chain of theatres in Utica and Northern New York, has just announced that plans have been approved for a million dollar theatre, store and office building which he will erect next year in Utica. The house will be known as "The Robbins" and will seat 3,200. It will be six stories in height.

Frederick W. Mansert, who runs the Rialto Theatre in Glens Falls, visited the First National exchange here the past week, on the look-out for features.

Hot weather cut into the attendance this week, and according to some of the managers business was no better than during some of the weeks in August.

Michael Kallet, who owns theatres in Oneida and Rome, and who recently acquired the Star in the latter city, dropped into Albany this week on his way back from New York.

The Van Curler, in Schenectady, opened Sunday with pictures. W. H. Wright is manager.

Louis Buettner, of Cohoes, has been having a tough run of luck. Just about the time that Mr. Buettner recovered from an illness, his wife was forced to submit to an operation last week, but according to all reports Mrs. Buettner is now on the road to recovery.

H. Calvin Ford and the manager of his two houses in Pittsfield, the Capitol and Majestic, were in Albany the past week, shopping along Film Row.

George W. Loomis, of Frankfort, in town for film, reports business good.

The new Rose Theatre, in Troy, is scheduled to open about December 1. The house will be run by Jake Rosenthal, former manager of the Majestic, and will seat about 900. The house will cost upwards of $100,000, and is located below Congress street on Fourth.

Dan Keegan who ran the Regent in Troy, partially destroyed by fire some little time ago, is planning to reopen soon.

Each fall, Bill Smalley, of Cooperstown, who runs a chain of six houses, drops into Albany on his way to the Danbury State Fair. Mr. Smalley arrived in Albany on schedule the other day, and was welcomed along Film Row. Mr. Smalley was originally from Danbury and his aged mother still resides there. When his car arrived in Albany, the rear was filled with vegetables and apples which he is taking back to his home town. Mr. Smalley informed some of the film managers that he intended to have his mother return with him in order that she might spend her remaining days under his roof in Cooperstown, and enjoy the success that has come to her son.

Gardner Hall, in Troy, run by Armstrong and Miller, and which was one of Barhydt's old houses, after being closed for the entire summer is to reopen in the near future.

Fewer Showmen Visit Seattle; Portland Restricted Locality

Very few out-of-town exhibitors visited film row the week of Oct. 1. In fact, it is becoming more and more evident that many of them prefer doing business through the territorial salesmen. This is the logical outcome of placing high class representatives in the field, and reports in general show a substantial increase over the preceding year. Every so often, the familiar faces still bob up, just to keep in personal touch.

Reports to the effect that Portland is confronted by a disagreeable situation, have reached Seattle. It is claimed that the smaller exhibitors are up in arms over the fact that Jensen & Von Herberg interests are blanketing the town with first run restrictions. Under this arrangement, films booked by Jensen & Von Herberg theatres on the West Side, are protected for six months before a second run is permitted to a smaller exhibitor. On the East Side, the restriction lasts for ninety days. Exhibitors are refusing to book any films so restricted.

Committees of the United Theatres Corporation, consisting of ten exhibitors owning twelve theatres, have had two conferences with Manager Claude Jensen, of the Jensen & Von Herberg interests, but nothing has been accomplished so far. These exhibitors are threatening to go to first runs.

Charles Ray's "Tailor Made Man" established a record here and in Portland, where it is playing at Blue Mouse theatres, by doing a better business its second week than the first, although the first week's record led to the extension of the engagement.

The Woolley Theatres Co., owners of the Union Theatre in the downtown district, have closed the house for extensive remodeling. About $10,000 will be spent, the seating capacity increased to 325, the foyer remodeled and the floor dropped, giving a better pitch. It will be closed about two weeks. Mr. Hartman is manager.

The Auditorium Theatre, Spokane, after renovation and redecorating, opens October 6 with "The Sign of the Rose," which will be followed October 12 with "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge." Two big orchestras, one a jazz orchestra, are part of the entertainment. The Auditorium is a legitimate house, but also shows pictures. C. W. Yorke is manager. He has contracted for the twenty-four American Releasing Corporation first run features, for one week showings.

It is reported that W. P. Brown closed his house in Waterville, Wash., October 1.

Portland's City Council has proclaimed November fourth as a musical day. The Portland Musicians' Club inaugurated the move, which is without precedent in that city. They want to show Portland people "how terrible life would be without music." The picture of Orpheus will be turned to the wall. Films will run to hushed houses. Vaudeville artists must get along without music.

Edna Fitzgerald has sold out her interests in the Liberty Theatre, Ferndale, to Guy Merrill, of Elk River, Idaho.

Ed Myrick, manager of the three Jensen & Von Herberg theatres in Tacoma, was lining up some of his fall bookings on Seattle Film Row this week.

W. W. Cooley, owner of the Gem Theatre, Silverton, Oregon, was in Seattle this week.

Rosse Nelson, exhibitor, of Independence, Oregon, stopped in Seattle long enough to say "Hello" on his way to Vancouver, B. C. Nelson is enjoying a vacation. He promises to call in again on his way home.

The Strand, Laurel, Mont., has changed hands. C. L. Harvey has sold out to Krome and MacArdle.

St. Louis Awaiting Outcome of Skouras-Paramount Deal

(News from Paramount on the ollowing story was received too ate for insertion here. You will nd the story elsewhere in this ssue.)

St. Louis filmdom is eagerly waiting the outcome of the New York conference between Spyros nd Charles Skouras, of Skouras Brothers Enterprises, owners of he New Grand Central and other heatres and holders of the First National franchise for Missouri, nd Harold Franklyn, general anager of the theatre department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Famous Players owns he Missouri Theatre, which is pposite the New Grand Central t Grand boulevard and Lucas venue, and current gossip has ad it that when the Skouras boys eturn from New York they will ave the Missouri under their anner.

There is said to be no chance f the Famous Players selling the Missouri to the Skouras interests or the latter disposing of the New Grand Central to Adolph Zukor's organization, but unless here is a last minute hitch it is lmost certain that the two houses n a very short while will be nder the management of the Skouras boys.

A few days ago Nathan Frank, ewly elected president of the Famous Players Missouri Corporation, admitted there was a deal on between the New Grand Central and the Missouri for a working agreement. It is said to contemplate a division of the profits of the two houses after certain expenses are paid and an arrangement whereby long runs would be shown at the New Grand Central, which has a seating capacity of 1,800 and weekly changes at the Missouri, which has accommodations for 3,600.

It is said that a board of six directors headed by Spyros Skouras, three members of which would represent the New Grand Central and three the Missouri, would have charge of the two houses. A rental of $86,000 would be paid the Famous Players for the Missouri and $68,000 to Skouras Brothers. Enterprises for the New Grand Central.

With an understanding between the houses the competition would not be so keen and expensive and certain incidentals which have cost the houses big money in the past would be entirely eliminated. An inkling of this was given on Tuesday evening, October 3, when the Veiled Prophet's parade and ball was held without either house attempting to obtain exclusive moving pictures of the pageant and the festivities at the Coliseum.

The rise of the Skouras boys to the commanding position in the local moving picture world has been nothing short of phenomenal. Eight years ago they were bus boys in a local hotel. Shortly after that they obtained the Lyric Theatre on Sixth street and turned their attention to the movies. They were successful and later purchased the West End Lyric and the Pageant. Then the Shaw and the Olympia. About two years ago they decided to buy the New Grand Central, then the leading first run picture house of the city, together with the Central, Sixth and Market streets, and the Grand Central Exchange which controlled the First National franchise for Missouri. At that time they disposed of the Olympia to John Karzin for $20,000 and applied this as part of the purchase price of the New Grand Central.

Several months ago they perfected a deal with Harry Koplar and Sam Hamburg, Jr., of the City Wide Amusement Company, whereby their houses were consolidated under the banner of the St. Louis Amusement Company. The Skouras houses that figured in this deal were: The Arsenal, Shaw, Central, Pageant, while the City Wide put in the Pershing, Shenandoah, New Lindell, Grand-Florissant, Novelty, Juniata, Arco, Lowell, Manchester, Lafayette, Gravois and Maffitt. The Central was later converted into a store building, while the Pershing has been dark for some time. The Skouras boys are also interested in the Capitol Theatre and have the Empress under lease to the Shubert vaudeville interests.

The Famous Players-Lasky organization in June purchased the 25 per cent. of the stock of the Famous Players Missouri Corporation, consisting of 2,700 shares held by St. Louisians, for $100 a share. The St. Louis stockholders were Fred L. Cornwell, William Goldman, former mayor Frederick H. Kreismann, Harry Koplar and Sam Hamburg, Jr. At the same time the company paid the Delmonte Building & Investment Company $120,000 to release a ten-year lease on the Delmonte Theatre, calling for an annual rental of $36,000.

A few days ago it was announced in New York that William Goldman, managing director of the Missouri, had been promoted to assistant general manager of Famous Players-Lasky organization. During Goldman's absence in New York, Herschel Stewart has been acting manager of the Missouri. Whether his appointment will be permanent probably depends on the outcome of the negotiations under way with Skouras Brothers.

The battle is on again.

The fanatical reformers of Missouri are once more marshalling their forces in hopes of putting through state censorship, Sunday closing statutes and other measures harassing the industry.

With the general state election in November, the Intolerants are spreading their propaganda. The mails are filled with it. Questionnaires are being shot at candidates for the State Senate and House of Representatives.

This well organized minority, which almost slipped through state censorship two years ago, has been endeavoring to control the Missouri Constitutional Convention now in session. Apparently they have concluded that they can't get the "blue" program across in that body, so they have turned their attention to the new State Legislature.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri, led by Lawrence Goldman, frustrated the reformers two years ago. They are watching their campaign very closely and can be relied upon to put up a strong battle when the time comes.

"The Spirit of St. Louis" is the title of an historical film to be produced for the city of St. Louis by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company. Arrangements for the making of the picture were made at a recent conference in the office of Mayor Henry W. Kiel. Many prominent business men, clergymen and educators of the city were present. D. D. Rothacker, vice-president, and Allan Parker, scenario expert, represented the company.

The Opera House, Troy, Ill., owned by Albert Reider, was destroyed by fire early Saturday, September 30. Two soft drink saloons, a shoe shop and two residences were also burned down. The total loss is $30,000. Reider owned one of the residences and a saloon. He is said to have had no insurance on the buildings.

East St. Louis dispatched a chemical engine to fight the fire when it got beyond control of the Troy volunteer department.

Two masked bandits took $2,000 from C. C. Cravens, auditor of the Lyric Theatre, East St. Louis, at 11:15 p. m., Sunday, October 1. The money represented the receipts of Saturday and Sunday.

The men, who carried revolvers, evidently had hidden in a rest room after the theatre closed for the night. Cravens had just finished counting the money when the men walked into the office and covered the auditor and George York, janitor.

The police believe that the men were friends of "Big George" Ayers, notorious yeggman, who was convicted at Edwardsville, Ill., last week and sentenced to life imprisonment for killing a deputy sheriff at Granite City, Ill. Cravens testified against Ayers and the robbers abused him for his part in the trial and threatened to kill him.

James Drake, manager, and C. F. McCarthy, assistant manager, departed from the theatre only a few minutes before the robbery. They told the police they observed no suspicious characters in the vicinity of the show house, which strengthens the theory that the men hid in a rest room after the show had closed.

George Beban, star of "The Sign of the Rose," has denied that he told the Chicago Tribune that "eighty per cent. of the motion picture actresses were beautiful, but too dumb to appear in a combination of the screen and stage."

William Goldman, manager of the Missouri Theatre, has been made assistant manager of the theatre department of Famous Players-Lasky and will leave for New York shortly to assume his new duties.

Herschel Stewart, of Dallas, Tex., has been acting manager of the Missouri Theatre during Mr. Goldman's absence from the city. He formerly was general manager of Southern Enterprises.

The Gem Theatre, Litchfield, Ill., has been sold by W. B. Kneedler to Dominick Frisini. The price paid was not given out. Frisini owns houses in Kincaid and Taylorville, Ill.

St. Louis Filmdom Mourns Teddy

Teddy's dead and all St. Louis filmdom mourns. A careless automobilist ran down Teddy, a 14-year-old spitz-collie dog, at Sixteenth and Chestnut street, Tuesday evening, September 26. The animal dodged one car but was struck by another going in the opposite direction.

Teddy was the property of John Karzin, owner of the Casino, Olympia and Lincoln theatres, and was his constant companion. Every day Teddy was brought to the Casino and took his place in the office overlooking the theatre.

When Karzin went to exhibitors' conventions Teddy went along. He was known throughout Missouri and Southern Illinois. Several years ago when Karzin operated houses in Springfield, Ill., and St. Louis, Teddy made the trip between the two cities in the baggage car.

Until a few years ago Teddy was a familiar figure on the sandbox of Market street cars, but when the United Railways barred dogs because a careless bulldog bit a lady passenger, Teddy had to give way. Karzin then had a special grip made to carry the dog from and to his theatre. He said that during the few days Teddy was forced to stay home the animal almost died of grief, refusing to eat or drink.

Sol Braunig Puts Providence "Lemon" in the Paying Class

Taking a conceded "lemon" house of five-years' standing, during which period every form of entertainment was tried out, and turning it into a paying proposition in the short space of four weeks is the meteoric record established by Sol Braunig, of the Capitol Theatre, Providence, R. I. For years, this house, located about a half mile from the theatrical and department store section, opposite the Cathedral and on a hill away from the transient trade, was a liability to its owners.

Last year, when Abe Spitz broke away from the Al Black Enterprises, Inc., which have been taken over by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, believing that Black would invade Providence, he took a lease on the house, which was then known as the Mayflower. He entrusted the task of putting over this house to Sol Braunig, who is also manager of the Modern Theatre, a first-run theatre here. The task was a seemingly impossible one, for pictures had been tried out at that house before—and flopped.

However, Braunig went about his task quietly, renovated the house, renamed it the Capitol, started an aggressive newspaper advertising campaign several weeks prior to the official opening, announced a thrice-a-week-change policy, and he proceeded to make every individual in Providence and vicinity acquainted with the fact that the theatre would be re-opened. Mr. Braunig secured the membership lists of every organization in Providence. He tabulated these lists and wrote personal letters to the members. Something like 100,000 folks received these letters.

But Braunig didn't forget them after the first series of letters had been sent out. He kept pounding out letters with amazingly splendid results. He appealed to the foreign population of the city. Result: the attendance after the first week increased 1,500 per cent. and the third week showed an even greater increase. Now the Capitol is a money-maker.

Matt Rielley, manager of the Victory Theatre, Providence, has completed a deal whereby United Artists' and Allied Artists' Corporations' productions will be given first-run showings at that house. This wise showman capitalized on the "catch" by advertising the acquisitions in a half-page advertisement in the Providence newspapers.

Fred Lovett, manager of the Palace in the Olneyville section of Providence, believes in seeing every picture before booking it. The result has been that this house has been consistently making money, while similar houses who have booked on hearsay, have had a somewhat up and down career.

Clifton Lovenberg, son of Charles Lovenberg, lessee of the Victory Theatre in Providence, Scenic in Pawtucket, R. I., and Park Theatre in Woonsocket, R. I., has returned from a tour of European countries. Cliff came back with one conviction. "There is no place like home."

Martin Touhey, manager of the Emery Theatre, is a firm believer in the "patronize home talent" idea, and consequently is giving likely home talent every opportunity to show itself. This policy has had the tendency of drawing business for the house, which does not find a single week without some local turn featured in conjunction with the showing of some picture.

This is anniversary week at Bill Mahoney's Rialto Theatre in Providence, and as an inducement for patronage the management is topping its bill with Metro's "The Prisoner of Zenda." This picture is cleverly exploited and all indications point to a record breaker, with a strong likelihood that the feature will be held over a second week.

John Isaaco, manager and proprietor of La Sirena Theatre in the Federal Hill section of the city, has reopened that house with a daily change policy.

Detroit Newspapers Rebuked by Trendle, Kunsky Manager

The following letter was sent recently by George A. Trendle, manager of the John H. Kunsky theatres, to the Detroit Free Press and the Detroit News:

"I have recently learned that the government desires to curtail the operating of the radio broadcasting station of both your paper and the Detroit Free Press, and understand that in the very near future you will be called into conference for that reason, and am taking the liberty of again writing, in the hope that you will seriously consider the advisability of discontinuing the use of the radio outfit after 7 o'clock in the evening.

"We are spending many thousands of dollars with your publication each year to increase the attendance at our motion picture shows. Undoubtedly it is a selfish motive, but at the same time, an expensive one, while your publication at no profit to itself, makes a strenuous effort to keep as many of our patrons away as possible by giving them lavish entertainments during the evening, without expense. This does not seem to our organization to be a fair and just return for the co-operation we are giving your paper, and if you can eliminate the broadcasting during the evening hours, giving your patrons the benefit of it during the afternoon or morning, I am sure that you will eventually benefit by it.

"I am writing the Free Press and making the same request, not as a favor, but as a strictly fair and square business consideration, to which I feel that the theatres of Detroit are entitled in return for the enormous amount of advertising placed in your publication from week to week. Comments are heard from theatre managers daily with reference to this, and it certainly deserves some consideration on the part of the News.

"I sincerely hope that after careful thought you will agree with me that the News can carry its message to its many radio fans without so seriously interfering with the operation of amusement enterprises in Detroit, which, I am frank to say, have not come back to normal since the inception of the News and Free Press radios. Our residential houses particularly have been seriously affected and we can give no other reason for it."

"BILLBOARDING" SHORT SUBJECTS

How Eugene Roth of the California Theatre, San Francisco, used space on twenty-four sheet to announce one of Educational Film Exchange's two reelers.

Joseph Portell, manager of the Debray Theatre, was married on October 4 to Miss Annabelle Ellen Schnur.

Mrs. May Whitman, of Buchanan, Mich., has sold the Princess Theatre of that city to John Crowe, formerly of Otsego.

Phil Gleichman, manager of the Broadway-Strand, Detroit, has just returned from New York and announces the following pictures for release at his house in the near future: "Broadway Rose" opens on October 8, following "The Man Who Played God." Mary Pickford in "Tess of the Storm Country" is due to follow Mae Murray. "The Hands of Nara" is also billed for a showing as is Lady Diana Manners in a special seven reel feature in natural colors.

Herb L. Weil, manager of the new Desmond Theatre at Port Huron, Mich., and supervisor of Equity Pictures Corporation, was in Detroit last week in the interests of the latter company. He stated that after looking over the local distribution field he had made arrangements with the Minter United Amusements to handle the sales and distribution of all Equity pictures for Michigan.

Manchester, N. H.

Manager W. S. Canning, of the Manchester Amusement Co., Manchester, N. H., operating the Palace and Strand Theatres, has been so good as to supply Regional News and Gossip with the following local items, and we assure him that his co-operation is greatly appreciated:

The Eagle Theatre, one of the leading picture houses, which has been closed since last May, opened October 2 with "The Storm." Owing to the industrial conditions that exist here, due to the textile strike, the Eagle was forced to close for the first time since it was opened, six years ago.

The Strand Theatre, which plays attractions and big pictures, is closed for the season.

The Park Theatre, which was formerly a vaudeville and picture house, and later a stock house, has also been forced to close this year.

E. J. Caron, former owner of the Star Theatre, leaves Tuesday for an extended trip through the West. He will be gone until after the holidays.

Pittsburgh Folks Turn Out Despite Hot, Dry Weather

In Pittsburgh theatres, week of October 2 Norma Talmadge in "The Eternal Flame" got the biggest crowds at the Grand and Liberty. The Cameraphone, with a second week's run on "Grandma's Boy," got better than average business. Records at this house were broken by this comedy the previous week. "More to be Pitied Than Scorned" went well at the Blackstone, while Jack Holt in "While Satan Sleeps" got average business at the Regent and State. "Monte Cristo" got fair business at the Alhambra. "Manslaughter," in second and last week at Olympic, drew well. Weather, hot and dry.

Workmen have begun the installation of the largest electric sign in Charleston, W. Va. It is the sign for the Virginian Theatre on State street and is 44 feet, six inches from top to bottom. The remodeled show house will be ready for opening the latter part of October. The Virginian has been built at a cost of $300,000 and will seat 1,200 people, including 447 chairs in the balcony.

J. Lester Bush, owner of the Strand and Grand Theatres, Grafton, W. Va., has purchased from John N. Tregellas, the building in which the Grand Theatre is located, in consideration of the sum of $25,000.

R. J. La Voise, for the past seven months manager of the East Liberty Cameraphone, has gone to New York and will be sent somewhere in the States to do Goldwyn exploitation.

Building inspectors, of Pittsburgh, under the personal supervision of Director of Public Safety George W. McCandless, have completed an investigation of the flooring in all theatres in Pittsburgh, special attention having been given concrete theatre lobbies, similar to the floor which recently collapsed at the Strand Theatre in Lincoln avenue, killing one child and injuring 56.

Pittsburgh officials, it is said, are taking steps to obtain nation-wide prohibition of the distribution to school children of free tickets to motion picture shows and other similar entertainments.

B. V. Barger, of the Liberty Theatre, Parkers' Landing, Pa., has sold one-half interest in his house to W. F. Faust. The Liberty is a theatre of 300 capacity and has been in operation for a year and a half.

Charlie Watterson, manager of the Amusu Theatre, West Monterey, Pa., has been appointed postmaster in his town. Maybe he took the job to make sure that he gets his films in time for showing.

Miss Agnes Rapp, of Rapp's Theatre, Emleton, Pa., has taken up golf. In a recent game she made 19 holes in 57.

Bob Fulton, of the Chickquitty Theatre, North East, Pa., has given up the exhibiting business and purchased a hotel at St. Petersburg, Florida.

Tom Greer, of the Coliseum Theatre, Stoneboro, Pa., recently motored to Pittsburgh in his flivver, and was arrested here for speeding. But Tom got out of his trouble. He told the cop he had just assembled the car and forgot to put the slow parts back into it.

J. W. Miller, of the Dayton Theatre, Dayton, Pa., is back from a short fishing trip near Rochester, N. Y. All Miller got was two small fish. He's truthful!

J. K. Gearhart, of the Regent Theatre, Templeton, Pa., is contemplating installing his own power plant. He says that the town power plant is too unreliable.

John Pearce, formerly of Shea's Theatre at Olean, N. Y., has been transferred as manager of Shea's Theatre at Bradford, Pa.

Palmer's Theatre at Black Lick, Pa., was destroyed by fire recently.

After being closed three months, the Commons Theatre, Hastings, Pa., has again opened six nights a week. During the shutdown period, Mr. Commons had done some extensive remodeling. The ceiling of the house has been raised seven feet, which allowed the addition of a balcony to seat 200 persons. He has also installed an office for himself, where he can talk pictures with visiting salesmen without interruption.

Moe Lewis, of the Colonial and Lyric Theatres, Altoona, Pa., has returned to his duties after spending a honeymoon in the East.

L. W. Barclay, who recently resigned as managing director of the Grand Amusement Company, Johnstown, Pa., has left for the coast, accompanied by his family, to take care of Goldwyn exploitation.

The Washington Theatre, Swissvale, Pa., celebrated its first birthday the week of October 9. A program of Paramount pictures and home talent entertainers was on the bill all week. T. J. Conlan is manager of the house, which is owned by the National Theatres Company.

The Cameraphone and Alhambra Theatres in East Liberty, Pa., are planning to enlarge next spring. It is said that the name of the latter will be changed to the Capitol.

The Nemo Theatre at Pitcairn, Pa., has been sold by the National Theatres Company to J. B. Kane, who took charge the first of the month.

Better Films Idea Spreads Throughout the Southeast

The Better Films idea has gone over to Tennessee and the executive council of the Tennessee Federation of Women's Clubs has recommended the creation of a department for carrying on these activities. Mrs. M. N. Whitaker, of Chattanooga, has been appointed chairman. Turner Jones, of the Public Relations Department of Southern Enterprises, made an address with this end in view.

Dan Webster, one of the most popular film men in the South, died in Miami, Florida, September 25, of acute indigestion.

John B. Carroll, of the Imperial, Asheville, recently pulled a giant style show in connection with his showing of "The Gilded Cage," that was the talk of the whole town. All attendance records for the house were broken, and an extra midnight matinee was necessary on the opening day.

W. T. Howell, of the Grand, Tuscaloosa, Ala., has been in Atlanta several days on business.

Walter Brackin, of the Callahan, Bainbridge, Ga., was a recent visitor on film row, Atlanta. Manning & Wink, of Dalton and Etowah, Tenn., were buying films in Atlanta the past week.

A. B. Hill will take over the Imperial and Duvall theatres, Jacksonville, Fla., to succeed Richard Dorman, and W. R. Bedell will suceed Phil Gersdorf at the Rialto, Atlanta, the change taking effect October 1. Mr. Gersdorf has gone to New York for Goldwyn's exploitation staff. The houses are Southern Enterprises theatres.

Among the changes along film row in Atlanta are the following: Tom Bailey has gone to Alabama and Tennessee territory for Southern Enterprises. R. H. Page, formerly with Pathe, has gone with Goldwyn as salesman. Bob Ingrem leaves F. B. O. to go with Arthur C. Bromberg attractions.

A. G. Moore, who operates the Savannah Theatre, Savannah, Ga., has taken over the Grand at Brunswick, Ga., and is having the house completely remodeled. Perry Spencer, formerly with the Pack Theatre, Asheville, will be manager.

One Wild Welcome

A newly-married couple in Toronto were given the surprise of their happy lives after they had returned to their home from the honeymoon, when they discovered their residence practically covered from top to bottom with lobby display signs of an appropriate nature, which had been secured from numerous exhibitors in the city.

These signs bore such titles as "Why Announce Your Marriage?" "Her Husband's Trademark," "Too Much Wife," "The Love Nest," "Frivolous Wives," "The Silent Vow," "My Boy," "Smilin' Through," "The Glorious Fool," "One Wild Week," "The Newly Weds," "Is Matrimony a Failure?" "No Woman Knows," "Love's Redemption," "Don't Call Me Little Girl," "The Truthful Liar," "Love Specialist," "For Those We Love,' "A Game Chicken," and scores of titles in similar vein. Melville Muir and his bride were the victims of this welcome.

Buffalo Headquarters Opened for Daylight Saving Battle

The Western New York unit of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York, Inc., has opened new offices in the Buffalo Lafayette Square Building, Room 313, from which a determinated offensive against the daylight savings ordinance is being launched by President George Williams and members of the executive committee. Letters are being sent to all railway men, post office employes, exchange and theatre workers, etc., asking their support at the polls at the next election when the question, "Shall Buffalo return to standard time?" will be submitted to a referendum.

Burglars entered the home of Ira M. Mosher, 435 Delaware avenue, Buffalo, Wednesday night, October 4 by jimmying a side window, and got away with one diamond, two ladies' gold rings, a topaz tie pin, a lavalier, a gold chain and locket, a pair of ear rings and a silver bracelet. Mr. Mosher is a former president of the Buffalo Theatre Managers' Association and for many years was manager of the Palace Theatre. He is now engaged in industrial film work.

E. O. Weinberg, former manager of the Buffalo Strand, and who has been managing the Syracuse link in the Mark chain of houses during the summer, is in Buffalo for a few weeks. Edgar Weill has returned to the Syracuse Strand with health much improved. Mr. Weinberg will soon go to Troy, where he will manage the new Strand Theatre, now in the course of construction.

Tom Joy, manager of the Hippodrome in Carthage, N. Y., and a former member of the Buffalo Metro exchange sales staff, writes that business is fine in his town, but exchange men insist that Tom tells them his box-office figures are terrible. Tom takes on the role of exhibitor quickly.

M. Gibson has resigned as manager of the Mozart Theatre in Elmira and Mrs. Jackson, lessee, has taken over the operation of the house.

Buffalo friends of Harold B. Franklin, former managing director of Shea's Hippodrome and now in charge of Paramount's theatre department, are informed that Harold has purchased a new home in New Rochelle, N. J., where he will welcome his old pals from Western New York when they are in the metropolis, Henry W. Kahn not included.

"NEITHER SCREEN NOR STAGE—BUT LIFE'S WINDOW"

Al Beckerich, the week of October 15, will celebrate the first anniversary of the Buffalo Loew State with a special program. Al promises a big surprise film program, special music, decorations, etc., and etc. The first year at the State has been a most successful one. Much of the credit for this success should go to Al himself, who has worked about 24 hours every day thinking up new ideas for putting the big theatre over. Well, it has gone over and Al is now sleeping an hour each day. He simply had to let down a bit.

Mr. Shea, of Feiber & Shea, operators of a chain of houses in Western New York and Pennsylvania, was a Buffalo Film Row visitor on Wednesday, October 11.

Nikitas Dipson, owner of the Family Theatre, Batavia, N. Y., is back in his home town after a trip to Europe. Mr. Dipson is also interested in houses in Olean.

The Star Theatre, Rome, N. Y., owned by Kaufman & Shane, has been sold to M. J. Kallet, of the Strand, in the same city.

Leave it to Harry Green, of the Premier, Buffalo, to get free space in the newspapers. Its an event when an exhibitor gets a notice during the week in one of the papers, but Harry arranged for the showing of pictures of a cruise staged by this paper and in return got a story. Nothing less than a diplomatic triumph.

Patrons of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, were given a treat the last half of the week. In an effort to advertise a new kind of candy, a man sought the permission of Mr. Shea to distribute samples in the lobby. Such a thing has never been done in the history of the house. But when Mr. Shea ate one of the samples, he liked it so well that he gave the word for the free distribution.

Deeds have been filed in the county clerk's office in Binghamton, N. Y., transferring the brick block at 153-159 Washington street from the estate of the late George C. Hemmingway to Harry Rubin and Hiram Mintz. The consideration was $150,000. It is said that negotiations are pending through which the property may be turned over to a new company for a picture theatre.

When Bobby Albert presented "The Storm" at the Albert Theatre in Lancaster, N. Y., he put on a special stage setting depicting a forest fire. A special matinee was also given for school children. Mr. Albert this week is presenting his annual event, "The Old Country Store."

The Elite Theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y., has been reopened under the management of George Miller. The house, which is at Main and Cleveland streets, has been redecorated and thoroughly renovated. "Beyond the Rocks" was the opening attraction.

John Amendola, manager of the Amendola Theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y., announces that he has added vaudeville to his picture program. The idea has proven popular with patrons of the Pine Avenue Theatre.

R. W. Thayer, manager of the new Strand Theatre in Niagara Falls, is specializing on a drive for the patronage of children. In his advertising he is informing parents to send their offspring and that strict attention will be paid to their welfare. He has also established special prices for the kiddies, as follows: matinees. 15 cents; night, 25 cents.

Ottawa's Regent Advances Prices; 50 Cents Highest

In view of various conditions affecting the picture theatre business during the past year or more, it is somewhat astonishing to note that admission prices for Allen's Regent Theatre, Ottawa, have been permanently advanced. Manager J. C. Kennedy, of the Regent, has announced a new scale which ranges up to 50 cents as the evening price for an orchestra seat, tax included. This is 10 cents higher than the previous orchestra floor rate. Along with the advance in admission prices at this house, however, came an increase in the size of the regular orchestra to fifteen pieces, with a weekly symphony concert each Monday evening by an augmented orchestar of 22 musicians. The Ottawa Regent has always been considered one of the best houses on the Allen chain.

Two special D. W. Griffith productions formed the attractions at two rival Ottawa theatres during the week of October 9, when "Orphans of the Storm" was presented for its second week at the Centre Theatre and "Way Down East" was shown at the Regent Theatre, this being the third local run for "Way Down East." Manager Stapleton raised prices for "Orphans of the Storm" at the Centre, evening prices being 80 cents for an orchestra seat and 60 cents for the balcony, this being considerably above the regular scale. In spite of the higher admissions, the feature ran for two weeks.

The first theatre in Canada to arrange a special benefit performance for the relief of sufferers in the terrible forest fire in Northern Ontario, October 4-5, was the Loew Theatre in Ottawa. Capt. Frank Goodale, manager, conducted a special show on Sunday evening, October 8, for this purpose, in co-operation with the Lions Club of Ottawa, of which he is an active member. Musicians, operators and all other employes of the theatre donated their services for the occasion. The performance was formally opened by Mayor F. H. Plant.

Harry Brouse, owner of the Imperial Theatre, Ottawa, is not worrying about the coal situation because he took time by the forelock early last spring, securing immediate delivery of a winter's supply of coal at that time, with the result that the bunkers of the theatre are filled—and at a fair price. Other theatres in Ottawa are not so well fixed, however, several of them having little or no coal. The Regent Theatre, Ottawa, hasn't a lump in the bucket, but a special supply is expected.

A. Donaghy, some years ago manager of the Monument Nationale Theatre, Ottawa, has secured a long term lease on the Francais Theatre, Ottawa, and took over the personal management of the Francais Theatre on October 9, succeeding Val Bureau as manager of the house. For the past four years, Mr. Donaghy has been an exhibitor and exchange manager in and around St. John, N. B.

Kansas City Robbers Hold Up Charles Burkey Second Time

Charles H. Burkey, owner of the Summit Theatre in Kansas City, was held up and robbed recently for the second time in two weeks. This time the two men robbed him of $217.50 and escaped in his Buick roadster. Mr. Burkey was leaving his theatre when the two men jumped on the running board of the car and instructed him to drive to another section of the city.

Just two weeks before this Mr. Burkey was leaving his theatre when a young man jumped on the running board of his car and told him to drive several blocks away. There he was robbed of about $400 and his car, which was found later. The losses were covered by insurance.

Lee D. Balsly, advertising manager of the Wichita Theatre, Wichita, Kansas, and Howard E. Jameyson, advertising man for the local branch of Universal, have traded places. Mr. Balsly has been in the distribution, exhibition and exploitation ends of the game. His first place in Kansas City was with Paramount. Later he was manager of the local First National office and then he purchased the Aladdin Theatre in Springfield, Mo. Jameyson established his reputation as advertising manager for the Liberty and Doric Theatres, this city, and was more recently with the Butterfly Theatre in Milwaukee.

Exhibitors who attended the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas, held at Wichita, Kansas, were: R. G. Liggett, Gene Gauntier, M. Van Praag, Art; A. F. Baker, Electric; Frey Meyn, Pershing; Wm. Meyn, Phototorium; R. R. Biechele, Osage; C. M. Smith, Tenth St.; C. E. Cook, executive office, all of Kansas City.

Lee D. Balsly, Wichita, Wichita; John H. Thomas, Novelty, Winfield; L. A. Wagner, Princess, Eureka; Richard J. Hopkins, Counsel, Topeka; Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Frazier, Grand, Pittsburgh; R. L. Ledou, Larabee Opera House, Isabell; I. E. Runyan, Iris, Hutchinson; Mr. and Mrs. Chas. H. Barron, Kansas, Wichita; H. A. McClure, Strand, Emporia; Mr. and Mrs. W. F. McDowell, Majestic, Ashland, Isis, Wellington; R. H. Holmes, Royal, Emporia; S. A. Davidson, Princess, Neodesha; J. R. Burford, Rex, Arkansas City.

G. A. Kubach, Lyric, Abilene; M. B. Shanberg, Midland Circuit, Kansas City, Mo.; S. M. Chambers, Miller, Palace, Regent, Princess, Wichita; Frank Davidson, Royal, Cherryvale; Clair M. Patee, Patee, Lawrence; Mr. and Mrs. Mark T. Wilson, Peoples, Chanute; Jack Roth, Iris, Eldorado; Arthur M. Ford, Marple, Wichita; C. L. McVey, Dreamland, Herrington; J. B. Tackett, Tackett, Coffeyville; M. G. Kirkman, Strand, Hays.

Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Sherman, Royal, Bonner Springs; Roy A. Sharp, Hunnewell, Hunnewell; Mr. and Mrs. Chas. A. Bull, Holland, Wichita; W. D. Fite, Novelty, Wichita; Wm. Looker, Oxford, Oxford; Mr. and Mrs. O. W. Paterslie, Gem, Burrton; S. E. Austin, Garden, Garden City; Jack Johnston, Isis and Mecca, Augusta; Jack Gross, Palace and Eldorado, Eldorado; John I. Saunders, Cheney, Cheney; L. M. Pace, Whitewater, Whitewater; W. H. Weber, Echo, Great Bend; L. S. Cook, Liberty, Augusta; Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Miller, Miller, Wichita, and S. F. Meade, Meade, Kingman.

Ed Frazier, of the Grand Theatre, Pittsburg, Kans., was a visitor at some of the exchanges last week.

R. B. Christian, who has the Casino Theatre at Excelsior Springs, Mo., dropped into town the other day and looked over some of the latest releases.

Lee Gunnison, who has a theatre at Atchison, Kan., was seen at some of the film exchange offices last week.

Fred B. McCracken, manager for United Artists, returned recently from a trip through the Missouri territory.

William Goodnight, owner of the Lyric Theatre at Holden, Mo., booked some of the season's best pictures on his last trip to town.

T. H. Lauck, who has the Opera House, Mound City, Kans., was a recent caller on various managers of the film exchanges here.

The Howe Brothers, Marceline, Mo., are keeping their Cater Theatre open every night now instead of the one night a week, which has held sway during the summer. This instance is only proof that business is picking up in Marceline.

A. W. Pugh has purchased the Liberty Theatre, Cherryvale, Kans. He owned the Airdrome at Erie, Kans.

Willard Frazier has bought the Empress Theatre, Paola, Kans., from J. P. Everett. Mr. Frazier's father, E. E. Frazier, has the Grand Theatre at Pittsburgh, Kans.

Leon Weil has purchased the Criterion Theatre, a 1,300-seat house, at Enid, Okla.

J. B. Tackett, of the Tackett Theatre, Coffeyville, Kans., was found looking over some of the products put out by the film exchanges here.

Mark Wilson, of the People's Theatre, Chanute, Kans., was another visitor last week.

The Palace, Wichita, furnished handkerchiefs to women patrons for the showing of "Grandma's Boy." It was explained that each lady should bring her handkerchief because she would laugh until she cried. Stanley Chambers is manager of the Palace.

Howard Price Kingsmore, until recently exploitation manager for the local Paramount office, has left for Pawtucket, R. I., where he will assume the directing management of the Strand Theatre, a Paramount house. Kingsmore was known as one of the livest publicity men in this territory and it is with real regret that his many friends bid him goodby. Prior to his position here he was a major with the United States Signal Corps in Siberia, and was for eleven years associated with the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Sam Harding, of the Liberty Theatre, Kansas City, has contracted for Warner Brothers' eight big specials to be shown at the Liberty and at all of Capitol Enterprises' Theatres. It is reported that this is the biggest contract ever closed by an independent exchange in this territory.

Locatelli Breaks Ground for Somerville, Mass., Theatre

John E. Locatelli, formerly a member of the Somerville Board of Aldermen, has broken ground on Ball Square, midway between Winter Hill and Teele Square, in that city, which, when completed, will be devoted exclusively to the presentations of carefully selected screen productions. His son, Albert Locatelli, who is now at the head of the Central Amusement Company, which operates the Central Theatre at Somerville, will assume the management of the new theatre on its completion. The new house is to seat 1,500.

Massachusetts amusement enterprises chartered during the past week at the office of the Bay State secretary of state, follow:

The Red Shield Company, Inc., Boston; entertainments; capital, $25,000; incorporators, Charles F. Atkinson, of Brookline, and Albert C. Blythe and Howard V. Knight, of Boston.

Boulevard Amusement Company, Revere; general amusement business; capital, $50,000; incorporators, Celeste D. Captell, of Revere, and Leo H. Tracy and Genevieve F. Tracy, of Salem.

Cosmopolitan Opera Company, Boston; opera houses and theatres; capital, $100,000; incorporators, Charles S. Malaguti and Tomaso Nazzaro, of Boston, and Arturo Casiglia, of South Berwick, Me.

Max Shoolman, one of the officials and principal owners of the Olympic Theatres Company, has been appointed head of a representative committee of the Boston Jewry, which is making plans for a campaign to raise $250,000 as Greater Boston's share for the rehabilitation of Palestine.

Performances at all the Worcester theatres were halted for more than a half hour one evening last week, owing to a breakdown at the main plant of the Worcester Electric Light Co.

The Strand Theatre at Worcester has effected a tie-up with the Worcester Sunday Telegram, where a coupon published in the latter last Sunday was redeemable for 5 cents on the purchase of any floor seat for a matinee, except on Thursday and Saturday. The scheme is said to have proved very successful.

Film fans of Boston certainly could not complain of a dearth of good pictures at the theatres this week. What with Griffith's new picture, "One Exciting Night," having its initial showings, and "Manslaughter," "The Man from Beyond," "The Fast Mail," "The Valley of Silent Men," "The Prisoner of Zenda," "Heart's Haven," "My Friend the Devil," "My Wild Irish Rose," "Forget-Me-Not," "The Bond Boy" and a dozen to twenty others, there has been a variety of entertainment afforded at the picture houses it would be difficult to duplicate.

THESE KIDDIES PUT UP A SPIRITED BOUT

The exploitation of Gordon Conrad, of the Auditorium Theatre, Melbourne, on Wallace Reid in "The World Champion." A narrow platform with a painted background of spectators got the crowd.

Atlanta's Picture Theatres Have Week of Great Business

The week of October 1 has been a great one for the picture houses in Atlanta. The Metropolitan played to capacity all week with "The Eternal Flame," the crowds also enjoying Buel B. Risinger's magnificent symphony orchestra, which opened the fall season at the Metropolitan several weeks ago.

The Howard had for its chief attraction "Manslaughter." Business was splendid, an especially effective prologue, and some exploitation that rang the bell helping considerably.

At the Rialto, "In the Name of the Law" held forth, and, backed up by excellent exploitation and good salesmanship, played to good business, which picked up through the week. A Sunshine comedy called "Puppy Love" and the International News were also used to good advantage.

The Criterion played a return engagement, by popular demand, of "Penrod," and this boyhood classic was well received, despite the fact that it was a second run. Lloyd Hamilton's "The Rainmaker" was also returned, with excellent results.

Business at the Strand with "The Kick-Back" was fair. Clyde Cook's "The Chauffeur" played a return engagement, completing the bill.

The Tudor is making a financial success of second, and even third runs. The past week saw, for Monday and Tuesday, "The Heart of Maryland," which played to good business; Wednesday and Thursday saw Thomas Meighan's starring vehicle, "Civilian Clothes," and Friday and Saturday, "Paid Back," a new release, which was well received.

The Grand, which plays a feature picture and comedy-reels in conjunction with five reels of vaudeville, played to average business with Mabel Normand in "Head Over Heels" and Bert Lytell in "The Face Between."

William R. Bedell, formerly in the home office of Southern Enterprises, has assumed the managerial desk at the Rialto Theatre, and has started off his new career with a smashing campaign on Paramount's "Pink Gods." Especially effective cut-outs of Bebe Daniels and a jewel-showcase full of diamonds—$20,000 worth of them—guarded by two stalwart "strong arms of the law," in the lobby are high lights of Mr. Bedell's campaign.

Phil Gersdorf, who came from Macon to manage the Rialto, Atlanta, has accepted a position in the exploitation department of Goldwyn's Kansas City office.

Film Row heard, with deep regret, of the sudden death of Dan Webster, veteran and popular film salesman, who was on the Metro payroll. Mr. Webster died on Sunday, September 26, of acute indigestion, in Miami, Fla. The funeral was held in Atlanta.

"Pup" (G. M.) Phillips—it's kind of hard to know what to call him, though his friends hail him as "Pup," while his paycheck is made payable to G. M.—anyway, he is now managing the Strand Theatre, and is making 'em sit up and take notice. There are a number of folks who insist that his nickname should be "Pep" instead of "Pup."

Ralph DeBruler, who used to manage the Howard and Grand theatres here has accepted a position in the exploitation department of Goldwyn, and is en route to New York City.

Manager Willard Patterson, of the Metropolitan and Criterion theatres, has just installed a wonderful new orchestra in the Metropolitan. It will be directed by Buel B. Risinger, of New York, with Wallace Jackson as concertmaster.

Manager James Jackson, of the Tudor Theatre, narrowly escaped serious injury when his automobile was struck by a trolley car during a recent "Careful Driving" campaign put on by the Junior Chamber of Commerce. Manager Jackson is inclined to be a little sarcastic about "Be Careful" campaigns now—it seems he was observing the rules, but the trolley-car wasn't!

W. T. Murray, who manages the Alamo No. 2, is working out a scheme which he promises to reveal, as soon as it is "air-tight" and "fool-proof," for making a theatre in the heart of the shopping district a financial success. The Alamo No. 2 plays second-runs to two-day engagements, and by reason of its location caters chiefly to women—which gives it a good business for the morning and afternoons, but makes it bad in the evenings.

The Brunswick Theatre will, in future, be known as the Grand Theatre, and will be operated by A. G. Moore, of the Savannah Theatre. A manager has not as yet been chosen, though Mr. Moore expects to make his announcement soon.

Mr. Manning, of Manning and Wink, who operate a small chain of theatres around Atlanta, spent a couple of days in town recently.

DeSales Harrison, of the Howard Theatre, deserves a great deal of credit for the way in which he put over "Manslaughter" at this theatre recently. Some people even go so far as to accuse him of originating the Junior Chamber of Commerce's sensationally successful "Be Careful" week as exploitation for the picture, though Mr. Harrison modestly disclaims any such allegation, although his tie-up with this special week resulted in mighty good business for the picture.

Baltimore Plans Referendum on Daylight Saving Measure

Daylight saving, which has seriously hurt exhibitors' business during the past summer, when it was in effect in Baltimore, Md., is to have a referendum. Whether it will become a permanent institution in Baltimore or be discarded, will be decided by the people at the municipal election to be held next May.

The Gayety Theatre, Baltimore, Md., built after the fire in 1904, which measures 63 by 175 feet, has been sold to Louis Applefeld and Joseph I. Hamburger and the title has been transferred from the Baltimore Theatre Company of New York to them. The entire assessment on the property amounts to $230,000. There is a possibility that the theatre will be leased within a short time.

That an immediate inspection of the exits of picture theatres and theatres be made in Baltimore, was the request of a committee from the grand jury received by J. Frank Crowther, Inspector of Buildings, on Friday, September 29.

The Morgan Pictures Corporation has been incorporated under the laws of the State of Maryland with a capital stock of $75,000. John A. Holden is named as the incorporator and the office of the company is 416 Equitable Building. This company will produce, distribute and lease motion pictures.

The case against Frederick Clement Weber, manager of the McCoy Theatre, Baltimore, Md., and former manager in that city for the affairs of Winthrop Smith Company, in which a petition was filed in the Circuit Court, No. 2, asking that Mr. Weber be declared in contempt of court, was dismissed by Judge Charles F. Stein when it came up before him. Mr. Weber's stopping payment on a check which was sent to Winthrop Smith & Company, which, the petition claimed, was in contempt of the order from the court asking that an accounting be given of funds which were received as commissions, was the cause of the action. After Mr. Weber explained his side of the case, the action was dropped and the case dismissed.

George A. McDermitt, formerly manager of the Garden Theatre and Century Roof, of the Whitehurst Theatrical Interests of Baltimore, resigned his position on Friday, September 29, and has gone to New York, where he will become associated with a large theatrical company and have charge of several theatres. William H. Whitehurst, general manager of the Whitehurst interests, will assume direct control of the Garden Theatre and the Century Roof, and William F. Stumpf, who has been acting as resident manager of the New Theatre, has been transferred to the Garden. He will act as resident manager at that theatre under Mr. Whitehurst. The New Theatre is now directly under the control of Eugene M. Daly, who is managing the Century Theatre also.

Thomas D. Goldberg, who, with Arthur B. Price, heads a group of Baltimore picture theatres, went to New York with his wife on Sunday, October 1, to pay a visit to her family in that city. They returned to Baltimore on Wednesday.

Dr. Milton (Mickey) Whitehurst, brother of Charles E. Whitehurst, president of the Whitehurst Theatrical Interests in Baltimore, is acting now as football coach of the Third Corps Area team at Fort Howard, Md.

"Murphy" Snyder, who has been employed at the Comedy Theatre for seven years, succeeded Joseph Robbins as manager about five weeks ago.

An apartment has been leased in the Emory Court Apartments, through the office of Charles Greenblatt, by George A. McDermott, manager of the Garden Theatre, and Century Theatre Roof.

A two-story brick opera house is planned for erection on Chincoteague Island, Va., which will have a seating capacity of 800. Wilson E. Booth, of Salisbury, Md., is back of the project. The theatre will measure 153 by 42 feet and cost approximately $50,000.

A picture theatre seating 1,000 will be built at 109 Henry street, Roanoke, Va., in the near future by A. F. Brooks and C. Tiffany. The cost will come over $15,000.

Philadelphia

Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company of America, has taken over the Ice Palace at 45th and Market streets. This is a huge building and it will shortly be visited by Mr. Mastbaum's engineers and architects, who will advise to what extent alterations for a general improvement can be accomplished. The new acquisition will be maintained as a general amusement resort.

Harry Blumberg has taken a long lease on the store at 262 North 13th street, where he will have more room and better facilities for handling his increasing business on motion picture theatre supplies. He will also have a first class repair shop.

John Sheridan, 4035 Warren street, door-man and ticket taker for the past five years of the Family Theatre, succumbed after a short illness and will be buried in the Cathedral Cemetery.

SOL LESSER
Who Presents "Oliver Twist"

Jackie Coogan Burns Old Print

It might interest exhibitors to know that Sol Lesser, presenting Jackie Coogan in Charles Dickens' "Oliver Twist," paid thousands of dollars for a film and then destroyed it—rather Jackie did the destroying of the film by setting it on fire.

The reason of this expensive destruction will commend itself to the most cautious financier and the most captious critic, for what was purchased was an old print of "Oliver Twist"—made many years ago, in fact.

The motive of the purchase and the motive of the destruction was to protect the exhibitors of the world from re-releases of this aged relic of a past era in the silent drama which re-release could be so timed that it would be exhibited at about the same time Jackie Coogan's screen version of the masterpiece was presented the market.

Shown Abroad

With the arrival in London of E. Bruce Johnson, foreign manager for First National, comes word from Ralph J. Paugh, head of the London office for the First National organization, that Jackie Coogan's "Oliver Twist" production will soon have a big European premiere.

Johnson will remain in London for the Coogan premiere and, prior to returning to the United States, will make a careful survey of conditions throughout entire Europe.

First National will release "Oliver Twist" throughout the entire world, this being one of the first super-productions that has been negotiated for in this respect.

Lesser Tells Why Deal Was Made with F. N.

When Sol Lesser brought the print of "Oliver Twist" to New York he had definite road-showing plans regarding it. Everything was prepared for the road-showing of the production and Lesser entered Gotham ready to place initial companies out immediately.

However, after having conferred with members of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., Lesser realized that the exhibitors throughout the land who had booked all of Jackie's former pictures should be given the opportunity to receive and exhibit the Dickens super-production. Lesser felt that these men who had put their shoulder to the wheel and made records with Jackie's products should make records again with "Oliver Twist."

Consequently the road-showing plan was abandoned and a deal entered into between Lesser and First National for world distribution.

"The Jackie Coogan production of 'Oliver Twist' cost four or five times more than the usual Coogan features," says Lesser. From its incipiency both Mr. Coogan and I felt that we should obtain advanced admission charges and consequently the road-show plan presented itself in full measure and all work was proceeded upon along these lines.

"Briefly, I saw the exhibitor's angle, as soon as I arrived east and I immediately sought to prevail upon those with whom I am associated in the West Coast Theatres, Inc., organization to confirm my opinions. It was not long before they, too, realizing the exhibitor's standpoint consented to a world distribution arrangement for the picture with First National.

"At this time I wish to congratulate Adolph Ramish, A. L. and M. Gore for being so liberal-minded in this transaction, and we all anticipate the greatest results from this, Jackie's greatest photo-production. I am sure that First National will leave no stone unturned in the sincere endeavor to establish a record both from the distribution end and from the box-offices of the exhibitors throughout the country who are going to present this masterpiece.

Lesser is now in Los Angeles, having arrived there this week from the east. He was away from his West Coast desk four weeks, stopping in Chicago to attend the special First National executive meeting en route to Los Angeles.

Field Men to Push "Oliver Twist"

The Jackie Coogan Productions organization announce that, in addition to the extensive exploitation campaign scheduled to be carried on throughout the country on Jackie Coogan's big "Oliver Twist" offering, they will have representatives in the field besides.

Arrangements have been made whereby Harry Rathner, of the Coogan eastern offices, and Max Roth, of the same organization, will immediately enter the field and boost the "Oliver Twist" product to the greatest extent.

It is planned to present the Dickens classic at special previews in all the large key centers, and all exhibitors, exchangemen and people generally interested in the picture will be asked to attend these special showings. They will be staged in elaborate manner with luncheons or dinners preceding each showing. It is likely the ball-rooms of the various large hotels throughout the country will be used for the purpose.

Messrs. Rathner and Roth expect to leave New York this week on this important mission, Rathner taking over the middle west, Roth the south. It is likely representatives will leave from the West Coast Coogan offices also.

Meanwhile Associated First National are working hard to complete all arrangements and accessories for the production so that its general release date will be on schedule time—November 20.

"Oliver Twist" to Play at the Strand

After all, the motion picture industry is like any other branch of the world's industry. For now comes announcement from Sol Lesser to the effect that the Jackie Coogan Production of "Oliver Twist" will not only sail through Associated First National Pictures channels for the world, but that instead of breaking onto Broadway, New York, in a "legitimate" theatre, the Coogan special will enter an engagement at the Strand Theatre commencing October 29.

It was Mr. Lesser's intention to place "Oliver Twist" in a Broadway "legitimate" house for a run, but with the signing of a contract with First National for the world release it was no more than right that the feature play be placed in a First National motion picture theatre.

Coogan Film Perfect In All Details

To one not familiar with life in Egypt, the mistakes of a director filming Egyptian episodes and never having visited Egypt, would be unimportant. But to many people visiting the motion picture theatre, the mistakes of a director laying his episodes in London, England, would be painfully apparent.

Frank Lloyd, who directed Jackie Coogan in Charles Dickens' masterpiece, "Oliver Twist," was selected primarily because he is recognized by all picturegoers as one of the finest directors in the industry.

Another quality that rendered Lloyd the logical man to transcribe "Oliver Twist" from the pages of a book to the screen of picture theatres was his love for and knowledge of children. Lloyd knows how to get along with juvenile folk and to make them love him heartily and without restraint.

But the final fact that rendered Frank Lloyd the inevitable choice for the difficult "role" of directing the great production was his knowledge of the London not only of today but of the Dickens period as well.

When it came to selecting the characters to portray the many important roles, Lloyd knew just what he wanted, and those who have witnessed private screenings of "Oliver Twist" will testify that those who support little Jackie Coogan in this screen masterpiece are truly living Dickens characters in every detail.

An exhibitor since 1905!

So John Karzin, of St. Louis, is nominated Daddy of Them All.

Irving Lesser Heads Coogan In East

The Jackie Coogan eastern offices have now been named the Distributing offices of Jackie Coogan Productions. The seat of activity is in New York City and is in charge of Irving M. Lesser, brother of Sol Lesser.

The productions of Jackie Coogan are made in Los Angeles with huge space leased at United Studios, Hollywood. All business pertaining to the distribution and sanctioning of Jackie Coogan film contracts is handled in the New York offices under Irving Lesser's guidance.

With the closing of a world releasing contract for "Oliver Twist" with Associated First National Pictures, Inc., the eastern offices will be enlarged and added attaches immediately placed at work. The "Oliver Twist" contract represents a big undertaking insofar as distribution is concerned, and it will be some time ere Irving Lesser will be able to return to the West Coast.

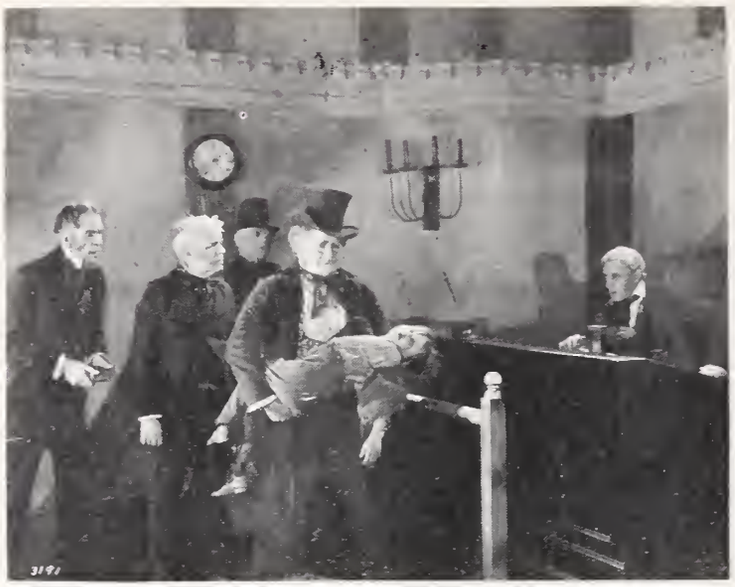
It is the intention of Lesser to establish a definite system pertaining to personal contact between salesman and exchange manager and exhibitor. In addition to the strong forces of First National, the Coogan organization will have its own men in the field as well and Harry Rathner, widely known in film sales circles throughout the country, leaves in the near future for a tour of the exchanges that will shortly handle the Jackie Coogan "Oliver Twist" production.

Last "Shot" Taken of Coogan Film

The last shot has been made in Jackie Coogan's newest picture, the working title of which is "Fiddle and I." The story was written by Mr. and Mrs. Jack Coogan and was directed by E. Mason Hopper. It will be a First National release.

Prominent in the cast with Jackie is Gravini, a well-known continental actor.

JACKIE COOGAN AS OLIVER TWIST



STIRRING SCENE FROM JACKIE COOGAN'S BIG PRODUCTION, "OLIVER TWIST"

Heavy Bookings On Coogan Production

That "Oliver Twist" will have early release bookings and that all possible speed will be exercised in the endeavor to prepare accessories for the Jackie Coogan feature is made known by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., which has charge of world distribution for the new Coogan product.

Ever since the announcement that First National would handle the Dickens film was made, telegrams, letters and telephone calls have been pouring in on that organization from exhibitors throughout the country asking for release dates and early bookings.

The general release date for "Oliver Twist" will be in the middle of November with some of the large cities playing it prior to that time. The Strand Theatre, New York, has booked the feature for October 29, and an extensive campaign is being mapped out for the initial presentation.

The "Twist" film is a genuine holiday production, and many exhibitors are planning it for holiday season. There is no doubt but that "Oliver Twist" is going to be a money-maker for all theatres. It contains a universal appeal and has with it the names of Dickens, Coogan, and the book classic itself.

Hays Commends Coogan Production

It was during the production of Charles Dickens' "Oliver Twist" that Will Hays, the "general" of the silent drama industry, visited the West Coast—and Jackie Coogan's studios. Jackie was in the midst of production on the Dickens film at the time.

Depth of emotional truth is one of the elements demanded by Hays and by other well wishers of the cinema art. Another quality more and more demanded of picture makers is that they project some educational value on the screen as well. Not tiresome instructions, but unobtrusive information valuable to remember and pleasant to recall.

Still a third quality emphasized by Mr. Hays as essential in properly conceived and wrought picture-plays was "wholesomeness." It ought not to be the purpose of any artist working in any medium to debauch the minds of the young or to encourage evil thinking by those unfortunately bent in that direction, says Mr. Hays.

When Will H. Hays personally congratulated Jack Coogan, Senior, father of Jackie, on the character of stories in which he was promoting his son's artistic and financial welfare, he said, "That's the kind of picture the world needs." Mr. Hays was referring to "Oliver Twist," which is soon to be flashed on the screens of the world.

Educationally, this Dickens classic calls the attention of millions throughout the world to a masterpiece of literature that humanity could ill afford to lose—one of the supreme literary products of all time.

Brockwell Scores In Comeback

Gladys Brockwell is back in the pictures! Miss Brockwell, in 1915, was one of the stellar queens of the stage. She played heroic roles of near juvenile character and earning the proper reward for her gifts from stage and screen, she retired from professional life.

During her days as a film star, one of her directors was Frank Lloyd, and when Mr. Lloyd was signed to direct Jackie Coogan in Charles Dickens "Oliver Twist," he carefully mapped out the possibilities for the various characters that were to support Jackie.

Scanning the names of the famous Dickens characters, Lloyd came to that of "Nancy Sikes." His mind traveled to one artist—and only one. And that artist was Gladys Brockwell.

Miss Brockwell returns to the screen and scores in the role of "Nancy Sikes" in this Coogan super-production. Everyone who has witnessed the showing of "Oliver Twist" claims that Miss Brockwell is the one and only movie "Nancy Sikes."

Campaign Book An Exhibitor's Aid

The exhibitor booking Jackie Coogan's "Oliver Twist" will be able to obtain a campaign book that does the picture industry proud. This book was compiled with the express intention of selling the public—not the exhibitor.

Within its many pages will be found every means of exploiting this famous Dickens picture, and every good showman will be bound to make a big clean-up if he but follows the simple instructions contained within the exploitation book.

These volumes are now in the New York office of First National and may be obtained from that source. They were compiled in addition to the usual complete press sheet that First National puts forth for the exhibitor.

In addition to exploitation stunts and how to put them over, there will be found special sets of reproductions of the cast, scenes from the play, illustrations of tie-ups for merchants, lobby, stage presentations—every imaginable asset for the man who wants to make records via his box-office.

John Gilbert in New Fox Film

"Calvert's Valley," John Gilbert's October 8 release, scores another triumph for the talented young star, says Fox. Gilbert had the principal part in "Monte Cristo," which is said to be breaking records at the 44th Street Theatre, New York. In his latest picture, which Fox says has all the elements which go to make up an excellent photoplay, Gilbert does some exceptionally good work, it is reported.

Noted Actors in Film Cast

In "The Dangerous Age," a First National Attraction presented by Louis B. Mayer, John M. Stahl has achieved another triumph in his climb towards the top rung of the directorial ladder of fame, First National says. This director's last two productions were "One Clear Call" and "The Child Thou Gavest Me."

"The Dangerous Age" presents Lewis S. Stone, Edith Roberts, Myrtle Stedman, Ruth Clifford, Cleo Madison, James Morrison, Helen Lynch and others of note among its list of screen artists.

Five Principals in Paramount Film

Here is the quintet of principals who have been selected for the chief roles in Cecil B. De Mille's current production for Paramount: Milton Sills, Elliott Dexter, Theodore Kosloff, Anna Q. Nilsson and Pauline Garon. The supporting cast will include such well-known players as Clarence Geldart, Lucien Littlefield, Robert Brower and Kalla Pasha.

Jeanie MacPherson is both author and scenarist of this successor to "Manslaughter," which Miss MacPherson also adapted to the screen. No title has been selected.

Beban's "Film-Act" Is Big Success

The first three of George Beban's season of thirty weeks in his combination of screen and spoken drama, "The Sign of the Rose," have met with pronounced success, American Releasing Corporation says.

At the California Theatre, Los Angeles; The Miller, at Wichita, and the Delmonte, in St. Louis, four performances daily have totaled a big weekly business in these large houses, it is stated.

Enthusiastic About "The Christian"

"The Christian," Goldwyn's production of Hall Caine's story, filmed largely in England and the Isle of Man, was shown in preview Wednesday night at the Paramount Theatre, Hollywood, to an enthusiastic audience.

"The Christian" was directed by Maurice Tourneur and the title role is played by Richard Dix. Mae Busch has the leading feminine role.

Goldwyn Assigns Exploitation Men

With a Goldwynner—as its field exploitation men are called—in each exchange, Goldwyn Distributing Corporation this week announced that it was ready to fulfill the requests of exhibitors throughout this country and Canada for assistance in putting over its Big Twenty for 1922-1923, starting with "Remembrance." Effective with the week of October 8 the men were actually at their posts.

The exploitation department, which is a division of the department of advertising and publicity, Howard Dietz, director, will carry out its work along definite and constructive lines. The fact that all Goldwyn pictures are completed a considerable time before the release enables the home office officials to give careful study to each one and to lay out the broad lines for exploitation and arrange national tie-ups.

The Goldwyn exploitation force now includes twenty-four men in addition to the exploitation manager, R. E. Pritchard, and the home office assistants. W. R. Ferguson, who has for the past two years been attached to the home office and engaged in exploitation work, has the position of special representative and will co-operate with the exploitation manager and attend especially to pre-release showings, especially at the Capitol Theatre.

The field men in the various offices, listed alphabetically, are:

Atlanta—James Carrier, former general manager for the Harry Koplar theatres in St. Louis and later on the exploitation forces of Robertson-Cole and Selznick, and most recently doing special work on the Pacific Coast in partnership with his brother.

Boston—John Wilstach, who comes of a family of well-known advance men, his father and two uncles having been for years leaders in their profession. Mr. Wilstach has exploited a number of important picture specials.

Buffalo—Irwin Zeltner, who for a number of years has been working on New York newspapers and in theatres here, and more recently has been engaged in exploitation work for the home office.

Chicago—Walter D. Nealand, whose experience includes exploitation work with Keith and Proctor, Savage, W. A. Brady, the Selwyns and the Sells-Floto circus, and who more recently has been engaged in exploiting big public events in Chicago, and the Wisconsin State Fair.

Cincinnati—Phil Gersdorf, who has been manager of theatres in Jacksonville, supervisor of theatres for Southern Enterprises in Macon, Ga., and who joins Goldwyn from the management of the Rialto Theatre in Atlanta, where he has been attracting much attion.

Cleveland—Eddie Carrier, who has been associated with his brother, also a Goldwynner, in his various undertakings, a thorough showman and exploitation man.

Dallas—James D. Stewart, who was general exploitation and publicity director for the E. H. Hulsey theatres in Texas, and more recently was manager of the new Hope Theatre in Dallas.

Denver—Richmond Dorman, who comes to Goldwyn from Southern Enterprises, having last been manager of their Imperial Theatre in Jacksonville, Fla. He has specialized in exploitation work.

Detroit—Earl Payne, who came East from the publicity department of the California Theatre, Los Angeles, to gain wider experience with Goldwyn.

Indianapolis—H. R. Snowden, who for two years was with the Robertson Cole exchange in Detroit, for a year photoplay editor of the Indianapolis Star, press representative on the southern tour of "The Birth of a Nation," and more recently with the T. L. Kearse theatres in Charleston, West Va.

Kansas City—William H. Branch, who has left the management of the Princess Theatre to come with Goldwyn. He has managed several of the Lynch and Hulsey theatres in Texas and knows the Middle West thoroughly.

Los Angeles—L. W. Barclay, who has for several years been general manager of the Grant Theatre Company's chain in and around Johnstown, Pa., and before that a newspaper man for a number of years, and an originator of many exploitation ideas.

Minneapolis—Charles C. Perry, who recently was managing director of both the State Theatre, Minneapolis, and the Capitol, St. Paul, for Finkelstein and Ruben, and before that manager of other important theatres in that section.

New Orleans—Robert H. Clemmons, who comes to Goldwyn from the Tivoli Theatre, Beaumont, Texas. He has been with various Hulsey houses in that state and was for a time with the Jefferson Amusement Company.

New York—Mr. Ferguson will give a considerable portion of his time to this exchange and will be assisted by Edward Finney, who has joined Goldwyn from the contract department of First National, and who will assist in exploitation in the territory around the city.

Omaha—Howard J. Phillips, who joins the Goldwynners from the management of the Sigma Theatre, Lima, O., a house that constantly ranks with the best in exploitation. Before going to Lima he was manager of the Grand Theatre, Tiffin, O.

Philadelphia—Paul Silver, who has been connected with a number of New York theatres, and who was one of the special exploitation force employed by Goldwyn for "Theodora."

Pittsburgh—William Robson, who was one of the original exploitation force with Famous Players, and who has been with that company also continuously, leaving that service to join the Goldwyn organization.

San Francisco—William A. Burke, who comes to Goldwyn from the publicity directorship of the Rialto Theatre, Butte, Mont., where he established himself as one of the livest of the live western men engaged in the business of putting over pictures.

St. Louis—H. H. Niemyer, who has resigned the publicity directorship of the Missouri Theatre to accept this post. Before he resigned for a European trip he occupied a similar post for the fourteen Famous Players theatres in the Missouri metropolis.

Seattle—Frank Burns, who has just left the post of director of publicity for the Southern Enterprise theatres at Orlando, Fla., and who has contributed many unusual ideas to exploitation as represented in the motion picture trade papers.

Washington.—R. J. LaVoise, who left the management of the Cameraphone Theatre, Pittsburgh, to accept his present post.

Toronto—Ben F. Wolcott, who has been with the Fox exploitation department, a veteran showman and advance man for legitimate attractions.

Goldwyn has arranged for the probable addition of several others to its force within a short time, since the early indications are that the Goldwynners are in great demand and their success with the first showings of "Remembrance" have been most pleasing.

Filming Exteriors for "Penzie"

Last week the filming of the exterior scenes of "Custard Court" in the Fox special production of "Penzie," featuring Mary Carr, was started upon by Director Brenon. In order to have the correct atmosphere for the cluster of dwellings which gave the Florence Bingham Livingston book its title of "The Custard Cup" a reproduction of the place was built over on Long Island, complete in every detail.

The court stands on the edge of a lively little town not far from Flushing Bay. Mrs. Penfield's home, which, according to the author, was constructed from an old barn, follows faithfully the description in the book. The lawns and flower-bordered walks in front of the other houses have been laid out with close attention to proper detail, and the little park in the center of the court, with its single apple tree, is in keeping with the scene.

"Cutting" C. Ray's New Picture

The work of cutting Charles Ray's second big photoplay production for United Artists' Corporation, "The Girl I Loved," a film version of the famous James Whitcomb Riley poem, is well under way. With the editing this work will consume about six weeks. Officials of the Ray Company declare: "The Girl I Love" will set a new mark of achievement for Mr. Ray on the histrionic side.

Cabanne Film for Early Release

"Till We Meet Again," the Dependable Pictures' offering, which Associated Exhibitors is releasing October 15, is declared to be a photoplay whose humor and pathos strike the deeper emotions; while the plot and characterizations are destined to hold the interest of every onlooker from first to last.

It is a William Christy Cabanne production, directed by him from the script of Edmund Goulding, and the cast is virtually all-star, with the talented Mae Marsh featured.

Playgoers Film for Early Release

Playgoers Pictures' officials declare that great interest has been aroused by announcement of the release, October 22, of their five-reel feature, "The Bootlegger's Daughter." Enid Bennett is starred. Fred Niblo has the leading male role.

The current offering was from the script of R. Cecil Smith, and the production was directed by Victor Schertzinger.

To Star Miss Haver

Mack Sennett announces his intention of starring Phyllis Haver in a series of full length comedy dramas. F. Richard Jones will direct Miss Haver in her starring debut and Associated First National Pictures will handle the distribution.

Barthelmess Film Given High Praise

Richard Barthelmess in "The Bond Boy," a First National attraction, scored a great triumph when it opened at the New York Strand Theatre, Sunday, October 8 says First National. Managing Director Joseph Plunkett, of the Strand, arranged an effective prologue for the presentation.

The motion picture critics of the daily papers were practically united in praising "The Bond Boy," which was produced by Inspiration Pictures, Inc., and directed by Henry King. Following are some of the comments:

Herald—In "The Bond Boy," Richard Barthelmess again enriches the screen with a portrayal of a poor "cracker white" in the South. American—All the advantages of the screen are undeniably attained in "The Bond Boy." Times—Richard Barthelmess, as the poor country boy who is bound out to an old skinflint and later accused of his murder, is true to his part.

Morning Telegraph—"The Bond Boy" is a film that the entire industry may well be proud of.

Evening Telegram—That excellent alliance, Richard Barthelmess, the star, and Henry King, the director, has outdone itself with the production of "The Bond Boy." Evening Sun—Barthelmess again gives a performance that entitles him to a place among the screen stars who hold the altitude record for lofty acting.

The Globe—"The Bond Boy" is another "Tol'able David."

Evening World—We think Barthelmess in "The Bond Boy," now being unwound at the Strand, has reached heights that even he did not dream of.

Big Change Is Made in Releasing Policy

A distinct change in the English release policy of American film companies has just taken place with the completion of arrangements by the European Motion Picture Company, Ltd., distributors of Universal films in Great Britain, for the showing of Universal pictures in the New Oxford Theatre, one of London's revue houses. This is the first time pictures have been shown in this house, and its initial venture into the screen world, the recent presentation of "The Storm," Universal's Jewel production of Langdon McCormick's celebrated play, met with great success.

"The Storm" will be followed by "Foolish Wives," and later by "Under Two Flags" and other Universal specials. This marks the first steps to be taken to carry out Carl Laemmle's recently announced policy of breaking the release dead-lock in England, and of showing American films in that country at approximately the same time they are presented in this country.

The European M. P. Company is said to be making rapid strides towards the perfection of one of the biggest and most efficient distributing organizations in Great Britain.

"If I Were Queen" an F. B. O. Film

"If I Were Queen," the first Ethel Clayton production to be distributed through the Film Booking Offices of America, heads the list of October releases of that company. The F. B. O. advertising and publicity department has made elaborate preparations for the release of this production and it will be issued with a complete service press book, and a number of attractive novelties.

F. B. O. officials believe that "If I Were Queen" is being issued at a particularly opportune time. It is said that it combines all the appeal of the costume play, which is now greatly in demand, and at the same time is the story of a present day American girl.

Wesley Ruggles directed the star in her first F. B. O. release. The picture is adapted from a story which appeared originally in Smith's Magazine, under the title of "The Three Cornered Kingdom." It is by DeVernet Rabell

Madge Kennedy Sees New Films

Madge Kennedy, star of the Kenma special production, "The Purple Highway," recently viewed the picture. The finished version of the production was shown to an audience composed of the star herself, Rufus Steel, production manager, who also developed the story; Henry Kolker, the director; Harold Bolster, president of the Kenma Corporation; several other officers of the new film corporation, and the staff of cutters and title editors. It was the consensus that the film, which is in six reels, now represents the goal which had been aimed at.

Ralph Graves in a New Picture

Ralph Graves, "developed" by Universal, has been cast for the role of the boy in "The Ghost Patrol," Sinclair Lewis' story. Edith Roberts, starred in her own right by Universal, and recently with Paramount, has the role of the girl. George Nichols will play the big character role. Production will start at once at Universal City. Nat Ross will direct the picture.

Work Begun on Ray's New Production

Research work and costume designing have begun for Charles Ray's photoplay production, "The Courtship of Miles Standish," which will follow "The Girl I Loved," a film version of James Whitcomb Riley's poem, and which will be his third production for United Artists Corporation.

It is said to be the intent to make this feature with the love story of John Alden and Priscilla so accurate that it will be accepted in the schools of the country and everywhere where the famous Longfellow classic is a part of educational work.

Selects Cast for Meighan Films

A large and notable cast is said to have been selected for Thomas Meighan's latest Paramount picture, "Back Home and Broke," George Ade's second original story for the screen, which has been put into production at the Paramount Long Island studio. Lila Lee will be leading woman and Florence Dixon, who just completed the role in "Anna Ascends," Alice Brady's picture, will be the other girl. Charles Abbe, who played "Cappy Ricks" with Meighan a year ago, will have one of the principal roles.

Equals Record

"Manslaughter," Cecil B. DeMille's Paramount production featuring Thomas Meighan, Leatrice Joy and Lois Wilson, after three weeks of capacity business at the New York Rivoli, moved down to the Rialto for a fourth week on Broadway. Early indications were, it is stated, that the week's business would equal if not exceed that of any one of the three previous.

This equals the Rivoli-Rialto record of continuous showing previously held jointly by "The Miracle Man," "Deception" and "Blood and Sand."

Reid To Be Star In "Nobody's Money"

Wallace Reid's next picture for Paramount, which started Monday, will be a screen adaptation of "Nobody's Money," a farce-comedy by William Le Baron. This author also wrote "Apple Blossoms" and "The Very Idea," two other successful plays.

"Nobody's Money" first opened at the Longacre Theatre, New York, in the summer of 1921. Wallace Eddinger was the star.

Wallace Worsley will direct Reid and Wanda Hawley will play the feminine lead.

Said to Be a Big Box-Office Hit

"The Hands of Nara," the Harry Garson production for Metro of the popular novel by Richard Washburn Child in which Clara Kimball Young is starred, has, Metro says, proved itself one of the most substantial box-office attractions of the season. The photoplay, the first of a series which are released chiefly by Metro Pictures Corporation, has found great favor with exhibitors everywhere, it is stated.

Many circuits and chains of theatres have made arrangements to run the film in their houses, according to reports.

Records Broken by "Over the Hill"

The William Fox special, "Over the Hill," is breaking all picture records in Melbourne, Australia, according to advices received at the New York offices of the Fox Film Corporation. Up to the middle of August it had played ten weeks at the same theatre and was still going strong.

William Russell in "Mixed Faces"

"Mixed Faces" is the title of William Russell's October 22 release. It is a Fox production and was directed by Roland V. Lee from the adaptation of the story by Roy Norton.

Pictures in Work at Universal City

Several productions have been started at Universal City which will offer screen fans entertainment of the highest quality, Universal says.

"The Kidnapers," one of the "Scarlet Car" stories by Richard Harding Davis, is being made with Herbert Rawlinson as star, under the direction of Stuart Paton. Claire Adams is the leading woman. "The Summons," a story by George Patullo, which Universal bought for Frank Mayo's use, is under production with William Worthington handling the megaphone. Both "The Kidnapers" and "The Summons" were prepared in continuity by George Randolph Chester, author of the "Wallingford" stories.

Nat Ross is preparing to start work on "The Ghost Patrol," the humorous story by Sinclair Lewis, scenarized by Edward T. Lowe, Jr., and Raymond L. Schrock. The cast will be "all star." Robert F. Hill, director of two of Universal's best serials, "Robinson Crusoe" and "The Radio King," is preparing to direct a new chapter play titled "Wolves of Society."

In production for a few weeks past are such specials as "Forsaking All Others," in which Colleen Moore, Cullen Landis, June Elvidge and others are directed by Emile Chautard; "White Tiger," starring Priscilla Dean; "The Runaway Girl," starring Gladys Walton; "Around the World in Eighteen Days," starring William Desmond, and Hoot Gibson's latest starring effort, "Kindled Courage." Filming for von Stroheim's spectacle of Vienna, "Merry-Go-Round," proceeds consistently.

Three series of two-reel productions based on condensed dramatic stories are under way: "Tales of the Fish Patrol," Jack London's famous sea stories starring Jack Mulhall; Timberland Tales, starring Roy Stewart, and "The Leather Pushers," H. C. Witwer's short reel pictures starring Reginald Denny.

Comedies starring Lewis Sargent and Neely Edwards are being filmed. George Archainsbauld is preparing to film "The Power of a Lie," Johann Bojer's story, with a cast of well known players. Rupert Julian is also preparing an all-star special.

Fox Picture Based on a Famous Novel

In the William Fox cast for the dramatic picture, "My Friend the Devil," which is based on George Ohnet's famous novel, "Dr. Rameau," are Charles Richman, Barbara Castleton, Peggy Shaw, William Tooker, Benny Grauer, Robert Frazier, Alice May, Myrtle Stewart, Adolph Miller, Mabel Wright, John Randall.

Charles Richman brings to the screen a stage career that has won the applause of the theatregoers in New York City and on the road. Barbara Castleton is entirely a product of the screen. Her success and popularity has been due to hard work and an engaging personality. She has done some fine screen acting.

William Tooker has had a long career, both on the stage and the screen. He has played important roles with John Mason, Emma Dunn, Lionel Barrymore and other stage celebrities.

Peggy Shaw is new to the screen. She began her career in Pittsburgh as a dancer. Soon after she came to New York she was engaged for Ziegfeld's Frolic. She came into pictures as a leading woman with William Farnum in "A Stage Romance."

Benny Grauer, now only twelve, has had stage experience as well as picture successes. John Randall has had a varied career in his short time on the stage and screen. He played in stock in Portland, Me., Little Rock, Ark., and St. Louis, Mo.

Paramounts Slated for October 15

Paramount will release on October 15 the George Melford production. "Burning Sands," with Wanda Hawley and Milton Sills. and Wallace Reid in "The Ghost Breaker."

"Burning Sands" is being advertised as "A Man's Answer to 'The Sheik,'" and, judging from the reception of the picture in pre-release showings. the new Melford picture will, in the opinion of Paramount, duplicate the popularity of his previous drama of the Sahara. It is taken from the novel by Edward Weigall, the scenario being by Olga Printzlau and Waldemar Young.

"The Ghost Breaker" is a comedy-melodrama. It is an adaptation by Jack Cunningham of the stage play by Paul Dickey and Charles W. Goddard. Alfred E. Green, who handled the megaphone for "The Bachelor Daddy" and "Our Leading Citizen," was the director.

The story starts off with feuds in Kentucky and moves to castles in Spain, with a happy-go-lucky interlude in New York.

F. B. O. to Release Society Drama

Film Booking Offices of America this week announces "The Black Domino," a society drama, directed by Harry Revier, as a future F. B. O. release. It is interpreted by a cast including Jack Connolly, Dorothy Revier, Harry Van Meter, Juanita Hansen, Eugene Burr and Lee Willard.

"The Black Domino" tells the story of an unscrupulous doctor who uses his beautiful wife to find subjects for blackmail.

Laura La Plante In Desmond Film

Universal has assembled a speedy cast to help William Desmond to get "Around the World in Eighteen Days." Opposite the star in his newest Universal chapter-play is Laura La Plante, who provided the beauty and feminine grace for Desmond's drama in "Perils of the Yukon."

Boyd Irwin and Spottiswoode Aitken, the dean of character players, have been added to the cast. Reaves Eason is directing from a story by George Bronson Howard.

Gene Stratton Porter to Enter Production Field

Gene Stratton Porter, one of the most widely read living novelists, has entered the film production field with plans for the immediate screening of eight of her most popular stories.

Production work on the first of these, "Michael O'Halloran," already is well under way at the Thomas H. Ince studios at Culver City, where the cameras began "shooting" September 25. James Leo Meehan, a former newspaper man, who has achieved success since he entered the motion picture field three years ago, is directing the picture with Tennant C. Wright as production manager.

Mrs. Porter has a record of more than ten million books sales in the English language with eight foreign translations, including the obscure Arabic. Her reading audience is estimated on a conservative basis in excess of fifty millions in the English language alone while since the publication of her first novel, "Freckles," her publishers have sold her books at the average rate of 1,645 copies per day. In the eighteen years since her first big success, each new story has met with immediate response, the most recent, "Her Father's Daughter," having been ranked as first and second, after ten and eleven months on the market, on the Bookman's list of "best sellers."

Exhibitors throughout the country will, it is stated, welcome the news of her production plans enthusiastically, especially in the light of Mrs. Porter's decision personally to supervise the making of each picture in order that the spirit, theme and characters of her novels, as translated to the screen, shall be in thorough accord with the books from which they are taken.

Of special interest is the fact that Mrs. Porter and her director have worked and planned together for more than a year before the first wheel of production work was turned.

"In the past I have been unwilling to sell screen rights to my stories because of the risk that they might be butchered in the process of film adaptation," declared Mrs. Porter in discussing her new venture. "The only alternative was to enter the production field myself, which could not be done until I had taken time to study the technique of this great industry. Accordingly I have devoted practically all my time during the past four years to detailed study of the technique of motion picture production.

"I realize that a novel cannot be translated to the screen, page for page, or chapter by chapter. There are certain well defined limitations which must be regarded. But I am equally convinced that producers in many instances have lost the confidence of the 'fan' public because of the distortions of familiar popular novels and stories which have found their way to the screen. I was determined not to break faith in any such way with the public which has been good enough to read and love my fiction characters."

Following the completion of screening her first story, seven other novels will be filmed, according to Mrs. Porter's plans. They are "The Harvester," "The Girl of the Limberlost," "Laddie," "At the Foot of the Rainbow," "Her Father's Daughter," "Daughter of the Land" and "The Firebird."

This is Sympathy, the girl who learned that there's nothing in a name.

Mary's New "Tess" Called Her Finest

"The crowning achievement of Mary Pickford's career," declared Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists' Corporation, as the final scene in Miss Pickford's new 1922 reproduction of that famous screen classic, "Tess of the Storm Country," flashed across the silver-sheet at a recent private showing in New York for Miss Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, others in the Pickford-Fairbanks party, and executives of United Artists. This verdict was indorsed unanimously by all who saw Miss Pickford's own version and own re-creation, just completed, of one of her early picture triumphs.

Miss Pickford's reproduction of "Tess of the Storm Country," probably marks the first time in the industry that any great star has seen fit to remake in later years, and as an independent producer, a photoplay which earlier had served as one of the big steps toward placing her in the very forefront of cinema artists.

Miss Pickford is said to have taken full advantage of every one of the tremendous improvements in photoplay making that have come into the industry since the first "Tess of the Storm Country" was made. Even the story itself, from that widely read novel by Grace Miller White, is considered vastly improved upon under Miss Pickford's personal handling, while in the matter of direction, settings, art work and photography, this 1922 reproduction is so far superior to the original of eight years ago as to defy comparison and beggar description. Arrangements are being made for an early premiere.

Lucille Ricksen To Be In New Film

Lucille Ricksen, talented sixteen-year-old screen beauty, has been signed by Universal for an indefinite period.

Her first featured effort at Universal City probably will be in "Wolves of Society," a serial of social adventure, which Robert Hill will direct. The role will be a second lead in support of the star, who has not yet been chosen.

Buys Story for Harry Carey

"The Canyon of the Fools," a story by Richard Mathews Hallett, which appeared originally as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post, has been purchased by P. A. Powers as a future Harry Carey production.

Carey is now producing "The One Man."

Along New Lines

Announcement is made that the new D. W. Griffith photoplay production, "One Exciting Night," will be given its New York opening at the Apollo Theatre, the evening of October 23, thus introducing Mr. Griffith's fifth annual season on Broadway.

"One Exciting Night" has been arranged for a full theatrical performance, running about two and one-half hours. The story of this new Griffith picture is said to be an abrupt departure from the themes generally accepted for large productions, there being no costumes nor spectacular scenes nor big crowds. The major part of the story observes the Greek unities of dramatic structure, the action all taking place in one night and one locality, with a steady progress toward the climax.

Charles Ray's Next Finely Emotional

Arthur S. Kane, Eastern representative of Charles Ray, has gone to the West Coast to confer with Mr. Ray and get a first view of the star's second United Artists' feature, "The Girl I Love," based on the poem by James Whitcomb Riley, which recites the impressive story of the Hoosier poet's own romantic experiences.

A letter from Kane says: "I have just seen the new Ray picture, and want to assure you that it is going to make film history. It is tremendous in its suspense and gripping power, and displays what I think is the finest piece of sustained emotional acting I have ever seen on the screen."

Williams Finishing New Picture

Earle Williams is putting the final touches on a new picture, "You Never Know." This production is being made at the Vitagraph Hollywood Studios under the direction of Robert Ensminger.

Gertrude Astor plays opposite Earle Williams and the cast includes such well known names as George Field, Claire DuBrey, James Conway, Louis Dumar, Walter Cooper and Leonard Trainer.

"Affinities" Comes to Exchanges

Announcement has been made of the arrival of prints in the various exchanges for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation of the Ward Lascelle feature, "Affinities," the comedy by Mary Roberts Rinehart and starring Colleen Moore and John Bowers. The reports also state that this feature is being viewed by the exhibitors for the purpose of first-run showing.

Noted Expert Praises Paramount Film

Dwight Franklin, sculptor and noted authority on the costumes and manners of historic periods, has given high praise to the Paramount production of "To Have and to Hold," with Betty Compson and Bert Lytell. According to Mr. Franklin the production has absolute historic accuracy, even down to the smallest details.

"I have never seen a costume picture more true to the period it represents," says Mr. Franklin. "The costumes are particularly good, and especially the women's costumes, which is the point at which most pictures of the kind fall down. Even the head-dresses, the buckles and all the small details are in keeping with the period. The pirates were remarkably well chosen and costumed."

Stahl Near Death When Auto Skids

In his desire to secure realism in several of the big scenes in "The Dangerous Age," a First National attraction, John M. Stahl, the producer-director, and two of his cameramen narrowly escaped death when the car from which they were photographing a race between a train and an auto skidded as it reached a crossing and just missed plunging into the huge drivers of the locomotive.

The accident was caused by the water thrown out on the road by the speeding engine. The auto driven by Lewis S. Stone found room to stop on the side of the paved road, but the camera car, following at forty miles per hour, had to take a chance on the wet pavement.

Fortunately for the occupants the car only skidded around half way, stopping beside the train and so close to the tracks that the driver and director could have reached out and shaken hands.

Phyllis Haver in Big Comedy Drama

Promise of big activity is made for the near future on the Sennett studio lot, covering thirty-five acres in Los Angeles. Under Sennett's personal supervision a scenario staff headed by John Grey is busy with the stories and continuities destined to be screened in the near future.

A five-reel comedy-drama is being prepared for Phyllis Haver, it being the first in which that Sennett favorite and screen beauty will have been starred.

Another five-reel production is being made ready for Ben Turpin, whose vaudeville tour with Kathryn McGuire promises to extend enormously Ben's personal popularity.

Gibson In New Film

"Kindled Courage" is Edward Gibson's latest starring vehicle at Universal City. William Worthington is the director. Raymond Schrock prepared the continuity. Beatrice Burnham has the chief feminine role.

Plans Novel Means to Exploit Picture

Co-incident with the announcement of the formation of Associated Pictures Corporation, producing a series of super productions under the brand name of S-L Pictures, Herbert Lubin, of Sawyer and Lubin, organizers of the new company, has divulged some interesting plans concerning a campaign to be accorded the first production, "Quincy Adams Sawyer."

This picture, which will be released by Metro, will be introduced to first-run theatres throughout the country in a novel manner. In conjunction with the publicity department of Metro Pictures Corporation, arrangements are under way whereby a fleet of airplanes will carry to fifty first-run theatres on their opening day a print of "Quincy Adams Sawyer." En route to their various destinations, the airmen will distribute literature concerning the film, dropping pamphlets and a novelty now in preparation over the principal towns covered by each plane.

Following the arrival of the plane at each theatre, the management will make a brief introductory speech, pointing out the importance of the picture. The airplanes will cover points as far West of New York City as Denver.

Exact Locations of Story Seen in Film

By adhering to the exact historical location as presented by Washington Irving in his classic, "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," which will be released November 5 by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation under the title of "The Headless Horseman," Carl Stearns Clancy, producer of the picture, has given to the screen a vista of picturesque settings, it is stated, wherein every point of interest that found its way into the minds and hearts of the millions of those who read the book has been faithfully duplicated.

The countless who have followed the lives of these old historical Dutch settlers along the Hudson River will find, for instance, views of the old Dutch church, both interior and exterior, in which Ichabod Crane sang. A replica of the school house in which Ichabod taught has been built upon the exact historical location of Washington Irving's famous legend. It is further stated that many of the old dwellings used in Irving's day and which are now standing have been utilized in making the settings of this production authentic as regards every detail.

Select to Handle Latest Read Film

"Pawned," the J. Parker Read, Jr., production which has excited so much interest in the trade since it was brought on from the Coast some weeks ago, is to be distributed by Select Pictures Corporation. Negotiations between Mr. Read and Lewis J. Selznick, president of Select, were completed a few days ago and "hurry-up" instructions which have been issued all along the line are expected to land prints in Select branches throughout the country within the next three weeks.

Almost without exception those who have seen "Pawned" are unqualified in their statements that this latest Read production has in it practically every element which fits it admirably to existing market conditions in the industry. The scenario is from a story by Frank L. Packard, author of "The Miracle Man," which appeared some time ago in Munsey's Magazine. The direction is by Irving V. Willatt. Tom Moore and Edith Roberts are featured in a strong cast which also includes Charles Gerard, Josef Swickard and Billy Elmer.

"Pawned" is to be handled by the Select company as one of the big specials, produced outside the Selznick organization, which were promised in the recent announcement of the Select company's plans for 1922-23. It is admittedly one of the prize box office attractions recently made in the independent field and was secured by Select only after spirited bidding.

As one of the big specials it will reach the trade with an extremely unusual line of accessories in the way of billing matter and exploitation novelties which are now being prepared.

Brilliant Opening of Ingram Film

The Metro-Rex Ingram production of "The Prisoner of Zenda" had a brilliant opening at Loew's State Theatre in Los Angeles despite the fact that Sunday, September 17, was the hottest day southern California experienced in eight years.

Mr. Ingram and his wife, Alice Terry, could not be present at the opening as they are in Florida, where the initial scenes for "The Passion Vine," Mr. Ingram's newest production for Metro, are being filmed.

Fred Niblo Starts New Picture

Fred Niblo has commenced preliminary work upon James Forbes' stage success, "The Famous Mrs. Fair," which will be his first production, presented by Louis B. Mayer, for Metro. Niblo directed "The Three Musketeers," "Blood and Sand" and "The Mark of Zorro."

Frances Marion is working in cooperation with the director on the adaptations necessary for the proper translation of the stage success to the screen.

Gaynor Joins Firm of Howe & Conlon

Harold C. Howe and B. M. Conlon, who conduct an advertising and publicity bureau at 1608 Times Building, announce that Rufus W. Gaynor, a well-known newspaper and magazine man, will be affiliated with their offices commencing next week.

Mr. Gaynor was for several years on the staff of the New York Evening Sun and later was on the editorial staff of the McFadden publications. For two years he was confidential secretary to his father, the late Mayor William J. Gaynor of New York City.

Finds Business Slump Over; Showmen Want Big Pictures

"The slump in moving pictures is over." This is the definite conviction voiced by James R. Grainger, of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, on his return from a seven weeks' tour of the country.

Mr. Grainger visited every key city in the United States, talked with hundreds of exhibitors, came in touch with leading business men in all sections of the country and is back in New York fired with enthusiasm over the prospects for the new season.

"Every exhibitor I met was on his toes and looking for smashing big productions," said Mr. Grainger. "The talk about lying low and waiting for times to improve has passed. It is agreed that now is the time to go out and get business. The public has money to spend and it will go to picture theatres if we give the right sort of entertainment.

"Instead of figuring the cost of a show down to the minimum, exhibitors are more interested in the box office quality of a picture. They have had their fill of mediocre programs and want to gamble on getting big patronage with big attractions. This is a healthy condition. It means that we are out of a rut and creating a demand for the very best that the producers can supply.

"Many exhibitors told me that they approve of Goldwyn's policy in abandoning program pictures in favor of a limited number of big specials. They are enthusiastic over 'Remembrance' as a starter for the season. 'The Old Nest' made money for them and they have even greater faith in the drawing power of the latest Rupert Hughes picture, partly because times are better and partly because it is the finer production of the two. In a number of instances exhibitors came to me for advice in regard to exploitation, although the play date was still six weeks off.

"I also found a most decided advance interest in the second Goldwyn picture, 'Sherlock Holmes,' starring John Barrymore. Exhibitors expect to cash in as heavily on the film as on 'Remembrance,' due to the world-wide popularity of the Sherlock Holmes stories and the reputation of its star.

"The Rupert Hughes picture, though released only last Sunday, October 8, had been booked for October showing in hundreds of theatres before I returned from my trip. I knew it would be from my talks with exhibitors. 'Remembrance' also has been booked over many circuits.

"We arranged for the opening of four new Goldwyn branch exchanges during my trip—in Indianapolis, Milwaukee, Butte and Portland, Ore. Two more branch offices will be opened later. We found this move a popular one with exhibitors, making for ease and speed in seeing and booking Goldwyn productions.

"At the Goldwyn Studios in Culver City I found the production staff all primed to make the remainder of the twenty pictures of the coming season."

This is Gibbs, as relentless in his fury as the sea itself.

"White Shoulders" for Early Release

Katherine MacDonald in "White Shoulders" is the First National attraction scheduled for release during the week of October 16. It was adapted from a story by George Kibbe Turner, which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, and was directed by Tom Forman. It is scheduled as one of the best of First National's Big Time pictures.

In "White Shoulders" Miss MacDonald, it is stated, has an opportunity to display her talent as an emotional actress. Supporting her is an excellent cast. Bryant Washburn plays the part of Cole Hawkins; Lillian Lawrence is seen as Mrs. Pitman; Nigel Barrie is Clayborne Gordon; James O. Barrows is seen as Judge Blakelock; Tom Forman is Robert Lee Pitman, Virginia's brother, and little Richard Headrick is Jimmie Blakelock.

Metro's Plan Is Bringing Results

An indication of the response which has already greeted the first group of the season's releases of Metro Pictures Corporation may be had from the long list of bookings already recorded for these photoplays, says Metro. Exhibitors from every part of the country have, it is stated, expressed their confidence in Metro and in its releases not only by booking the early pictures, but by concluding arrangements to show all of the Metro output for the season 1922-23. From the largest theatres in the most important cities to the small neighborhood houses and theatres in rural communities—all have found Metro attractions entirely satisfactory to their patrons and to themselves, according to statements from the Metro organization.

"I look upon these wholesale bookings of Metro films as a complete vindication of the Metro policy announced several months ago," said E. M. Saunders, general sales manager, recently. "At that time we announced our intention—and we have adhered to it closely—to release only Special Productions. Persons who paid to witness a motion picture entertainment wanted more than an ordinary story, told with little originality and produced with no-more-than-necessary imagination. Metro sensed this specialization on the part of motion picture patrons."

Booked for Run at Miller's

For the Los Angeles premiere of "Timothy's Quest," Kate Douglas Wiggin's story, distributed by American Releasing Corporation, Miller's Theatre has booked the picture for three weeks, beginning October 16. The production was directed by Sidney Olcott.

Is Not Affiliated With Scenario Institute

As a result of the great influx of inquiries to the executive offices of Fox Film Corporation in New York City following the "scenario wants" announcement printed in many national periodicals by the Charles Donald Fox Photoplay Institute of Chicago the following statement, in which all connection with the latter organization is disclaimed, was made public this week:

"Fox Film Corporation wishes to call to the attention of the public that certain advertising matter has been published by a company known as Fox Photoplay Institute, of which one Charles Donald Fox is the president, requesting the public generally to submit motion picture scenarios to that company and in which that company also offers its services in developing scenario writers.

"Fox Film Corporation, in order to be sure that there will be no confusion caused in the mind of the public, wishes to make it clear that Fox Film Corporation is in no manner connected, either directly or indirectly, with the Fox Photoplay Institute.

"Fox Film Corporation does not make the assertion that the Fox Photoplay Institute has misrepresented itself or has attempted to act for Fox Film Corporation, but numerous inquiries and letters have been received by this company from persons located in various parts of this country with reference to the Fox Photoplay Institute, which demonstrates that they were of the impression that our company was associated with that company."

Title May Stand

It is reported that the title of Charles Chaplin's comedy for First National distribution will be, as originally planned, "The Pilgrim." Many comedy novelties are presented in the course of the action, and reveal the fact that Chaplin's inventiveness has suffered no loss. A fire scene, it is said, reaches the very height of absurdity and hilarious burlesque.

Chaney in Picture

Lon Chaney will add another to his extensive gallery of screen portrayals when he appears as the tough whaling captain in the Irvin Willat production for Metro, "Cold Courage," which is being picturized from Ben Ames Williams' sea story, "All the Brothers Were Valiant."

Best So Far

"The best of the Barthelmess pictures so far," reads a special report by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures on Richard Barthelmess in "The Bond Boy," a First National Attraction. Continuing, the report says:

"Similar in character to 'Tol'able David,' but with a story that involves more dramatic elements. Excellent characterizations by Barthelmess and Mary Alden, and the director has genuine cinematographic skill."

Fox Changes Release Dates of Serials

Change of release dates for "A Little Child Shall Lead Them" and "Lights of New York," two specials for the current season, were announced by Fox Film Corporation this week.

"A Little Child Shall Lead Them," Paul H. Sloane's screen version of the story by the mysterious "Mr. X," which was set for release on October 29, will not be ready for general distribution until November 26.

Publication of "Lights of New York" by the same author has been set back from October 22 to November 12.

According to the present Fox schedule another special, "My Friend the Devil," will be released November 19. It was adapted from George Ohnet's famous novel, "Dr. Rameau," and has one of the most notable casts ever assembled, headed by Charles Richman, the noted star of the speaking stage.

Exhibitors Praise Rex Ingram Film

New York is but the first of the big cities to find in the Rex Ingram production for Metro, "The Prisoner of Zenda," the most attractive motion picture of the year, Metro says.

What this picturization of Anthony Hope's romantic novel is doing elsewhere is told by the telegram from Willard Patterson, of the Metropolitan Theatre, Atlanta. Mr. Patterson's wire read: "'Prisoner of Zenda' opened to splendid business. Patrons all pleased with same. Predict tremendous success for this production."

Likewise enthusiastic is the communication from Leon Victor, managing "The Prisoner of Zenda" at the New Theatre, Baltimore. Mr. Victor comments: "We opened to more business on Monday than the New Theatre did all last week. It looks like we will have two banner weeks at the New Theatre, which means a lot owing to the fact that we have strong opposition, namely, Norma Talmadge in 'The Eternal Flame;' Wallace Reid in 'Nice People;' the Gish sisters in 'Orphans of the Storm;' and Rodolph Valentino in 'Blood and Sand.'"

Pyramid Acquires Rights to Film

Pyramid Pictures, Inc., announces the acquisition of the screen rights to H. S. Sheldon's "Tatiana," a story of Russia during the 1917 upheaval, which will be directed by Ray C. Smallwood. Mr. Sheldon is the playwright who wrote "The Havoc," Henry Miller's stage success, and other plays.

Changes Title

Pyramid Pictures, Inc., announces the change of title of "Flapper Love" to "What Fools Men Are," under which name it will be distributed by American Releasing Corporation.

"Trifling Women" Playing at Astor

Two factors Metro states—public demand for a view of the latest Rex Ingram production and stipulations in contract for the Astor Theatre—have influenced Metro Pictures Corporation to present for an engagement limited to four weeks, Mr. Ingram's most recently completed motion picture, "Trifling Women," beginning October 2, at the Broadway playhouse mentioned.

This photoplay will succeed at the Astor the popular Rex Ingram production, "The Prisoner of Zenda." In the leading woman's role—incidentally the play is unique in having but one feminine character—is Barbara La Marr, the Antoinette de Mauban of "The Prisoner of Zenda." Ramon Novarro has an important role, and Lewis Stone has also.

To John F. Seitz, photographer of all Mr. Ingram's big successes, belongs credit for the camera work.

Pathe Credited with Good Work

Pathe News' burning of Smyrna film pictures are said to have been printed in at least one big newspaper in every important city of the United States with full credit. These pictures, it is stated, were usually accompanied by a story describing how these scenes were photographed and so speedily transmitted to picture audiences more than 6,000 miles away. As an average example, the Chicago Daily Tribune of October 3 printed an article with its Pathe News film enlargements containing the following:

"Pathe News Gets Screen 'Scoop' on Smyrna Fire," reads the head. The article starts: "Pathe News has registered a big screen scoop in getting 900 film feet of the Smyrna holocaust to New York and other eastern cities in just two weeks."

May Film Selznick Pictures in East

Upon the completion of the cutting and titling of "One Week of Love," the Selznick special, starring Elaine Hammerstein and Conway Tearle, Myron Selznick will return to the West Coast. Harold McCord is assisting Mr. Selznick in the editing of the production. While Mr. Selznick is enthusiastic about California as a production point it is doubtful that he will indefinitely continue his activities there. There is a possibility that when the next two pictures are finished the Selznick forces will be removed East to remain for all time, except in cases where stories absolutely demand a Western locale.

Goldwyn Promotes Two Exchangemen

Two employees in Goldwyn branch exchanges have just been promoted to be resident managers of exchanges.

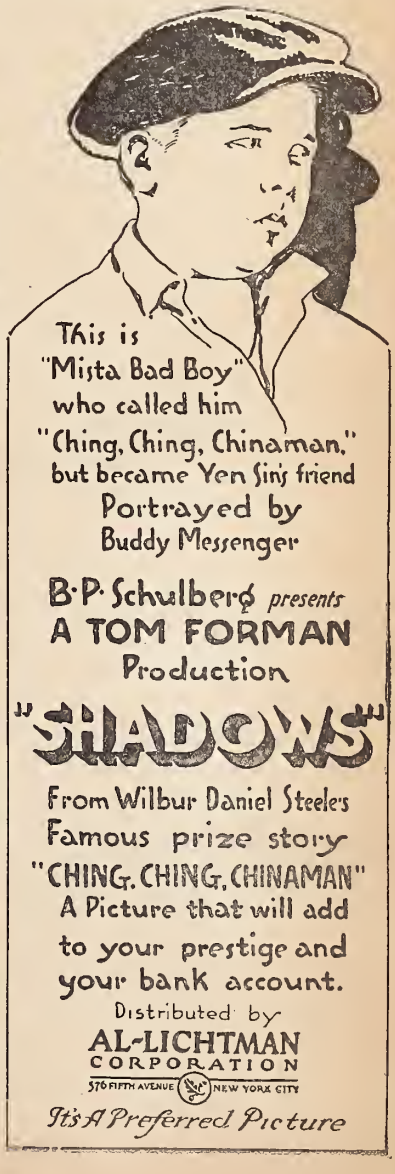
Seth Perkins, for several years a salesman in the Los Angeles office, has been appointed resident manager of the Los Angeles office, succeeding M. Wolf.

Walter Eltries, booker at the Seattle office, has been promoted to the resident managership of the newly created Portland, Ore., branch exchange, which is located at 14 North Ninth street.

Harry Danto has been appointed resident manager of the Chicago exchange, to succeed Harry S. Lorch, who will take up other duties, the nature of which will be announced later.

To Exploit Series

Through a special arrangement entered into between Louis Weiss and Herbert Lubin, Bert Ennis has been loaned to Associated Pictures Corporation for the purpose of handling a special exploitation campaign in the interests of "Quincy Adams Sawyer," the first of a series of S-L special productions being made by Herbert Lubin and Arthur H. Sawyer for Metro Pictures Corporation.



In the Independent Field

By ROGER FERRI

Newsy Bits

Max Graf, representing Graf Productions, Inc., of San Francisco, on his way back to the Coast from New York, stopped off at Buffalo. He will stop at all exchange centres en route.

W. Ray Johnston, the enterprising Vice-President of Arrow Film Corporation, spent the current week visiting exchange men in upper New York State. His first stop was Buffalo, where he spent three days. Then he covered Syracuse and Albany.

Sol Lesser, who is now in New York, will in all probability make a trip to London, for according to a cable report received at this office, several cinema owners there have entered bids for a showing of "Oliver Twist."

Evelyn Greeley, who is co-starred with Carlyle Blackwell in "Bull Dog Drummond," which was produced in Holland by Oscar Apfel for Producers' Security Corporation, is hurrying across the Atlantic Ocean to marry a millionaire contracting engineer of New York.

Warner Brothers' 1922-23 productions will be released in New Jersey by Fabian Brothers' Features, Inc., a subsidiary of Associated First National, which the Skeeter State exhibitor-distributors have formed to handle independent features.

Sam Saxe, sales manager for L. Lawrence Weber-Bobby North, will shortly start on a tour of the exchange centres in the interests of that firm, which is now prepared to sell territorial rights to Will Nigh's latest special, "Notoriety."

"Yankee Doodle, Jr.," will be given its world premier public showing at the Victory Theatre in Providence, R. I., next week.

Judging from reports from the Southeast, independents there are enjoying a prosperity that bids fair to be the greatest ever experienced by them in many, many years.

Reports from the West Coast this week convey news of the organization of three new companies that will concentrate on independent production.

Clever exploitation is getting Ben Amsterdam, of Masterpiece Film Attractions, Inc., of Philadelphia, many splendid first run dates on the Al Lichtman special, "Rich Men's Wives."

Al Lichtman, head of Al Lichtman Corporation, is expected back in New York late next week from a trip to Kansas City, where he is scheduled to confer with Producer Ben Schulberg.

Ernest E. Van Pelt, field director and manager of the New York office of Sacred Films, Inc., of Burbank, Cal., distributing the Bible series, returned to the Metropolis this week after a jaunt about the country. Elsewhere appear observations made by this enterprising globe-trotting film man.

Joe Aller, of Rothacker Laboratories, of Los Angeles, came to New York this week and is making headquarters at the Metropolitan offices of Principal Pictures Company, in the Loew-State Building. Mr. Aller is going to London to establish a laboratory there.

W. E. Sawyer, head of Juanita Films, Inc., of Claremont, Fla., producers and distributors of the Juanita Comedies, is in New York, stopping at the Longacre Hotel.

The Week in Review

AS was exclusively predicted in this department five weeks ago official announcement and confirmation of the engagement of Dorothy Phillips to star in a series of independent pictures were contained in an interesting statement made this week by Principal Pictures Corporation. This newly formed corporation promises to be an important factor in the independent production and distribution field, and its advent will certainly be welcomed by those exchangemen and exhibitors who realize that "big and worth-while box-office pictures" constitute the want of a hungry public today. Principal Pictures Corporation has in another part of this section outlined its policy—a policy of progressiveness and constructive participation in a market that is only now really coming into its own.

PRINCIPAL PICTURES CORPORATION constitutes three of the most progressive showmen in this business—Sol Lesser, Michael Rosenberg and Irving Lesser. This same trio is responsible for the Jackie Coogan features. Their past record bespeaks their capability, and announcement from them that they have decided to operate more extensively in the independent market is indeed good news. They are to be congratulated. Their intention to give the market nothing but the best features is interesting and marked with a sincerity that is unquestioned when one digests their policy announcement, published on another page.

GONE, seemingly, are the "fly-by-nights" in the various exchange centers. The business man has come into this market, and for this all independents should feel relieved. The exchange list is not the enormous one it was two years ago. More than 60 per cent. of them have gone out of business; but the remaining 40 per cent. constitute the reliable, aggressively progressive exchangemen who are in this business to render the exhibitor the service to which the latter is entitled.

A RECENT swing about the middlewestern circle of exchange centers convinced this writer that the exchange situation was righting itself. We saw a magnificent change—a change for which the whole trade should feel thankful. The service exchange is flourishing. The "junk-dealers" have passed out in wholesale fashion; but a very few still exist. The "note-demons" are still in the field, but with the exhibitors demanding big pictures—big pictures that these "note-demons" cannot procure—it is only a question of time when they, too, will have made their exit.

THE independent market is being blessed with new faces. We find them in the studios, in the producing list and in the distributors' offices. The trend is for a general change; and this is encouraging. Our producers are seeking established box-office "names." But, more than that, they are buying stories that have box-office and entertainment value. We find first-class directors at work in independent studios. We find in our exchange list an army of gentlemen who are overlooking no effort in giving the exhibitor and his patrons what they want. And we find distributors offering "money" pictures—pictures that will tend to make this field the great one it should be.

THE exhibitor can find no excuse for ignoring the independent. The former laid down certain demands that independents have met. They are furnishing good quality, exploitable productions. Box-office statements prove this claim. The independent is not ashamed of his offerings. Independent pictures are being sold on their merit.

AND exhibitors have awakened to a realization of this state of affairs. We noted recently in an issue of Exhibitors' Bulletin, the official organ of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, of which Sydney S. Cohen is its able and progressive president, an editorial touching on "independent productions." The writer admitted a general improvement in the independent market, and a particularly wonderful array of pictures that no "theatre owner could afford to overlook."

INDEPENDENTS appreciate this co-operation from the exhibitor organization. They hope that independent producers, distributors and exhibitors will some day in the very near future co-operate on a more extensive basis. Certainly the independent producer is demonstrating every day his willingness to co-operate with the theatre owner by meeting his demands. Let this co-operation be on a greater scale.

Trade Notes

A cable from London this week brought word to the effect that Al Lichtman's initial release, "Rich Men's Wives," was given a trade showing there on October 4, the result of which was the signing of many important dates. W. & F. Film Service, Ltd., is handling the Lichtman product in Great Britain.

Herman Rifkin, of the Eastern Feature Film Exchange, of Boston, was a New York visitor this week.

Bert Ennis, publicity and exploitation manager of Weiss Brothers' Artclass Corporation, leaves early next week for Indianapolis, where he will exploit "After Six Days," which opens the English Theatre there in two weeks.

Al Feinman has resigned from the publicity staff of Fox Films, Inc., to take over the exploitation work at the Warner Brothers' New York exchange, which Charley Goetz is successfully managing.

Nathan Hirsh, President of Aywon Pictures Corporation, goes on a trip that will take him to every exchange centre. He will carry with him a print of his latest picture, "The Man Unconquered," starring Maciste, the Italian giant star.

David Mundstuk, who has returned to the exchange field in Detroit, was in New York this week negotiating for product for that territory.

A group of Federated Film Exchange men met at Hotel Astor in New York last week, together with Director General Joe Brandt, who recently returned from a tour of the country. Others in attendance were Bobby North of New York, Ben Amsterdam of Philadelphia, and Sam Grand of Boston.

The Graphic franchise in Philadelphia has apparently changed hands, for the Imperial Exchange of that city is announcing that it is releasing Ivan Abramson's feature, "Wildness of Youth," instead of the Graphic Exchange there.

Margery Wilson, who is starred in "Insinuation," is making personal appearances in conjunction with the exhibition of that picture.

Jesse Levinson, who is State righting "Playthings of an Emperor," a spectacle dealing with a romantic episode from the life of Napoleon, will leave for a tour of exchanges late next week.

This was a busy week at the New York offices of Principal Pictures Company. Eastern Manager Irving Lesser had all the trade press editors at his office, introduced them to Michael Rosenberg and Sol Lesser, who recently arrived here, and then outlined to the callers, in no uncertain terms, just what this new concern plans doing in the independent market. The plans of the firm are indeed extensive and when complete will furnish independents with pleasant news.

Now that Federated Film Exchanges, Inc., has perfected its organization, has settled all differences and lined up some short subjects which it will release through its exchanges immediately, the officers of the new co-operative exchanges are prepared to start anew. However, no feature productions will be sought until next year. For the time being Federated intends concentrating on short subjects.

Principal Pictures Enters Field; Will Operate on Elaborate Basis

Lessers and Rosenberg Form New Firm That Signs Dorothy Phillips and Elinor Glyn—Gets "Chicago Sal," with Milton Sills and Alice Lake.

What purports to be one of the most important moves made this year in the independent market was taken this week by Sol Lesser, Michael Rosenberg and Irving Lesser, who organized the Principal Pictures Company, which will deal extensively in the production and distribution of box office atractions in the independent field.

Simultaneous with announcement of the formation of the new firm came word that Principal Pictures Company had signed Dorothy Phillips, to star in a new special, "The World's a Stage," written by Elinor Glyn. This picture promises to be one of the biggest independent features of the year and is based on the latest story of the world's best known writer. Colin Campbell directed the production, which will shortly be ready for release. Others in the cast include Kenneth Harlan and Bruce McRae.

Additional evidence of the extensive plans of Principal Pictures Company and confidence of its officers in the future status of the independent market was obtained this week in the announcement that this concern will leave no stone unturned in properly exploiting their productions among exhibitors and that one of the most extensive advertising campaigns ever conducted by an independent firm will shortly be inaugurated.

Realizing that the independent market has finally come into its own, Principal Pictures Corporation this week perfected its organization. Its officers include: Sol Lesser, President; Irving Lesser, Vice-President, and Michael Rosenberg, Secretary and Treasurer. The concern will maintain two offices, one in the Paramount Theatre building, Los Angeles, and the other in the Loew-State Theatre building, New York City.

Irving Lesser will be in charge of the eastern office and the distribution department of Principal Pictures Company with Mr. Rosenberg managing the Coast quarters and retaining general supervision over production. The Lesser brothers and Mr. Rosenberg are perhaps among the best known film magnates in the industry, for in addition to their production and distribution activities, which are the most extensive in the independent field of endeavor, they will be interested in the operation of a string of successful first run theatres in California.

Principal Pictures Company, confident that the day is here when independent productions are in demand by exhibitors who see in such pictures the salvation of the motion picture industry, and determined to develop into an important factor in the independent market, has perfected an organization that compares second to none. The organization has been divided into co-operative departments, namely, production, distribution, exploitation and advertising, contract, auditing and sales. The latter department includes a staff of field representatives who will at all times be in touch with exchanges releasing Principal productions preparatory to co-operate with exhibitors in properly presenting and exploiting those pictures.

Negotiations were completed this week whereby Principal pictures will be handled by the best exchanges in every section. Since confidential announcement of the incorporation of Principal Pictures Company was first made to exchangemen, the firm has been besieged with inquiries from exchangemen, who realizing and appreciative of the enterprise and showmanship of the Lesser Brothers and Mr. Rosenberg, were desirous of effecting a tieup with them. Some 150 letters were received and after weeks of careful investigation, the exchange lineup was finally negotiated. The identity of these Principal Pictures Exchanges will be announced within the next two weeks, inasmuch as several contracts have not yet been closed.

Suffice, however, the statement that the list of exchanges annexed includes the most representative in the country, thus guaranteeing exhibitors a maximum service in addition to a co-operation that will be something new in the independent market, for Principal Pictures Company, with its exchanges all lined up, will concentrate on selling its product to exhibitors and in turn direct to the public. An exploitation, publicity and advertising department that will strain every effort to properly exploit Principal pictures to the public and in that way guaranteeing a profitable market for these features has been organized. This department will start functioning immediately. Included in this department are such well known experts as Harry Rattner, Max Roth, Miss E. H. Messer and Bill Keefe.

Special Showing of "Sure-Fire Flint"

Announcement was made this week by C. C. Burr of Affiliated Distributors, Inc., that all arrangements have been completed for a special invitation trade showing of Johnny Hines' latest feature, "Sure-Fire Flint," at the Astor Hotel on Thursday evening, Oct. 19. This production is said by its producers to be one of the best of the year and is already being extensively exploited throughout the country, while in New York artistic 24-sheet paintings and posters are attracting the attention of the public to the picture. The presentation will be followed with a dance. Johnny Hines, Doris Kenyon and other members of the cast will personally appear.

Nigh's Great Kaiser Special May Be Released by Warners

Unless persistently undenied reports now current in the trade are entirely wrong Warner Brothers will shortly release an unusual special dealing with the life and trial of the late German Kaiser. The time for the release of this special, which was directed and conceived by Will Nigh, is particularly opportune, for something like 125 newspapers in all parts of the country are featuring "Memoirs of the Kaiser." This feature is appearing in serial form, and is arousing much attention. The New York Times is 24-sheeting this serial.

Negotiations are now said to be under way for use of the title "Memoirs of the Kaiser." The feature, which is now about sixteen reels in length, is one of the most beautiful productions of its kind made in this country. The characters are all historic and cleverly interpreted. A representative of this department viewed this production several months ago. The production was made during the late war, but before it was completed the armistice was signed, and the picture had to be shelved.

An all-star cast appears in this production, which embraces some of the finest acting seen in any picture. The story is cleverly enacted, with a finish that is exceedingly surprising. This production is superior in entertainment value and should be a greater attraction than "My Four Years in Germany," which Mr. Nigh also directed.

Amalgamated Starts Picture

In spite of the rain, franchiseholders of Amalgamated Exchanges on Tuesday of this week gathered at the firm's offices in the Loew-State building and went to New Rochelle, N. Y., to witness the beginning of production activities of that company at its own studios in that city. Some twenty exchangemen were in the party. The first picture is "The Madonna in Chains." Those who will appear in this production are E. K. Lincoln, Mrs. Rodolph Valentino (Jean Acker), Martha Mansfield, Marion Hallup, Baby Peggy Rice, Bessie Allison and Leon Williams.

Start Barthelmess Feature

Independent distributors are highly elated over the announcement that Producers Security Corporation will place the Richard Barthelmess feature, "Just a Song at Twilight," on the independent market. Richard Barthelmess is one of the biggest drawing cards in films. In addition to Barthelmess the production boasts of two more stars, Evelyn Greeley and Pedro de Cordoba plays a very important role.

Sam Morris with Warner

Sam E. Morris has been engaged by the Warner Brothers, according to an announcement by Harry M. Warner. Mr. Morris will occupy an executive position with the organization. Mr. Warner declared that the selection of Mr. Morris was made after a thorough canvas of the entire industry had been made to find a suitable person to occupy a responsible position in the fast growing Warner Brothers concern.

Ralph Ince with Garsson

Ralph Ince has signed up with Murray W. Garsson, Inc., to direct a screen version of a celebrated stage drama which enjoyed a run on Broadway several seasons ago. The signing of Mr. Ince by Mr. Garsson marks the beginning of the second producing unit to come under the Garsson banner this Fall, the other being Roy Sheldon's company which was recently organized to produce "Way Down South."

"Shadow" Showing at Biltmore

Announcement was made this week by Al Lichtman Corporation that its second Preferred Picture, "Shadow," starring Lon Chaney, with an all-star cast, produced by Ben Schulberg, will be given a premier showing at Hotel Biltmore, Friday night, Oct. 20.

Court Fight Over "I Am the Law" Ended; Premiers in New York Set

With the producers and distributors of "I Am the Law," the Edwin Carew Northwestern special, agreed to accede to the recommendations of the New York court to make certain alterations in that production, arrangements were completed this week for a general first run showing of the feature starting next week. The name, James Oliver Curwood, has been eliminated from any mention whatsoever either in the prints or paper or publicity matter. Several changes, which tend to increase the dramatic value of the production as a whole, also have been made.

After months of litigation, "I Am the Law," which Affiliated Distributors, Inc., of which C. C. Burr is president, is distributing, will finally be given its premier at B. S. Moss' Broadway theatre, beginning Monday, October 16. According to Bobby North, of L. Lawrence Weber-Bobby North, metropolitan distributors of "I Am the Law," that picture already has attracted something like $40,000 in gross rentals. Next week the feature will also be shown at Loew's State in Newark. The big circuits throughout the country have booked the special, which ranks among the best Northwestern productions ever made.

Because of the court proceedings involving the producers and distributors of "I Am the Law" and International Film Corporation, C. C. Burr, Edwin Carew, Bernie Fineman and others financially interested in the national production and distribution of the picture, will not have made a single cent on the venture. In fact, the bitter defense put up by Burr and his associates has probably cost them several thousands of dollars.

Although the belated release of the picture will have meant the loss of many thousands of dollars, indications are that "I Am the Law," will, despite of this fact, gross a record figure for local exchangemen and exhibitors.

Suit to recover $36,500 from the Clark-Cornelius Corporation of 117 West 46th street has been filed in the New York Supreme Court by Al Ira Smith, through his attorney, Nathan Vidaver, of 116 Nassau street. According to the complaint on file in the County Clerk's office Smith alleges he made an agreement with defendants by which he granted to them the sole right to distribute throughout the world a series of twelve two reel motion pictures, Smith to receive 60 per cent. of the gross receipts from same, the remaining 40 per cent. to go to the defendants. Smith avers that defendant guaranteed that his share on each one of the pictures should not be less than $3,600, to be paid within 90 days after the delivery of each picture. Smith declares he lived up to his part of the contract, and that all he has thus far received is but $400 gross receipts of the first picture delivered, and nothing from the receipts of the balance, wherefore it is claimed $35,600 is due, for which the court is asked to award judgment.

Two judgments have been filed in the City Court by Erbograph Co. against the Rialto Prod., Inc. One is for $515 as a balance due, and the other, in which Louis T. Rogers is also named, is for a $1,030 on a note.

The Fidelity Pictures Co. has sued the H. C. Witwer Stories Prods., Inc., for $15,000 damages. The complaint allege that the defendant agreed to furnish negatives of twelve two-reel comedies in 1921 and 1922, and delivered only two, one on Aug. 27 and one on Sept. 30, 1921.

Two suits have been filed in the Supreme Court against the Mayflower Photoplay Corp. Lewis Hopkins Rogers asks $2,250 on the ground that he was engaged Nov. 1 last to perform legal services at $100 a week and resigned on April 8. Nat I. Brown alleges that he was also employed at $100 a week and that pay for 26½ weeks is due him, a total of $2,650.

Al Ira Smith has sued the Clark-Cornelius Corp. for $35,600 damages. He alleges that he gave the defendant the world rights to distribute twelve two-reel westerns, and the defendant guaranteed him $3,000 on each, but he has only received $400 from the first picture and nothing from the others.

A default judgment for $6,238 has been filed in the Supreme Court by Republic Laboratories, Inc., in suit against the Louis Tracy Prod., Inc., and Sidney Garrett on a note of the corporation endorsed by Garrett.

H. M. Warner Goes to Coast On Big Deal

Harry M. Warner, of Warner Brothers, left last Tuesday for the West Coast studios to formulate plans for the production of eighteen pictures for next season.

The seven productions to be released this season by the Warner organization are said to have been sold solid throughout the country to prominent exchangemen and theatre owners, and one of the purposes of Mr. Warner's trip to the coast is to sign up a large number of screen players, directors and scenario writers.

The titles of the eighteen pictures have not been made known, but according to Mr. Warner only the best known novels and stage plays will be produced. This plan is in accordance with the present array of the seven Warner releases made from popular books and stage plays.

Dependable Gets Sloman Feature

"Blind Justice," the first independent production made by Edward Sloman on the coast, will be released in the independent market via Dependable Sales Corporation, 509 Putnam Building, New York. The latter firm was recently formed by Charles R. Rogers. The cast in "Blind Justice" includes Milton Sills, Carmel Myers, Frederick Mayne, Pat O'Malley, Walter Long, Charles Clary, Alex Francis and Jack Mower.

Arrow Ties Up With Music Firm

Arrow Film Corporation this week announced that in conjunction with the release of "The Streets of New York," the new special which will release through independent exchanges, it has negotiated a tie-up with the Cameo Music Publishing Company for the publication of a special song for exploitation simultaneous with first-run showings of the Burton King production. This is only one of the many exploitation tie-ups that Arrow is arranging in connection with the advertising of this picture.

Roy Sheldon with Garsson's Concern

Announcement is made by Murray W. Garsson, president of Murray W. Garsson, Inc., that Roy Sheldon has been engaged by him to direct Harry P. Diggs' southern drama, "Way Down South."

In engaging a director to direct "Way Down South," Mr. Garsson, it is said, gave paramount consideration to the fact that the story which deals with a romance of the South would have to be handled by a southern man, one who is in full sympathy with southern sentiments and one who thoroughly understands the southerner, the South and its traditions. Roy Sheldon, a native of Dixie, filled the bill.

The company of players and technical experts are now being engaged and by the tenth of this month the entire company will leave for Albany, Ga., the locale of the play, where most of the exteriors will be made during the Albany-South Georgia Fair.

The production will be under the personal supervision of Harry P. Diggs, who was for many years a familiar figure in the southern theatrical field.

Mr. Garsson has promised later announcement regarding the star and cast for "Way Down South."

New $300,000 Producing Firm Formed on Coast; News From the Studios

Los Angeles (Special)—Foreign capital to the tune of $300,000 has been placed in a local bank for picture production under the supervision of John Jasper, designer and builder of the Hollywood Studios, Inc., said to be the best-equipped studio in the world. According to a statement issued by Mr. Jasper when he left for an extended trip east, he contemplates making five specials for winter release, besides "Over Here" and "The Challenge," two special features which have just been completed under his supervision and which he is taking to New York with him.

Mr. Jasper has been only mildly interested in production since he built the studios. Prior to that time he was general manager for Charles Chaplin. He is also head of the Marion Fairfax productions, which he sponsored.

Abe Warner, of Warner Brothers, who has originally been slated to remain here several months, was scheduled to leave for New York early this week. His brother, Harry M. Warner, is expected here early next month, according to news from the metropolis.

Peggy O'Day, who has been starring in New Era productions, is contemplating a personal appearance tour of the country. She is expected to start this tour late this month, arrangements with exhibitors now being made.

Harry Garsson will shortly start production on "The Ole Swimming Hole" at the Fine Arts Studio here.

There is a report current here that Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, has purchased an interest in the Berwilla studios. No confirmation was available here, however.

Warner Brothers are negotiating for the screen rights to "Spring Street," a fiction story running serially in a Los Angeles newspaper at present.

Louis Burston has arrived from the East, where he witnessed the first run showing of his Metro release, "Forget Me Not," and will shortly start production on an another feature that will be handled on the independent plan.

"Chicago Sal," the special feature that Principal Pictures Corporation will exploit in the independent market, has been completed and bids fair to be one of the biggest State rights features of the year. It is an Irving Cummings special with an all-star cast headed by Milton Sills and Alice Lake.

Rapf Starts On "Brass"

Los Angeles (Special)—"Brass," the Charles G. Norris novel of marriage and divorce, is in the course of production at the Warner Brothers' West Coast studios, according to reports received at the Warner offices from Harry Rapf.

Sidney Franklin, who directed Norma Talmadge's most recent releases, is directing the Rapf production. Marie Prevost, the featured player, heads a cast of prominent screen favorites, the names of which havenot as yet been announced.

EQUITY PICTURES CORPORATION

723 7TH AVENUE, NEW YORK

F. B. O. Take Over Equity Pictures in Three States

Film Booking Offices of America, it was announced this week, will distribute "What's Wrong With the Women?" Daniel Carson Goodman's production for Equity Pictures in the States of Missouri, Kansas and Central Illinois. The picture will be handled through the St. Louis and Kansas City branch offices of F. B. O. Prints and advertising and exploitation material on this picture are now available in these exchanges.

To the Kansas City exchange of F. B. O. also will go the three latest Clara Kimball Young pictures, distributed through Equity on the independent market. These are "Charge It," "What No Man Knows" and "Worldly Madonna." Bookings of these three pictures are accepted for the State of Kansas only. The pictures are now being screened for exhibitors in that territory, who are taking advantage of the opportunity to book this popular star in her three biggest productions. Roy Churchill, manager of the F. B. O. exchange in Kansas City, reports that the popularity and demand for Clara Kimball Young is evidenced by the many requests for bookings which he has already received despite the fact that the acquisition of the pictures by F. B. O. was not generally known.

Newman Forms Producing Firm

Los Angeles (Special)—The latest organization formed to produce pictures independently is the Regent Pictures Company and is headed by E. D. Newman, formerly special representative on the West Coast for Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

The Regent Company has already purchased the first story which will go into production, "The Drivin' Fool."

Announcement of studio, director and cast for the first production will be made within a week, stated Newman, who says his company is financed by Eastern capital.

Many Sales On Chaney Feature

Sixty per cent. of the total rights in this country to the Lon Chaney special, "Flesh and Blood," have been sold, according to announcement made this week by Irving Lesser, eastern manager of Principal Pictures Company, which also includes Sol Lesser and Michael Rosenberg. The only territories remaining unsold on this production, which already has established records in seven houses, are Minnesota, North and South Dakota and the Rocky Mountain States.

The following exchanges have purchased rights in their respective territories to "Flesh and Blood":

Commonwealth Pictures Corporatiou of New York City; First National of Chicago; Eastern Feature Film Corporatiou of Boston; Standard Film Service Company of Cleveland; Midwest Distributing Company of Milwankee; Enterprise Distributing Company of Atlanta; Enterprise Distributing Company of Dallas; Enterprise Distributing Compauy of New Orleans; Enterprise Distributing Company of Oklahoma City; Enterprise Distributing Company of St. Louis; Enterprise Distributing Company of Kansas City; Enterprise Distributing Compauy of Omaha; De Luxe Feature Film Company of Seattle; H. Lieber Company of Indianapolis; All-Star Feature Distributors, Inc., of San Francisco; All-Star Feature Distributors of Los Angeles, and Strand Film Service of Washington, D. C.

Foreign rights to the new Lon Chaney success, "Flesh and Blood," the Principal Picture Company special, which is now beiug shown at big first rnn houses throughout the country, were sold this week by Irving Lesser, the Eastern manager, as follows: David P. Howells, for continental Europe distributiou; Wardour Films, Ltd., of London, for Great Britain; Associated First National Exhibitors, Ltd., for Australasiau countries, and John Kunzler of Societa Cinematografico, for South American countries.

The French Gaumont company, according to a cablegram received this week, is contemplating the production of an anthentic "Life of Napolcon Bonaparte" feature for international distribution.

Fred Le Roy Granville has completed "Shifting Sands." Peggy Hyland, who has won quite a following abroad, has been featured in this production.

Sporting features are quite common in England, judging from recent announcements made by producers there. This week word came to the effect that the Grainger-Davidson Company had completed "The Sporting Iustinct." Arthur Rooke directed.

Tom Terris, who is in England, has started production on "The Harbor Lights." The story for this picture was writteu by George R. Sims. Terris started production on the day the author died.

Fay Compton, according to our London correspondent, has been signed to play the leading role iu "This Freedom," by A. S. M. Hutchinson, which Denison Clift will prodnce.

"Paddy, The Next Best Thing," the English stage success, which flopped in this country as a legitimatc attraction, will be adapted for the screen. Astra will make the picture in which Mae Marsh will be starred. Astra has taken over the Famous Players-Lasky studios in England and it is there that the picture will be made.

The motion picture acting profession in London, according to authentic information from there, is hard hit by a lack of employment. It is said that 75 per cent of the picture players in England are idle. These have a movement under way protesting against the importation of foreign actors from America and continental Europe.

The Efa Company has appareutly started something in German cinema circles, for correspondence from Berlin has it that that firm's latest productiou, "Duke Ferrante's Finish," constitutes one of the greatest costume pictures turned out in that country. While as a picture it is artistically remarkable, commercially it is said to be worthless, owing to the absolute incompetent scenario. Paul Wagener, who won fame in this country because of his characterization in "The Golem," is starred, does good work, but in so far as his scenario and direction are concerned, they are not up to the standard of his previous works.

Production activity in Italy is once more buzzing and producers in that land are showiug a marked improvement in their pictures. The invasion of American directors has had much to do with the renewed activity prevalent now in Italy, according to a Rome despatch.

"You Shall Not Covet," a belated Universal release, starring Von Stronheim under the pseudonym, Frank Mayo, is now being generally shown in Germany. The picture got its premier showing at the Alhambra. The picture burlesques a German officer, which has caused quite a stir among film folks, who are ever ready to attack American pictures.

Walter Forde, the English screen comedian, has definitely made up his mind to come to this country.

Finds Market Situation Has Been Cleared

Ernest Van Pelt, general manager of Sacred Films, Inc., of Burbank, Cal., arrived in New York this week after an eight-week swing around the key cities in the interest of the single-reel Bible episodes.

Mr. Van Pelt, when interviewed, stated that conditions generally in the independent market are in better shape now than in the past year. "The reason," he stated, "is because better pictures are reaching this market. In times past the State rights field was the last resort for picture distribution, but a survey of the new productions for independents show that many of the biggest pictures are being distributed with success in this channel.

"Exhibitors feel kindly toward independents, but must have good productions. The troubles in the past can be laid to independent distributors exaggerating and misrepresenting their product. This practice is gradually being eliminated and the fly-by-night distributor is surely beiug weeded out.

"From my observations during this trip, I really look for a most successful year for worthwhile independents and in my own organization. We intend, if possible, to greatly improve our Bible episodes and to present 100 per cent. entertainment, as well as an educational service which should reach every home. We have proven that the screen is a powerful factor in education, and so long as we keep pictures clean there can be no question as to the future of the industry."

"Rags to Riches" Setting a Good First Run Pace

Following the announcement of the release of "Rags to Riches," featuring Wesley Barry, the Warner Brothers are said to be in receipt of hundreds of inquiries and contracts from first run theatres throughout the country. The success of the Barry picture at the Capitol Theatre, New York, is declared to be in some measure responsible for the increased interest by exhibitors seeking the production.

The twenty-one exchanges that have contracted for the entire series of the Warner Brothers' seven pictures are said to report an unusual number of bookings in their respective territories. Among these exchanges there are included some of the most representative theatre men in the industry.

Finkelstein & Rubin in Minneapolis, Balaban & Katz in Chicago, A. H. Blank Enterprises in Des Moines, the H. Lieber Co., Indianapolis, Skouras Enterprises, St. Louis, A. H. Fabian, New York, Regan Films, Ltd., Canada, and the hany others handling the Warner product, are said to be unanimous in the belief that "Rags to Riches" will eclipse the box-office records already created by "School Days" in their territories. These beliefs are based on the large number of contracts already made with many exhibitors.

Some of the theatres that have already contracted for the picture are the Empire Theatre. Syracuse; American, Troy; Rivoli, Clinton, Ind.; Loew's Warfield. San Francisco; Loew's State, Los Angeles; a large number of theatres throughout the Greater New York territory, and many other first run houses.

Seeling Finishes "The Purple Dawn"

LOS ANGELES—(Special)—Charles R. Seeling, producer of many successful plays, has established producing headquarters at the Fine Arts studio here, where he has just completed the first picture of his new series. The picture is entitled, "The Purple Dawn." The cast includes Bessie Love, Edward Piel, Bill Aldrich, Bert Sprathe and Pricilla Bonner.

Warners Sell Southern Rights

The last link in tieing up the entire country for the distribution of the forthcoming series of the Warner Brothers' seven productions was completed last week by Harry M. Warner, it is announced.

The deal was consummated with the Southern States Film Company, Atlanta, for the southern territory.

THERE'S A MILLION DOLLAR CAST IN
"ONLY A SHOP GIRL"

Intensive Not Extensive Productions Needed, Agree B. North and W. Nigh

By Will Nigh

THERE are no two ways about it. A human being, which is the subject matter that a director deals with, is primarily interested in himself. The picture director must follow the same rules as the manufacturer of merchandise. He must give the public what it wants—and the public wants to see itself on the screen. It wants to see its own actions, its own hopes, when it pays money to see a picture show. A study of pictures that have scored the biggest hits bears me out in my theory that successful pictures must portray the persons that see them. Much criticism has been hurled at the lack of intelligence in picture direction and this is due, I believe, to the neglect of putting this fundamental and simple principle into use.

In conceiving my pictures, I first make a deep study of human psychology. I ask myself first, What is a human being after? I do not leave the ground. I stick to earth. Lavish surroundings and dreams of wealth do not interest me as the main setting of a picture. The average person is neither wealthy nor does he dream of wealth that he can never hope to attain. Productions that have based their popularity on million-dollar effects and nothing else have never been successful. I believe in going to the street and tenements for my background or to the green fields of the country. I also make it a point to make my heroes and heroines weak-willed just as often as they are strong in character. They make mistakes and they fall and when they do triumph in the end it does not come suddenly. It only comes as a result of unfortunate experience, which is the case with life itself.

In other words, my heroes and heroines are the boys and the girls and the men and the women who come to see the picture. The life I portray is their own life, not an imaginative life. In my latest production, "Notoriety," which I have directed for L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North, my heroine, played by Maurine Powers, is a girl of the tenements. A girl, like a million other girls, yearning to be noticed. Like multitudes of others in her poor position, she is passed by unknown and ignored in daily life. In the development of the picture they have given her the same desires and hopes that I myself felt when I was her age—the desire for fame. Not being able to shine because of her merits, this girl tries to shine and attract attention because of her faults. This is a common, human trait. The daily newspapers and magazines are full of stories of girls who were nobody, suddenly stepping into the limelight, by committing some scandal. I follow up this girl from the dazzle of her first success to the natural result, which is not so pleasant.

In short, there is no escape from true life in the pictures that I write and direct. The mass of movie fans have been fed up on "make believe" plots and impossible situations. It is high time that they were given their own biography on the screen instead of those of people with whom they have never come in contact.

By Bobby North

THE past few years have seen the mistake of excessive distribution. The industry has learned that a distributing organization can get so broad that it is flat. Instead of concentrating on one big production at a time, a number of distributors scattered their efforts in a series of releases. The error was fatal, as the demand among exhibitors and the public was not for quantity but quality production. An organization can stretch its activities so far that it snaps, and that is what happened.

The lesson was costly but instructive. This year is noted for its decrease in bulk production and increase in "class" production. Producers have learned to read the signs of the times, and every effort is being made to put forth less pictures and bigger ones.

The wisdom of producing and distributing intensively instead of extensively is now being felt and spells better times in the film industry for all concerned.

L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North, officially "newcomers," although in reality veterans in picture activities for twenty-five years, did not have to burn their fingers in order to dread the fire. Their pioneer experience in filmdom taught them that it is better to produce half as little and concentrate twice as much than vice versa. From the very beginning of their appearance as picture producers when they launched John Barrymore in one of the first feature productions on record, "Raffles," they showed the industry that it is more profitable from every angle to release one picture at a time and devote all their attention to that single product than to release a few pictures in fast succession and divide their interest in simultaneous releases.

When Weber and North began activities this season as independent producers they were besieged by a score of stars and directors who were anxious to place their services and their product at the disposal of the organization. A number of pictures, all complete, were also offered to Weber & North for independent distribution, but they decided to "stick to the guns" and handle the biggest value in independent filmdom of today and reject everything else. It is common knowledge that Will Nigh represents a most profitable investment for independent exchanges and exhibitors.

Weber & North were determined to handle Nigh or nothing. Will Nigh was determined to deal with Weber & North or nobody, so the combination was made.

We offer no string of "screen successes," no star series group. We offer only one picture, "Notoriety." Only one director, Will Nigh, but we believe that combination is worth more than the series of average pictures, for the exchangeman and the exhibitor can realize more in actual cash from one Will Nigh picture masterpicce than from three ordinary releases.

Although Weber & North pride themselves on their director, Will Nigh, it is only fair to add that the stars assembled for "Notoriety" will also prove a factor in the financial success of Will Nigh's first release.

Dell Henderson Starts Things in Maine, Making Arrow Film

According to the Portland "Press Herald" of Thursday, October 5th, the forest fires which are burning in the Maine timber-lands are more severe than have ever before been kown, so severe, in fact, that to quote from the paper. "The open season for hunting in the State was suspended today by Governor Percival P. Baxter on account of the critical forets fire situation in the Northwoods."

The Arrow Film Corporation is in receipt of a telegram from Dell Henderson, who is at the present time in Maine engaged in the production of "Jacqueline" for the Pine Tree Pictures, Inc., to the effect that he has engaged the services of four additional camera men for the obtaining of such scenes as under different conditions it would be absolutely impossible to get.

Mr. Henderson's wire also goes on to state that the lives of four members of the cast were jeopardized by the tremendous conflagration.

BUFFALO NEWSLETS

Western New York film men will be glad to hear that Commodore Percival H. Smith has been appointed manager of the new Warner Brothers' exchange in this city. "Perce" is one of the best known knights of the leaping tintypes in this neck of the woods. He came to town many years ago to assume the management of the First National exchange. Later he jumped to other offices, ending up as manager of the United Artists' exchange and then went on the road for the same company. His last position was with the Goldwyn sales staff. Just at present P. H.'s office is in his hat, but Charles S. Goetz is expected to come to town soon and indications point to the establishment of a luxurious exchange on the fourth floor of the new film building in North Pearl street. Prints have started to arrive, and the Commodore has already closed "From Rags to Riches" at the $5,000,000 Eastman Theatre in Rochester. The new exchange will be a fully equipped one and boast a staff second to none. Two salesmen will be engaged. The Commodore has a great lineup of stuff and deserves the support of all exhibitors in the business hereabouts. If a big Italian touring car rolls into town, boys, it's Perce, so sign on the dotted line.

Bob Murphy, of Filkins and Murphy, is resting up after a flying tour of western New York theatres as chaperon for Franklyn Farnum, who made a series of personal appearances in many of the leading theatres of the territory last week. Buffalo, Tonawanda, Niagara Falls, Lockport, Jamestown and Syracuse were on the itinerary. Mr. Farnum was accompanied by his charming wife.

Syd Samson, manager of the Grand & North exchange, is back in town after a motor tour East. Most of the trip was a success. Near the end, however, Syd reports that his car laid down on him and it had to be towed into Buffalo, much to the embarrassment of the famous celluloid executive. Notwithstanding this setback, Syd tore right down to the Lafayette Square and signed up "Rich Men's Wives," and then to Olympic and booked "More to be Pitied Than Scorned."

Harry Marsey, of Niagara Pictures Corporation, is planning a big road show to accompany the film version of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" on its tour of the provinces.

The local Pioneer exchange, which has been sharing space in the Warner Building with Niagara Pictures, has been discontinued after a more or less stormy career.

Fred M. Zimmerman, president and general manager of Nu-Art Pictures Corporation, reports that he is being swamped with inquiries on "Sure Fire Flint," a print of which he soon will receive. Fred has signed up "The Hands of Nara" for presentation at the Eastman, Rochester.

Mike Resnick is now a member of the staff of Grand & North and is chalking up booking records as a city salesman.

A new Graphic exchange has been opened on the third floor of the Warner Building, in Franklin street, by Berlowitz & Mills, of New York City.

Nu-Art is placing "Captain Kidd" in almost every house in Buffalo. Some houses that would never listen to serial talk are now showing this subject at their Saturday matinee. Manager Fred M. Zimmerman reports that when Arthur L. Skinner, of the Victoria, started this serial with a free matinee for the children there were so many youthful patrons attending that Art thought the police were going to arrest him for violating the theatre crowding ordinance.

Syd Samson has booked "More to be Pitied Than Scorned" for presentation at a number of leading local theatres. This production is breaking booking records, says the Grand & North chief.

P. H. Smith, new Warner Brothers' exchange manager here, still has his office in his hat. Mr. Smith says that "Rags to Riches" has gone over so big in New York that the officials of his company can't find time to get to Buffalo for a few days to aid in locating a permanent exchange. In the meantime, P. H. is hustling around the territory booking the Wesley Barry feature right and left.

B. P. Schulberg Successfully Launches Co-operative Plan

Los Angeles—Special)—All Preferred Pictures to be made by B. P. Schulberg for release through the Al Lichtman Corporation will be made under a new co-operative producing plan in which every individual connected with the actual making of the pictures will be included.

Already three pictures have been made under this plan and two others are now under way. The completed productions are "Rich Men's Wives," "Shadows," "Thorns and Orange Blosoms" and the two subjects now in work are "The Hero" and "Are You a Failure?" Schulberg states that the experiment is working out as satisfactorily as he expected and that he intends continuing it in the future.

There have been a number of attempts on the part of producers to work on a co-operative basis in the past, but their success has been more or less indifferent. Schulberg has spent a good many years in the various phases of the business. He states that this extensive experience and the knowledge accumulated as a result of a close study of conditions have made him realize that large sums of money are wasted in production because directors, and members of the technical forces operate without a just consideration of the money they are spending. He recited a number of instances where expensive casts and sets were tied up because of some peculiar whim of the high-priced director in charge of production.

He figured that if some means could be devised of interesting the creators of the pictures more earnestly than merely receiving their pay checks, he might make high-class pictures on a firmer basis and with a minimum of expense. That is how his own particular plan came into being.

In discussing the plan with a World representative, he said:

"To accomplish anything properly there must be real co-operation and with this thought in mind I worked out a plan for making my productions whereby not only the cost is minimized but everyone joins in with a spirit that results in his very best efforts. Each person associated with the picture is given a financial share in it. In this way his interest does not cease when he receives his last pay check, but continues all during the releasing life of the picture.

"During the filming of 'Shadows,' Tom Forman's first picture for us, we struck a bad stretch of weather. We were after exteriors and so fell behind in our schedule. It became necessary to speed things up. With many players I would never have taken a chance on making them hurry. When I told Forman and the troupe that they would have to work over in order to make up for lost time they agreed without one dissenting voice. I knew that the picture would not suffer because of the enforced speed.

"From Thursday to Monday we worked constantly, giving the players only the briefest of respites in which to get rest. The electricians didn't get any rest at all. On Saturday, when Forman asked the company how they felt, they all replied 'tired,' but added they would work until the producing schedule had been lived up to.

"That's the spirit that money cannot buy and one that we hope will actuate all of our producing heads in future activities."

B. P. SCHULBERG

Cleveland

Skirboll Brothers have inaugurated their campaign exploiting the seven Warner and three C. C. Burr feature productions that they will handle in this territory. The productions being advertised are Warners' "Rags to Riches," "Little Heroes of the Street" "A Dangerous Adventure," "The Beautiful and Damned," "Brass," "Main Street" and "The Little Church Around the Corner," and C. C. Burr's "I Am the Law," "Sure Fire Flint" and "Secrets of Paris."

The following Cleveland houses have booked "Cap'n Kidd," the Eddie Polo serial being distributed through Standard Film Service: Liberty, Knickerbocker, Gaiety, Waldorf, Mt. Lebanon, Amphion, Fountain, Eric, Broadway, Iris, Lark, Market Square, Stork, Corona, Rivoli, Milo, Wiud-A-Mere, Lucier, Madison, Regent, Camera, Norwood, Carlyon, Peerless, Crawford, Alpha, Ideal, Golden, Eagle, Y, Venice, Capitol, Angela, Temple and Heights.

Harry Charnas, head of Standard Film Service, left here this week for New York, where he will be for several days, closing contracts for new product.

WEINBERG HERE

Harry Weinberg, manager of the Al Lichtman Exchange of Des Moines, was a visitor at the Lichtman office earlier in the week. He says "Rich Men's Wives" has been accorded a cordial reception in his territory. The picture is playing in Des Moines this week.

PENN 'CHANGE OWNER

PITTSBURG—(Special)—Matthew Tiplitz has sold his interest in the Penn Film Service here to Eddie Wheeler.

Johnny Hines Starts Work on Third Burr Feature

C. C. Burr and Johnny Hines are off again on another extensive production campaign, this time with Johnny Hines featured again in a six-reel comedy-drama, whose story it is reported will be even bigger and faster than either of the two preceding Hines' successes, "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" and "Sure-Fire Flint."

Production on the third Hines feature, temporarily titled "Luck," from the story of the same name by Jackson Gregory, whose virile pen is responsible for some of the greatest screen successes of this generation, begins this week at Burr's Glendale studio in earnest with a production force that is reputed to be the best that Producer Burr has yet assembled.

Included in the cast up to the present writing are Edmund Breese and J. Barney Sherry, both of whom appeared to excellent advantage with Hines in "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" and "Sure-Fire Flint," Charlie Murray, veteran Mack Sennett star now associated with C. C. Burr in the production of the "All-Star Comdies," and Joe King who has appeared in a great deal of the more meritorious productions made in the East in the past two years.

Just who the female lead will be is as yet undetermined, since Burr is now conducting negotiations with three nationally known stars to appear opposite Hines. It was Producer Burr's original intention to secure the services of Doris Kenyon, whose work opposite Hines in "Sure-Fire Flint" was so commendable, but Miss Kenyon is now touring the country in her stage success, "Up the Ladder," which made her presence impossible.

It is expected that this latest Hines feature will be ready for release December first.

Omaha

C. C. Burr's "I am the Law" has been setting record after record in the Middlewest and the local Enterprise Distributing Corporation office is authority for the statement that that Northwester established a new mark during its recent run at the Moon Theatre, Omaha.

Enterprise Distributing Corporation has acquired the local territorial right to "Flesh and Blood" from Western Feature Exploitation Company.

Despite a marked lack of exploitation, "Dick" Talmadge, a new acrobatic star, is going over particularly strong in this territory. The fact that the distributors of this picture have been mum on this star does not seem to hinder the popularity of Talmadge, who, with a little exploitation, should soon find his way to the better houses.

The A. H. Blank circuit has booked "I Am the Law" for showings at all its houses in this territory.

Leo Chapman, formerly with Educational and Greater Productions, has been appointed assistant to Manager Lucas of Enterprise Distributing Corporation here.

Al Kahn, manager of the Omaha Federated and Crescent exchanges, says he is doing a wonderful business on his Neal Hart series.

Northwest

Manager Hugh Rennie, of the Seattle Arrow exchange, is making Northwest key cities with "My Wandering Boy," prints of which have just been received at the local office.

Lou Rosenberg, Oregon representative, and E. Marshall Taylor, covering Montana, report business brisk on "Rich Men's Wives" and "Flesh and Blood," which are proving good box office attractions throughout the Northwest.

Theo. Johnson, manager of Reliance Distributing Corporation, has returned from an extensive swing about the territory. He reports that The Interstate Film Exchange, Inc., will distribute the Reliance product through their Spokane and Portland branches. The Interstate product will, in return, be distributed through Reliance here. L. A. Todd is manager for Interstate.

Three New Lichtman Exchanges Are Opened

The three Southern exchanges of the Al Lichtman Corporation are now in full swing. They are located in Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas, and are the branches formed under the terms of the recent agreement entered upon by E. V. Richards, Jr., vice-president and general manager of teh Saenger Amusement Co. of New Orleans, and Al Lichtman, president of the company, bearing his name.

Henry Ginsberg, sales manager of the Lichtman company, has just returned from the South where he finally got the new distribution under way. He spent some days in Atlanta and then went to New Orleans. While in the former city, he appointed R. A. Davis local manager and opened an exchange at 106 Walton street. Davis has been identified with important distributing companies in the South for some time and prior to assuming management of the Al Lichtman Exchange of Atlanta was with the Film Booking Offices. Ginsberg personally arranged for the premiere of "Rich Men's Wives" in the Atlanta territory by booking it into the Metropolitan, Atlanta, for a week, beginning October 30.

When in New Orleans, he placed the picture in the Strand for the week beginning October 26. Following that booking it will play the entire Saenger circuit of theatres. C. J. Briant will handle Lichtman business in Louisiana and Mississippi.

Minneapolis

The premier showing of "More to Be Pitied Than Scorned" in Des Moines, which took place last week, went over big and established the picture as one of the best box office attractions shown at that house.

Plans have been completed for the organization of a Film Club in Omaha. About twenty exchange men attended the last meeting in that city.

The Wisconsin Film Company and First Film Company of Milwaukee and Minneapolis, respectively, are now ready to release "The Country Flapper," starring Dorothy Gish.

Early returns on the experiment of J. Fred Cubberly of the F. & R. Film Exchange on road showing its attractions are encouraging.

The two big F. & R. releases at present are Al Lichtman's "Rich Men's Wives" and Warners' "Rags to Riches." Next week Cubberly will release "I Am the Law" and "Sure Fire Flint," both big C. C. Burr specials.

New York City

Provided the necessary court papers are signed by Thursday of this week, the first run bookings on "I Am the Law," the C. C. Burr Northwestern production, will set a new record for the metropolis, according to bookers at the L. Lawrence Weber-Bobby North. The picture is set to open at the Broadway Theatre in New York next week.

The Loew office has booked virtually the entire lineup of product of Aywon Film Exchange. Tuesday found that office hogging the bill at the New York Theatre and Roof where "Big" Boy Williams played in "Blaze Away" and Peggy O'Day in "Thundering Hoofs."

Box Savini of Atlanta, Ben Amsterdam and Dave Segal of Philadelphia, Harry Charnas of Cleveland, and Herman Rifkin of Boston were New York visitors.

Negotiations are pending for a first run showing of "The Secrets of Paris" C. C. Burr-Whitman Bennett's special, at the Strand or Capitol Theatre.

Fabian Brothers, who are handling the Warner features in New Jersey, will release the first of the Warner Series, "Rags to Riches," next week.

Rather than submit to the dictations of the circuit bookers, the Warner and Apollo exchanges have decided to disregard these string theatres and book their features with independent houses exclusively.

Sam Zierler's Commonwealth Pictures Corporation is still setting a hot pace for other exchanges to follow. In addition to the Al Lichtman features, Commonwealth is also handling C. C. Burr features.

Matt Radin of Capital Exchange announced this week that he had closed for the showing of the Phil Goldstone picture, "Deserted at the Altar," at all Keith, Moss and Proctor houses.

Al Feinman is now handling the publicity for the New York exchange of Warner Brothers.

Jack Fuld, exploitation manager of Fabian Brothers' Exchange of New Jersey, will concentrate all his efforts on putting over the Warner features in the Skeeter State.

Ernest E. Van Pelt, eastern manager of Sacred Films, Inc., of Burbank, Cal. is making the Merit Film Exchange his New York quarters. Sacred Films, Inc., will next month move its files, documents, etc., to this city, where the executive headquarters of the firm will be permanently established.

Negotiations are under way for a first run showing at a Broadway house of Will Nigh's first picture, "Notoriety," for L. Lawrence Weber-Bobby North.

"Night Life in Hollywood" and "Streets of New York" will be handled in the metropolitan territory through the Arrow Film Exchange, Manager Charley Seeleye planning extensive exploitation on both.

Nathan Hirsh of Aywon has tied up the entire Jack Hoxie new Western and Anchor product for the metropolitan zone.

Boston

Business generally for independents in this territory is improving, according to various exchangemen. Virtually all the big circuits are now seeking product from independents whereas two years ago they passed them up.

Harry Segal of Pioneer Exchange here has acquired a franchise for the new Amalgamated Exchange pictures. He went to New York this week to attend the shooting of the first scene of the initial picture at the New Rochelle, N. Y., studio.

Sam Grand of Federated Exchange is arranging for a big first showing here of the first L. Lawrence Weber-Bobby North feature, "Notoriety," directed by Will Nigh at a local house.

An attractively designed float built on an automobile chassis is advertising "The Curse of Drink" in New England cities and towns. Sam Grand is releasing this picture and reports are to the effect that the float is creating much attention.

Leon Rubenstein is handling the publicity and exploitation for Federated Film Exchange here.

Herman Rifkin, of Eastern Feature Films Exchange, is in New York negotiating for the entire output of Principal Pictures Company. He returned to Boston this week with news that he was dickering for the New England rights to "Chicago Sal" and "The World's a Stage," the latter an Elinor Glyn story starring Dorothy Phillips.

Southeast

E. C. Leeves, formerly sales supervisor of Associated Producers, will be general manager of the Al Lichtman exchanges of the Southeastern States, with branches in Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas. Arrangements for the opening of the three exchanges have already been made, and Mr. Leeves will have his headquarters in Dallas. E. V. Richards, Jr., of New Orleans, and Mr. Lichtman will jointly own the three exchanges for the distribution of the product of the Al Lichtman Corporation throughout the South. Branch managers have not yet been announced.

Arthur C. Bromberg Attractions, who have just purchased rights in their territory for $70,000 worth of new pictures, have just held a sales conference at the head office in Atlanta, attended by H. H. Everett and R. I. Robinson, managers of Charlotte and New Orleans offices, respectively, also salesmen F. H. Kirby, B. T. Burkhalter and S. E. Mortimer.

Maurice Shlank, producer of Hank Mann, Roadway and Mirthquake comedies, has recently visited exchanges of Educational Film Company in Atlanta and Charlotte, who handle these products in the South.

W. K. Jenkins, division manager for Enterprise Distributing Corporation, has recently spent some time in the Dallas office superintending the launching of a sales campaign for "Flesh and Blood."

Despite its exceptional first run at the Howard, "I Am The Law" enjoyed business above normal at its second run in Atlanta, at the Strand for an entire week.

Visits New York

Lester Blankfield, husband of Eve Unsell, who is scenario editor for Preferred Pictures, Inc., is in New York from the coast.

Selling the Picture to the Public

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Excessive Newspaper Advertising Fails to Bring a Corresponding Patron Return

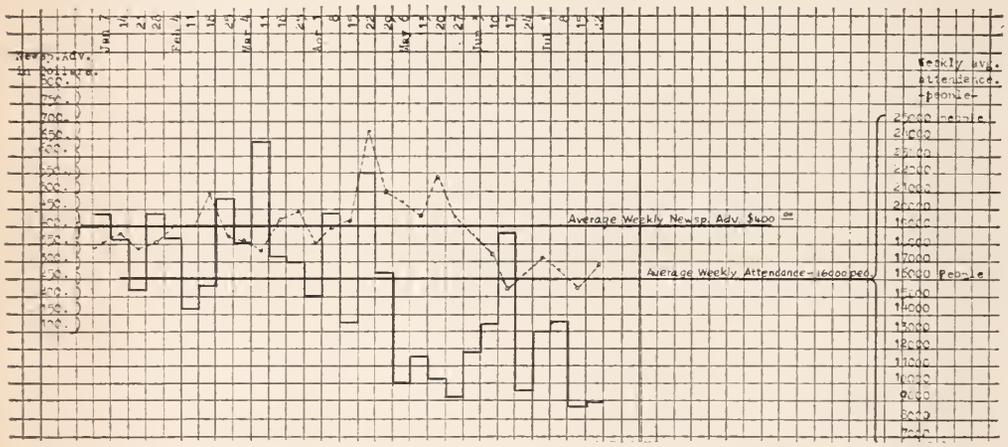
So much discussion has been aroused by the publication recently of Lem Stewart's comment on excess newspaper advertising that Mr. Stewart has very kindly gone to the trouble of making copies of some of his graphic charts to illustrate what he had in mind, and incidentally show just how it is done.

But before we analyze this we want it understood that this is not intended to prove the uselessness of newspaper advertising, nor did Mr. Stewart have any such idea in mind. He is far too keen a student of exploitation not to realize the fact that a certain section of his public may be reached only through newspaper work. More than that, he knows that the remainder of his public is largely influenced by the newspapers.

His contention is not that newspaper advertising is unnecessary and a needless expense, but that newspaper advertising cannot command more than its percentage of results and that, in general, additional advertising will not yield additional revenue, nor can a poor play be oversold through increased advertising.

His investigations were made to prove that there is much money being wasted in extra advertising which does not yield extra ticket sales, and the three graphs here presented are selected from a number of similar charts, all but one of which present approximately the same outlines.

In making these charts the base line is the average of attendance.



WHERE THE ADVERTISING IS LARGER THAN AVERAGE

This diagram shows an average weekly attendance of 16,000 persons with an appropriation of $400 for newspaper work. Some of the largest expenditures in display advertising brought the smallest returns in persons attracted. The dotted line is advertising.

Don't Ballyhoo

Don't ballyhoo "The Old Homestead." A ballyhoo with rural characters will inevitably suggest the burlesque farmer, too well known on the stage, and will cheapen the production in the minds of the spectators, creating an entirely wrong impression.

In your lobby do not feature anything that is burlesque or grotesque. The miniature display is always effective where frequently the larger realistic lobby is not complete. How about a miniature display of the "Old Homestead" at night, with the warm glow of a lamp behind the windows, and perhaps a wintry landscape, with the moon shining over all.—Lem L. Stewart.

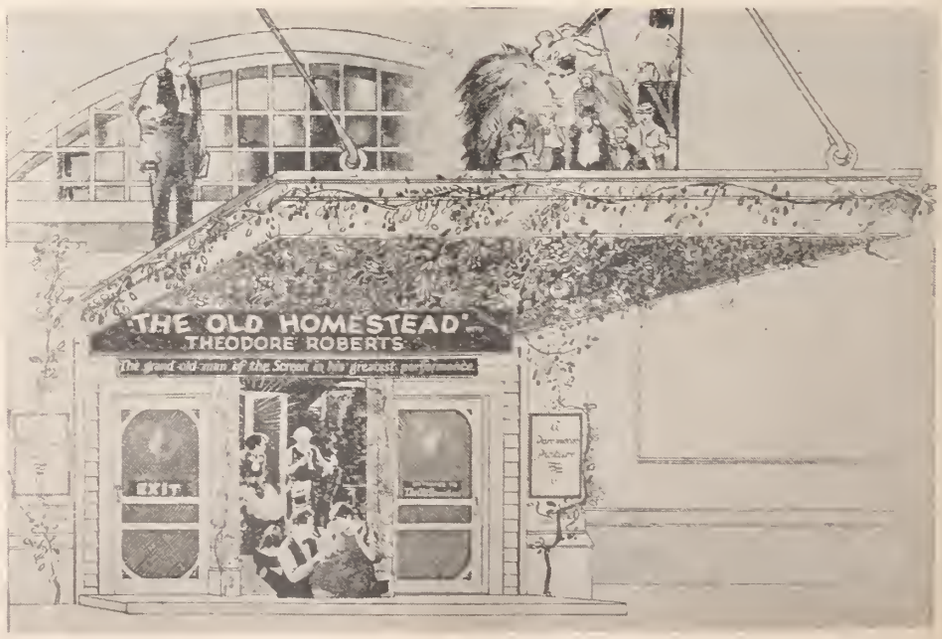
Old Homestead Offers Big Variety in Dress

Paramount Exploitation offers this suggestion for a lobby dress for Theodore Roberts in "The Old Homestead." The essential is the screened porch idea on either side of the central cutout, a cutout from the 24-sheet for the marquise, and a single figure cutout. Foliage is draped under the canopy, but this appears to us as an excess of decoration. It is difficult to affix to the metal frame and will not return an effect to repay the trouble.

But this is only one idea. There are others as good. A capital stunt would be a farmhouse atop the marquise, with the windows lighted. If you can put a phonograph with repeater attachment inside, so much the better.

For the lobby the picket or slab fence idea will be capital where the open construction permits, and back of this can be set cutouts, paintings, or merely foliage. This will be more striking and will well repay the additional trouble and cost.

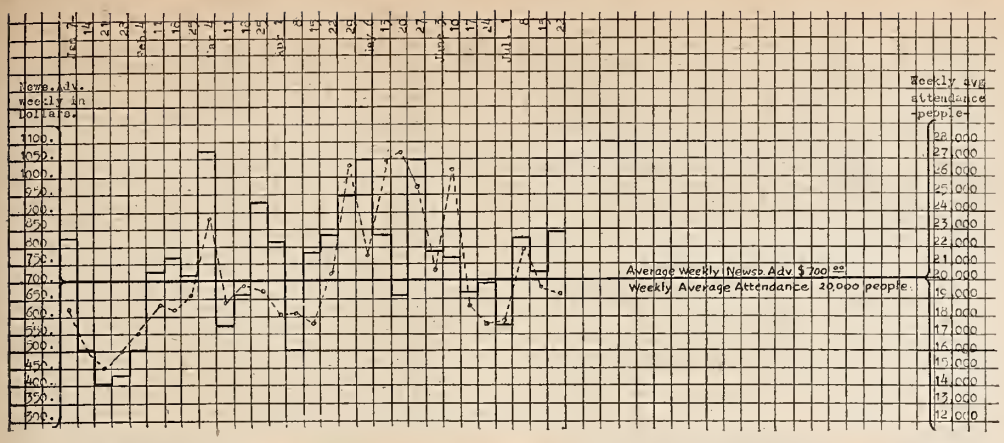
One thing must be carried in mind. This picture will be one of the big money makers of the season, but to make the most money it must be lavishly advertised. To get a circus income, you must use circus advertising methods. With the proper advertising you can put this picture to early morning and midnight matinees to accommodate the crowds. You have the material. All you need is the advertising.



A Paramount Release.

DOWN ON THE FARM WILL SELL "THE OLD HOMESTEAD" IDEA

Paramount's suggestion for a suitable lobby for the new record breaker. This picture should make as much money as a circus, but like the circus it will require to be exploited to the full to tell them all about it. For an alternative use the landscape.



Newsp. Adv. weekly in Dollars.
Weekly avg attendance -people-
Average Weekly Newsp. Adv. $700.00
Weekly Average Attendance 20,000 people.

SPENDING MORE THAN $700 WEEKLY DID NOT GET A CROWD

The dotted advertising line shows the departures from a $700 base for advertising on a 20,000 attendance. This is the most even outline of the three, and yet there is no real relation between the two lines, and the appropriation is exorbitant.

the advertising. The dotted lines show the departure from this basis for advertising work and the block line shows attendance under or over the average. Each square above the line represents an attendance of an additional one thousand persons, and an additional advertising cost of $50. The spaces below the base show the minus in the same proportions.

What They Show

These charts are actual diagrams, not changed in any way. Naturally the house and town are not given, nor can the attractions be listed.

The first chart shows a house with an average attendance of 16,000 persons and a newspaper advertising average of $400.

The season opened with the attendance above the line and the advertising about $60 less than usual. The second week the display ran almost to the line in an effort to do a little more for a weak attraction, but the effort was not successful and there was a loss of patronage of nearly 1500 patrons. Guided by this the advertising is dropped for the third week, but the business dropped still more.

The next week the advertising was increased a little, for a better picture, and the business went nearly three thousand above the previous week: not because some $15 additional had been spent in advertising, but because the feature was more attractive.

For the next two weeks the business was sub normal with the average being spent. Then the advertising went up, carrying the business with it slightly, followed by a drop of $240 in the advertising expenditure over the previous week, with an increase in business of nearly 5,000 persons.

No Relation

There is absolutely no relation between advertising cost and return. Only once, on April 22, is there a proportionate rise between advertising and results. In the weeks which follow business goes above the average but once, and that week is one of the two weeks which show the lowest advertising expenditures, with newspaper costs below the $400 mark. The other drop in the advertising line marks the lowest attendance of the season. This conflict of the lines is almost uniform.

The second chart shows advertising and attendance lines that are more nearly parallel. The ratio between the two is not exact, but this chart shows a house that used better judgment in proportioning its advertising. Here the advertising peak, however, is reached on May 20, when about $1,070 were spent, with attendance nearly a thousand below normal.

For nine weeks out of the 29 weeks covered business was below normal. The advertising was below normal on 19 of those weeks. Peak business was reached with an increase of about $190 for advertising, and the next highest attendance was reached with advertising only about $75 above the average.

This chart shows an average advertising expense of $700 and an average attendance of 20,000 persons weekly.

Still More Marked

The third chart covers a theatre similar to chart two, but in another city. These two cities compare closely in newspaper rates, population and competition. The theatres play the same attractions and it is interesting to note that the average attendance in each instance is 20,000 people weekly.

Chart three shows this average attendance maintained on average advertising expenditures of $350 weekly, compared with similar circumstances represented by chart two, but where the advertising cost averages $700 weekly.

The charts in this instance show up perhaps extravagant expenditures that can be rectified.

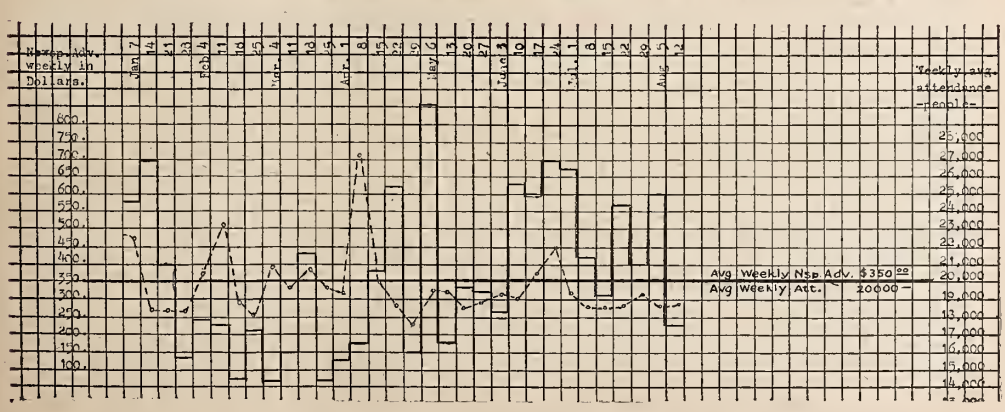
Considering the third chart alone, the attendance peak comes on the week of May 6, when the attendance is a little more than 10,000 above the average and the advertising $25 below the average. On April 8 some $350 were added, double the usual advertising sum, yet business is 3,500 people below normal.

In most instances the advertising line is above the average when business is lowest and lowest when business is at its best.

In other words, you cannot make business on a poor attraction with additional newspaper advertising. You do not need extra advertising to get good business on a worthy attraction. Be generous with the newspapers, but don't throw extra money away through any mistaken idea that you can make them come when they don't want to.

Roll Your Own

These graphs are more simple than the average person would suppose. You can get quadrille ruled paper through any stationer if he does not keep it in stock. The lines are worked in each week as the results are known. Mr. Stewart keeps his entries in pencil. Pencils of red and blue or other contrasting colors will be as simple (if you do not mislay the pencils) and give a better contrast. Start a graph, dating it back from the opening of the season. Then make other graphs for the relative cost of show as compared with the receipts. You'll know a lot more about your own business by next June, and some of that which you find out will shock and surprise you.



HERE IS ANOTHER 20,000 HOUSE WITH A $350 APPROPRIATION

In this by far the larger attendance is shown on the sub normal weeks, while the advertising peaks show serious drops in attendance, due to an unavailing effort to offset weak features with extra display advertising. Not once did it work.

With Light Effects

Frank J. Miller, manager of theatres in Augusta, Ga., and I. L. Shields, manager of the Modjeska Theatre, got out an attractive and simple idea for "Monte Cristo."

A cutout was made from the 24-sheet, showing Dantes atop the world. A sketchy background was painted and hung a few feet back of the figure. The base of the cutout, which formed the upper part of the globe, was a mask for blue, amber and green lights, which not only gave an odd effect to the background, but which strengthened the cutout figure by silhouetting the outline against the stronger light. It helped to run business up 25 percent.

Took It Inside

One Southern Enterprises manager did not use a cage in the lobby for "Her Gilded Cage." He put it on the stage, with a singer inside, for a prologue act. The singer came out of the coop and advanced across the stage to a canary cage, singing "Only a Bird in a Gilded Cage." It made a hit, though the song does not run true to the film and is liable to give rise to a false impression.

For the lobby he used six canaries, borrowed from the bird store.

Showing the Pinch

Following the form of police circulars, the Crown Theatre, New Haven, got out a throwaway stating that Lydia Thorn was wanted for Manslaughter. This was illustrated with a still showing the scene of Lydia's first arrest for speeding. It was cheap and striking, and it helped business.

A Paramount Release.

HOW RAY BEALL ADAPTED THE LOBBY ON BLOOD AND SAND

That circle in the picture is not the bull ring. It's part of the regular floor mosaic at the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., but the general effect is the arena with the brightly dressed spectators well out of range of the bull.

Carried Lobby Effect to a Tiled Flooring

Although he had already played "Saturday Night," that picture was booked back to Tom Clemmons, of the Tivoli Theatre, Beaumont, Texas, for a part of his Paramount Week program.

He erected a falsework of compoboard which was done to represent marble, with openings for the Paramount paintings on the picture. Heavy black panels gave a striking effect to the top of the structure.

As this set back a little from the street, Clemmons painted the floor with broad bands of black and white water color, all converging at the entrance where the sill was lettered "Come on in."

This was a very simple device, but no one passed without following the lines down to their end, and that landed them in front of the still frame. Business was thirty per cent. better than usual, and a large portion of the increase should be credited to the band idea. It is one of the best things the Texas section of Southern Enterprises has sent in for a long time.

A Daylight Screen for Eternal Flame

In addition to the hook-up with the Postal Telegraph whereby that company bore half the expenses of distributing 50,000 telegrams on the first showing of Norma Talmadge in "The Eternal Flame" at the Mary Anderson Theatre, Louisville, the house did a lot in other directions.

Most of the campaign was based on the pre-release showing, but it had as many angles as a porcupine has quills.

One good stunt was putting a trailer into a phonograph store window. The only cost was the making of the screen. The store manager figured that everyone who looked in the window would see his display, too, and he did not even demand a slide in his own show. The results proved that he got all he counted upon.

A jeweler made a drive on the imitation pearls, with large portraits of the star and another window carried the branding scene cutout and provided with a scenic background. It was one of the most comprehensive stunts ever pulled in the house—and it should be remembered that the Mary Anderson has worked some good ones before this.

Fashion Shows Still

C. B. Grimes, of the Belvedere Theatre, Tuscaloosa, Ala., revived the Fashion Show for "Her Gilded Cage," working with the local store. Local girls were induced to act as models and though only one showing had been planned, two were given to satisfy the large turnaway.

Birthday Card Idea Brought Odd Return

Roy L. Smart, who is manager of theatres for Southern Enterprises in Anniston, Ala., was one of the hundreds of managers to put into practice Fred Greene's birthday card idea.

The other night he was invited to attend a dinner of the Business and Professional Women's Club of Anniston, and to his surprise found himself the only man in the room and sitting in the honor place at the right of the presiding officer.

When the speechmaking time arrived, the president handed him a verbal bouquet with reference to his work for good pictures, and an appreciation of his birthday remembrances. Then a string of girls filed in, each bearing a joke gift and tailed by a birthday cake.

Taken by Surprise

Smart did not know that anyone outside his immediate family knew that it was his birthday, but evidently the club had taken pains to find out and the surprise dinner was their appreciation of his many courtesies.

One of the features of the evening was a production of scare-em-out pictures with the stars appearing in person as well as on the film.

It was a delightful surprise, and a testimony to the great value of the personal touch in the amusement business.

After the Automobiles

Giving the dry goods merchants a rest, the Criterion Theatre, Evansville, Ind., sold the automobile dealers on a stunt.

C. F. Lewis, the manager of the house, got them to come in on a page for "The Bonded Woman," promising to put up the ticket prizes. In place of the usual displays there were pictures of the cars and the slogan or some hint line. The Packard, for example, used "Ask the man who owns one" and "Two brothers made me" proved the car to be a Dodge and not a cough drop.

Everyone who made a complete identification was given a pass for one to the Compson picture. There were not as many as might be supposed, and as most of the passes brought in a least one paid admission, the stunt showed good business and left Miss Compson in a position to make more money for the house on her next picture.

AN IDEAL EFFECT FOR THE USE OF TRAILERS IN WINDOWS

This screen was devised by the Mary Anderson Theatre, Louisville, for the showing of the trailer on "The Eternal Flame" when it was shown there pre-release. Just one of the big points in a campaign of unusual elaborateness for this picture.

A New One at Last for Coogan Exploit

It had to come eventually. Instead of the familiar string of Coogan stunts, the Strand Theatre, Syracuse, used toy balloons with passes attached, which were released on an ample vacant lot, while the kids stood on the sidewalk and tried to bring them down with stones. The boy who hit the balloon and brought it down got the pass attached.

It's a great stunt, but you are liable to need the police reserves to handle the youngsters and see that the rock throwing does not become too promiscuous, or you'll have a whole stack of damage suits on your hands —also not a few free fights over the question as to who shot the winning rock. If you can handle the kids, it's a great stunt.

Just to whet the boyish appetites, and to get all the advertising, the theatre used a balloon decorated car for a street perambulator for several days in advance.

Pearls Beat Rubies

All over the country managers are taking advantage of the hook-up possibilities of the Norma pearls, an imitation named after the First National star and worked in conjunction with "The Eternal Flame."

In addition to getting window space, they are donated for contest prizes, the contest worked by Manager Needles, of the Princess Theatre, Hartford, landing the string around the neck of the girl who looked most like Miss Talmadge.

It's a good stunt, but why should a girl want a prize for looking like the pretty star? She should be satisfied with that.

Spreading It Out

No one questioned the fact that "Monte Cristo" was playing the Grand Theatre, Columbus, O., for the fact was spread upon one of the largest canvas signs ever used for a theatrical display.

It was 69 feet long by 11 feet wide, and stretched over five floors of a six-story corner building. At night it was illuminated by 74 nitrogen lamps. In addition to the title it bore only the words "Grand Theatre. Now Playing"; and only a blind man could overlook it.

As the block had only one electric sign—and that for the Grand, there was no competition to fight. It was the one big noise in that section, and unusually good advertising.

HERE IS SOMETHING A LITTLE NEW IN BALLOON TICKETS

For "Trouble" the Strand Theatre, Syracuse, used balloons with passes and the kids stood on a line and shot rocks at them as they were released, one by one. The balloons were used as an auto ballyhoo for several days before the stunt to work up interest.

Still Productive

Howard Phillips, of the Sigma Theatre, Lima, Ohio, sold a bunch of tickets to "The Lotus Eater" by working up interest in a series of teaser ads featuring the numerals 1, 3, 5, 7 and 9. The fourth advertisement added that at these hours the Barrymore feature would be shown at the Sigma.

This was first used on "Forever," but seems to be working as well as ever where it has not been used. For that matter, it will stand a repeat very nicely after an interval of six or eight months, if handled in a slightly different way.

The dollar-a-week men who were sent to Los Angeles by First National in appreciation of their efforts in putting over First National Week, were each given a reel of film showing them talking to the First National stars, bathing on the beach and doing a lot of other things the Angelians do.

Nick McMahon, of the Marlow Theatre, Trenton, put his reel on as a star feature for a week, and made it a real money getter.

Prize Critics Tell Gloria All About It

Because a critic, in order to criticize, has to see what he passes opinion upon, Eli M. Orowitz collaborated with Dr. B. H. Stuckert, of the Strand Theatre, Allentown, in a prize criticism stunt.

He wired John P. Goring, the Los Angeles' Paramounteer, to send a telegram in Miss Swanson's name stating that she was anxious to learn the opinion of representative towns on "Her Gilded Cage" and offering $25 for the best criticism; all entries to be sent her.

This telegram was reproduced and almost everyone who saw the play sat down and told it all, and it made a great deal more than the cost of the prize for the house.

Goring is sending so many telegrams these days for various brother exploiteers that he is thinking of asking the wire companies for a commission on his business.

Don't overlook the appeal in the statement that all the entries will be sent the star. That has a real value of its own.

Good Press Book

The first of the new Goldwyn press books is on Rupert Hughes' "Remembrance," and if the first is any standard of the series, the exhibitor is going to be placed in a position to collect real money for his Goldwyn bookings without doing more than follow the suggestions in the book. The books are too large to be handy, but they contain a lot of meaty suggestions, though many of the stunts are time-tried.

A DRAPED BOX OFFICE HELPED SELL "ONE CLEAR CALL"

White robed men have been used all over for this Ku-Klux picture, but the Hamilton, Theatre, Lancaster, Pa., worked out on a new line when it put the box office in a nightie, with pictures of the leading players on the angled surface.

Three Section Ship Sailed Strand Lobby

Sectional rowboats are common, but G. M. Phillips, of the Strand Theatre, Atlanta, has invented the sectional ship; this rather tubby looking craft being worked on three planes, the hull, the deck house and the pilot house. The perspective is rather poor in the photograph, but the lobby effect was decidedly good.

A Fox Release

MR. PHILLIPS' SHIP

The Strand lobby is circular and the cyclorama drop was cut for the box office on the right, though this doesn't show in the photograph, and the lobby was less cramped than the photograph would suggest, for the anchors were moved out to the side and there was ample foot room.

Working in three planes gave a better effect from the front than would a flat painting.

Freckle contests on Wesley Barry are getting so common that in some sections the public no longer responds.

Realizing that the red-headed kids have the most freckles, Manager Kuhlman, of the Rex Theatre, Jackson, Mich., confined hic contest for "Penrod" to red-headed boys--hair dye barred.

Blood and Sand Has Information Bureau

Opening an "information bureau" in a downtown music store was one of the ways the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., pulled big money on "Blood and Sand."

All inquirers after Valentino could get a fan photo and more than 400 registered in three days, many of whom bought music before they left the store; which was why the stunt could be worked. This was done in connection with a newspaper contest in which prizes were offered for the keenest analysis of the success of the star.

Street car cards and a sanded arena for the lobby display were other means for building up receipts while keeping down expenses, for the additional advertising cost was only about ten dollars and the business was largely increased.

Even the Well

A most ornate lobby on "Grandma's Boy" comes from John B. Carroll, of Asheville, N. C., and was built in the lobby of the Imperial Theatre. The photograph is too dark to yield detail in a cut, so it cannot be reproduced here, but to try it in your own lobby will be money in the box office.

Right and left of the lobby are the cutouts from the 24-sheets, rising almost to the point of the arch. Inside, on the left, is a set cottage with built-up porch furnished with a rocker and other comforts. An old fashioned churn stands before the door and about the centre of the lobby is a potted plant into which has been stuck a large branch to suggest a small tree.

On the right is the well which figures so prominently in the play.

It is an unusually pretty job and it is to be regretted that the photographer fell down.

Pleased the F. F. V.

When it came to putting over "Smilin' Through," the Trenton Theatre, Lynchburg, Va., tied a committee of prominent women to the film as sponsors and ostensibly it was they who were responsible for bringing the picture to the theatre.

They got all the honors, but J. B. Trent got all the money, and that was what he preferred. The stunt not only doubled business on Miss Talmadge's picture, but the women kept on talking about the picture to the benefit of later attractions.

Popular

The Perry Theatre, a Rowland and Clark house in Erie, Pa., got more than 5,000 replies to a want ad stunt.

Extra letters were put into the classified ads sufficient to spell "The World is Mine." All you had to do was to pick out these letters and rush over to the publication office with them. The sooner they got there, the better their chance of getting one of the ticket prizes which rewarded promptness.

It was about all that was required to get bumper houses for "Monte Cristo." The title did the rest.

HERE IS A SIMPLE LOBBY DISPLAY FOR A CUTOUT

Nick McMahon, of the Marlow Theatre, Ironton, Ohio, has a display stand which will work for any good cutout. The card announces the distribution of fanfotos to the first one thousand women attending the matinees of "Blood and Sand."

Used Awning Lobby for "Blood and Sand"

Of course, Guy A. Kenimer, of the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville, saw the value of the awning lobby suggested by Paramount and printed in this department, but he used the simpler form and did his painting inside, the walls of the lobby, seen through the openings, showing the arena with a very busy bull. All red lighting was used, and the cut-out of Valentino from the 24-sheet was displayed in the centre.

A prologue was arranged with the pupils of local dancing classes and each afternoon the girls in the cast were given a ride around town in an automobile bannered with the fact that they could be seen at the Arcade. An even better ballyhoo was sending the entire cast—boys and girls—to take lunch at the most popular restaurant. As they were all in costume, the stunt created real excitement.

The cashiers and doormen were dressed in real Spanish costumes, imported from Philadelphia along with the costuming for the prologue players, and the boy ushers wore white trousers and sport shirts with red sashes.

The want columns were used for an advertisement in which it was stated that a purse had been lost containing a large sum of money, a diamond ring and tickets to "Blood and Sand." The finder was to keep the money and ring if he would return the tickets. This was also used on the screen and Mr. Kenimer reports that it got attention all out of proportion to its cost.

Starting three weeks in advance, Mr. Kenimer put the picture over to handsome receipts.

A JACKSONVILLE VERSION OF THE PARAMOUNT LOBBY

Guy A. Konimer, of the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville, used the lobby idea presented in this department and backed this up with a painting inside to carry out the idea of the bull ring entrance. Red lights were used inside the enclosure.

Husband's Trademark Was Lettered Window

Peep shows have been "out" recently, but they still offer a powerful appeal to curiosity. Try a revival on the next picture you want to put over which does not seem to offer any special stunt.

Tom Clemmons, of the Tivoli Theatre, Beaumont, Texas, put it over for "Her Husband's Trademarks," lettering the sign with the names of all trademarked goods handled by the store.

At the bottom was "These are all very well known trademarks. You have seen and recognized them for years past. But do you know ——" A line took the eye to the central legend which read, "What a Husband's Trademark Is"? and the peephole was cut after the word "husband's."

Back of the sign was a cutout of the star and the card of the house, backed by a display of lingerie. The hole was cut high enough in the sign to keep the children away. For a kid picture, a second hole should be cut lower down.

Copied Pasadena

M. F. Estes, of the Beacham Theatre, Orlando, Fla., copied the locomotive built by the Pasadena Theatre for "The Crossroads of New York" and used it on the same title.

The engine was built to cover a small automobile truck and was provided with a bell which kept ringing. A can of rags supplied the smoke. When not running around town the car was parked in front of the theatre. It helped business some 20 per cent.

It cost only $14 for material, and Mr. Estes figures that he can revive the idea and use it for other specials from time to time. For that matter he might profitably rent it to adjoining towns and get his money back that way.

A Paramount Release.

HER HUSBAND'S TRADEMARKS WERE ALL ON THE SIGN

Inside of the window was a cutout of the star and a display of goods for the store. The stunt cost Tom Clemmons, of the Tivoli Theatre, Beaumont, Tex., only five passes, and it boosted the takings better than twenty per cent. of the average business.

Tied State Beauty to Theatre Stunts

Recently one of the Des Moines' papers held a contest for queen of the State Fair and the prize went to Miss Bonnie Murray, who was properly indicted into her chair of state.

She stepped from the throne to the stage of the Strand Theatre, Des Moines, for John J. Friedl, Paramounteer, aided E. H. Helmts, to book her for a one-woman fashion show for a week, making three appearances a day. A local store was glad to supply the gowns for the display, for Miss Murray had been receiving page upon page of the livest sort of publicity for nearly a month It was good exploitation work. It may be necessary to start your own contest, but you can work it.

Legion for Cardigan

Even a place the size of Cincinnati will respond to the hook-up with the American Legion on the right pictures. The Circle hooked the veterans to "Cardigan," of the American Releasing Corporation, and the women of the Auxiliary got back of the idea and worked hard to help the boys win their percentage.

Miss Hilda Scheurer and five associates donned the old Colonial dress and as the flappers of 1776 they paraded the downtown streets and boosted the sale of tickets very materially. They also helped around the theatre at showing times and made themselves generally useful to the publicity manager.

Loves of Pharaoh Had An American Rival

Someone with a nice sense of proportion booked a prize beauty into the Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, along with "The Loves of Pharaoh," and S. S. Wallace had his hands full.

His first kick was a cutout, 20 by 8 feet, showing an Egyptian girl which was put on the marquise a week before the showing. Wallace says it is Cleopatra, but she had not yet been born, so it must have been someone else.

For the showing he used an intricate lobby scene reproducing the death of Pharaoh, with columns in back and a painted scene, which does not show in this photograph. Burning incense helped to make its appeal, and the triangular pyramids proved very useful both around and away from the house. This is an idea that should commend itself to others.

For the prize beauty he drove on all the business lunch clubs, hooked her to the newspapers, put her on the radio for a beauty lecture and otherwise ran her off her feet.

The weather was the hottest recorded since 1909, but Wallace got the crowds just the same. They felt they could not afford to stay away, so forcefully had he presented his offering.

THE CUTOUT IS HAND PAINTED AND WENT UP IN ADVANCE

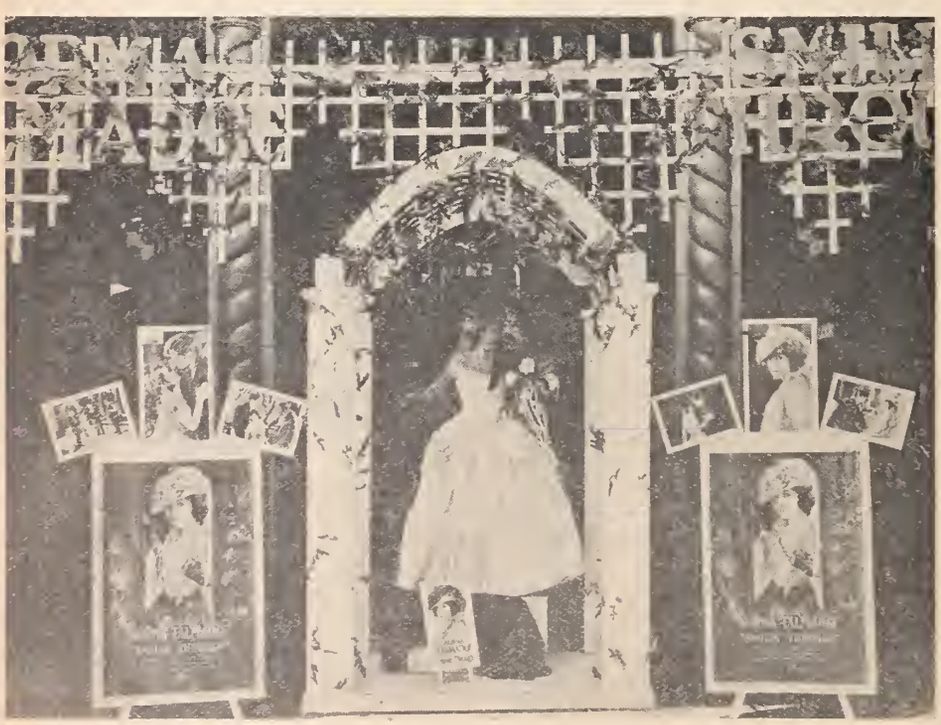
It is twenty feet long by eight feet high, and was made by S. S. Wallace, Jr., for tho Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, for "The Loves of Pharaoh." The lobby scene was put in for the run and shows the death of the Egyptian ruler. It sold the feature.

Dressed Up Cutout Won Sizable Crowds

It is not new, but it is not very common, and so a dressed up cutout of Norma Talmadge in the bridal gown in "Smilin' Through" got big attention for the attraction at the Ellanay Theatre, El Paso.

The house used a latticed lobby with cutout letters for star and title, and then set a six-sheet cutout into the central panel. This was all dolled up with real hair, nicely coiffured, and the dress was of silk, draped by the expert window dresser from a department store. There was a real veil, with a wreath of orange blossoms and the bridal bouquet was of natural flowers, renewed when necessary. Standing against a ground of solid black, the display got more attention than half a dozen "original" costumes, and brought more business In making such a display, remember that the more complete the dressing the better the effect.

As a side line the streets were painted with the "Smilin' Through" slogan, but this was merely an annex to the real stunt.



A First National Release.

THEY WENT SMILING PAST A DRESSED UP CUTOUT

This cutout, used in a lattice lobby by the Ellanay Theatre, El Paso, was all dressed up and no place to go, but it pulled a lot of patrons past the display of the novelty right up to the box office, where they bought tickets for "Smilin' Through."

Inexpensive Display Makes Striking Flash

Flag displays suggest the rental of the material and a consequent expense, but the Princess Theatre, Sioux Falls, S. D., got away with a big flash on "Blood and Sand" at a small cost.

A Paramount Release.

IT DOESN'T COST MUCH

Instead of making the flags of bunting, they were cut from blue, orange and red calico and simply sewed to the ropes. At night spots threw lights from below on the display. The entire layout did not cost much more than a couple of cutouts and it put a big release over in a big way, carrying the display up two stories.

Any one stunt in "Picture Theatre Advertising" will pay for the book.

"Nice People" Seems to Be Cleaning Up in Southern Enterprises' Best Houses

WHEN Lem Stewart viewed "Nice People" in the projection room, he decided that he had seen a picture worth going to a little extra trouble about, and he planned an extra strong campaign to mail to the managers in Southern Enterprises territory.

This started with thirteen want ads, under various classifications such as furnished rooms for nice people, money to loan to nice people, and similar appeals, just enough out of the ordinary to get attention and arouse curiosity. This was to be followed with cards, carrying only the title, and the "Nice people use——" idea. Teasers were also to be sent the clubs. The text for one of these cards, sent in Atlanta, reads merely "Do members of the Piedmont Driving Club consider that to the nice people of today clothing is merely to be seen through, and food something to take between drinks? It is an age of jazz. Who are Atlanta's Nice People?" The question was in place of the signature, set in two lines. The rest was set solid. All of the work was done on a multigraph in typewriting.

Ran Five Days

All of this was to be done in the five days before the revealing of the title. For this break special copy had been prepared somewhat along the lines of the card quoted above and set in reading style with an attractor head.

In Atlanta the campaign was carried out for the Howard with cards differently worded, to three of the most exclusive clubs and three college fraternities, a card to each member. As none of them knew what it was all about, it sounded like the efforts of some reformer, and made considerable talk.

The tack cards were mostly mounted on pointed sticks and planted on lawns, according to the suggestion on another picture, the stunt first being used in Jacksonville. The sticks were planted late at night, and next morning many of the children appropriated them and carried them as banners on their way to school, augmenting the stunt considerably.

In Montgomery

Montgomery, Ala., spent $15 extra on 200 snipes with the title, four display windows and an automobile which announced that nice people used that make of car. There was also a card in the spare tire rack. The tack cards were put into the elevators in most office buildings. At small expense business was increased by one-third.

Columbia, S. C., got 40 per cent. over the average business. In addition to the routine campaign, the tie-up with the Mallory hats was used and extended to a brand of clothing, and other essentials. Arrows with the title were painted for six important street intersections, and they had the best midweek business they have enjoyed this year.

Macon Did Well

Macon did a $500 increase on an additional $60. They wrote a new set of classified ads to better suit their town, and tied eight merchants to the nice people idea.

Augusta did nearly half as much again in the way of business, hooking in to a double-page spread intended to put over the fan photos. The photographs were the chief feature of the hook-ups, but each merchant had something in his space about what nice people did.

These are all the reports in to date, but they go to prove that an intelligent campaign, followed out, will put the picture over to business from a third to a half above the average.

No other reports from Southern Enterprises will be given on this picture unless something unusual is done by the local manager.

Made It Flashy

Orange and yellow, with white lettering, was the color scheme used by Ollie Brownlee of the Palace Theatre, Muskogee, Okla., for "Nice People." He figured that the story was a jazz and should be given all the help that a loud color scheme would confer. It gave people the idea of the picture. The same idea was used for a border under the marquise; an adaptation of this department's lobby idea.

A cutout of Miss Daniels and Nagel sitting at the table was used for the lobby and was also sent on a float for a local parade, and 200 cards lettered simply "Nice People," were hung on residences. He painted 42 store windows with the title in water color and ran a hook-up page for the stores nice people patronized.

A Fox Release.

HOP RIGHT ABOARD AND SEE THE FAST MAIL SCOOT

Guy H. Aiken, assistant manager of the Capitol Theatre, Macon, Ga., planned this impressionistic car for the lobby and helped put the receipts up to more than double the average with this snappy melodrama.

A Real Banderillo for "Blood and Sand"

Chance brought Ray Beall, of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., a real attractor for his run on "Blood and Sand." One of his patrons had made the pilgrimage to the session of the Imperial Council of the Mystic Shrine in San Francisco last June and stopped off in Juarez on the Sunday the New York Temple had arranged for a bull fight. He brought back with him one of the banderillos, two of which are thrust into the bull's shoulders by each of the capadores.

Mr. Beall made a special lobby display of this beside a still frame, and the name of the donor, a well-known resident, gave weight to the newspaper stories.

A Paramount Release.

THE BANDERILLO

The ground was black, with the lettering in red, yellow and light blue to match the paper festoon on the barbed stick. The still frame was done in red, yellow and green.

You can get your blacksmith to make a barbed head, set it into a round stick and fasten colored paper, shredded, onto the stem and have as good a banderillo as the fighters themselves make. Then dip the barb in blood (not red paint), let it dry and cook up a dog story.

For his lobby Mr. Beall adapted the design printed in this department, but he reversed and showed the inside instead of the outside of the plaza. The toreador was based on a one-sheet head, the remainder of the outline being sketched by Mr. Beall himself. The manager also made his own bull and painted the background. This shows the spectators, only the ones in the foreground showing much detail. This is more work than the more simple design offered here, but it is more effective where the artistic talent is at command.

For a starter Mr. Beall threw away two thousand cards printed merely with the title in red. This was before the play date was advertised, and the number of inquiries received as to when it would play assured him that interest in the subject was general.

The rotogravures were not to be had in time to fold into the Sunday papers, so they were given out in the middle of the week to hold up business on the seven-day run. The newspaper campaign was chiefly from the press book, but was intelligently sized, with an extra large space on Thursday to back up the roto distribution. As a matter of fact the delay in receipt of the rotogravures was an aid to business, giving a midweek punch.

Even at regular rates the business went over the mark.

Nelson B. Bell on Harold Lloyd

Nelson B. Bell, of the Crandall Theatres, Washington, grew enthusiastic about Harold Lloyd in "Grandma's Boy" and wrote a set of paragraphs that will sell the bespectacled star. Living in Washington, it is natural, he should talk about the "inaugural attraction Extraordinary of the New Season." The presidential inaugurals are the times when Washington makes real money, and it is a magic word in the national capital. It's a sort of hook-in to the September idea. He handicaps the comedian a little by telling that this picture does for him what "The Kid" did for Chaplin. It really isn't necessary to drag Chaplin in. Lloyd is amply able to stand upon his own comedy feet. It does no harm, but we can't see the good of it. We like better "The picture that places the stamp of genius upon its brilliant star," but even this is belated. The impression in the original is rather weak, and the cut sinks into the paper and almost comes out the other side, but the rimmed glasses stand out, so you can see that it is Lloyd. Most of the hit is made with the type, and this sells in spite of the slight errors of judgment. Most of Bell's spaces drop so far down the page that we have stopped reproducing them until we get more space, but the Washingtonian is holding up his end as well as usual.

Fake Telegram Is New Display Idea

Not all of the good ideas come out of the sticks, but most of them do. Either the small town man has more time to think out ideas or else he needs more intensive work, but whatever the cause, they hustle more in the backwaters than they do in the main channel. One of the really new ideas comes from Burlington, N. C., where the Rose Theatre used this. The telegram reproduction always seems to get attention in the newspapers. That part of it is not new, but the cross line with reference to the coal and railroad strikes gives the suggestion of an official communication and arrests attention. The greeting to the sheriff, and the first two lines carries on the idea and by that time you are sold into reading all of the space, and six different titles are put over. It's not a wonderful idea, but it is clever and timely and probably got a great deal more attention than could be gained with three or four times the space for a straight display advertisement, and having gained the attention the six titles are put over in a way you cannot overlook. We hope that by the time you read this the strikes will be a dead issue, but file the idea away in the back of your brain against a future emergency.

September Slogan Brought Business

Larry Hayes, of the Dawn Theatre, Hillsdale, Mich., believes that a good idea is worthy of good development, and he took over our September slogan for a goal. Nothing less than a page seemed right to Larry, so he booked a page and split it between reader and display. There is a lot of copy in that panel, but we think that most persons who saw the page read the text, for it is a straightforward appeal to the patrons to come in the month of the biggest shows. Mr. Hayes has the trick of writing convincing English, fluent and without flamboyancy, and we particularly like his closing, which reads: "It is the sincere wish of the present management that you regard the Dawn as belonging to you, just as much as you regard the post office, the court house, the library or the city hall, for in the Dawn, in this theatre-land of make-believe, every day in the year, the poor will again walk with kings and the rich will be blessed with the common touch." That sounds like something more than a theatre, and that seems to be what Mr. Hayes is trying to make his house.

Storm-blown Type Suggests a Title

Ragged lettering is seldom to be commended in display advertising, but now and then it will work better than the usual letter, as it does in this display for "The Storm." Here the background sketch roughly suggests swirling storm clouds, and this suggestion is carried further in the storm signals to the left of the display, in which is lettered some of the selling talk.

sition from dark to light; a more gradual working over to the lighter would have been better, and the scene cuts should have had their outlines softened to merge into the space better, but these are at best but minor faults and the chief point is that a strong suggestion of the title is given in the display.

Takes Too Much to Sell a Title

We think that the Apollo Theatre, Indianapolis, wasted money selling "Monte Cristo" in about 200 lines across four. With such a title 125 lines across three would have been ample. Either you sell "Monte Cristo" on the title or it does not get over. They needed all of the space in which to display this cut from the plan book, but the cut was not really essential and could have been reduced to get it into smaller compass, or the title could have been sawed from the cut, had they wanted this precise lettering. There is no use paying a fancy price for a self-selling title and then throwing away money advertising what is already disposed of. This makes a very sightly display, but it takes up too much space, and space costs in Indianapolis. Cut work is not going to sell this veteran. Therefore cuts are a waste if used for more than attractors. We think that the paragraph which states that 50,000,000 persons have read the book and 15,000,000 have seen the play is not correct. If James O'Neil has not played to a larger audience than that in his years with the production we miss our guess, and this does not take into account the numerous stock versions, and the stars who played the character before O'Neil took it up. At least 50,000,000 persons must have seen the stage version in the last half century and more. For once the theatrical figures understate instead of transgressing on the other side of the line. This is immaterial, but if you use this play, don't waste space on advertising. Get it over big, but remember that a big title and not cuts is what you need.

Exchange Space Helps Opening

This page of the Columbus, Ind., Republican is 100 per cent. Paramount although Paramount pays for less than half, for the Paramount Week display which was heavily advertised everywhere. The American Theatre took the rest of the six-column drop for its opening announcement and also got a part of the exchange space for its full week's program, which permitted the house space to be thrown entirely to the opening attraction. On the strength of all that space, the extra column was thrown in by the paper for the story of the opening. Getting the opening to harmonize with the Paramount advertising not only gave the house a better start, but it sold the general idea of the season, as well, since it opened with a solid Paramount week, and Paramount was using the "If it's a Paramount Picture it's the best show in town" slogan. We like the layout of the house advertisement. Most advertisers would have shoved that cut over to the left, where it would have carried attention off the space and so would not have hooked as strongly to the type. The general display is a good example of proportion.

Ford Agents Hooked to Paramount Week

Kenneth O. Renaud, Salt Lake Paramounteer, did something better than usual when he hooked the local Ford agency to Paramount week. The company will take an initial payment of as little as $5 toward a Ford, the car not being delivered until a third of the cost has been paid in.

They were more than willing to give a dollar to get an account, so Renaud hooked them to the idea of a widely spread campaign advertising the plan and enclosing a coupon which could be exchanged at the box office of the Paramount-Empress for an initial payment of one dollar toward a Ford account on purchase of a ticket.

One of the side angles was a parade of more than 200 Fords, each driver being given a pair of seats to "Nice People".

Then Renaud hooked a coffee merchant to a conspicuous statement that "Nice People" used a certain brand of bean, got much the same hook-up on wearing apparel and finally talked the street car company into using thirty fender banners without charge. Most persons around Salt Lake knew all about Paramount Week. They couldn't help it.

Nondescript Cut Needs More Title

George Schade, of Sandusky, is one of the best exploiters in the game, but he is wetter than Niagara Falls when it comes to newspaper work, to judge from this sample. He might beter have taken the space for the mere announcement of "Schade Theatre. Motion pictures," for this means less than nothing. In the first place the picture does not look like Anita Stewart and you have to read around to discover that she is to be seen in "The Invisible Fear." It's an invisible title and there is not enough pull in the double six to sell a life preserver to a drowning man. It's our ideal of the absolute not in advertising. Schade gets them so easily he probably does not have to advertise for them, but it is wasting space to throw money away on an announcement like this. And in two sixes it might be supposed he would have room to tell boldly what the current attraction was, even if he only took a line—and just one display line would be a novelty in this advertisement.

Caught the Klan

According to a First National report, the manager of the Rialto theatre, Tulsa, Okla., discovered the secret letter box of the Ku Klux Klan and dropped therein an invitation to the members to see "One Clear Call."

And still, according to the report, the letter was read before the Klan along with the announcement that the letter box had been discovered, which aroused much excitement, which perhaps did the picture some good.

It may be important, if true, but it sounds as though one of the First National correspondents were addicted to dime novels.

A Department for the Information of Exhibitors

Edited by A. Van Buren Powell

Sincere exhibitors are sending these tips to help you book your show. Their reports are printed without fear or favor. If a picture is good, bad or ordinary, you will find it out here. Turn about is fair play; let these exhibitors guide your bookings, and in turn let's hear from you.

American Releasing

CARDIGAN. Gave satisfaction. Actors considered very good and historical setting approved. Patronage; small town. L. C. Ferris, Elivah Theatre, Chinook, Washington.

FIRST WOMAN. One of the best little pictures of the year. It is well directed and well acted, with a clever story, and one of Mildred Harris' best. Patronage; general. William Noble, New Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

F. B. O.

BOY CRAZY. This one went over nicely as a program, bought at a price where we realized a profit. Pleased most every one who saw it; a good many comments. Advertising; lobby. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair only. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre. Russellville, Kentucky.

GAY AND DEVILISH. A good "flapper." Drew fairly good houses. Advertising; regular lobby, one, three, photos, newspapers. Patronage; better class. J. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

IN THE NAME OF THE LAW. You can faithfully recommend this picture to your patrons. Full of human interest, and a good cast coupled with a fine story. Title good, couldn't have been better. The entire police force of Oklahoma City saw the picture and all pronounced it excellent. Large attendance. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

IN THE NAME OF THE LAW. A big cleanup. Proved one of the best money makers of the season. Pleased all classes. Has as much human interest, mingled with heart touching pathos, as "Over the Hill" and "Old Nest." Used extended exploitation, such as cutouts, walking twenty-four sheets, and increased newspaper space. Tied up with police department, interested civic organizations; as a result, played to increased business. If you are looking for an honest to goodness cleanup together with a real picture, book this. Hess & Ray, Metropolitan Theatre, Watertown, South Dakota.

First National

BARNSTORMER. For me, no good. Patronage; first class. Attendance; fair. J. Kendrick, Strand Theatre, Ithaca, New York.

BOB HAMPTON OF PLACER. Very good. Pleased all who saw it. No drawing power. Patronage; country town. Attendance; poor. H. V. Harvey, Palace Theatre, Dixon, California.

CHILD THOU GAVEST ME. One of the best pictures of the year. Little child actor wonderful. This one will please 100 per cent: Advertising; ones, sixes, photos, slides. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; good. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

HAIL THE WOMAN. The action in this excels that seen in three-fourths of the big specials. A fine picture that you need not be afraid to boost. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. A. La Valla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

JACK KNIFE MAN. This comes nearer being a special than "Prodigal Judge" and the rental is fair. Advertising; ones, threes, programs. Patronage; best. Attendance; above average. Royal Theatre, Princeton, West Virginia.

LOVE, HONOR AND BEHAVE. Good picture. Pleased well. Keeps 'em laughing. Advertising: ones, threes and lobby. R. P. Cecil, Dixie Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

THE MASK. Interesting picture. Too dark in many places. Advertising; posters, ones. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

MASTER MIND. Very good picture. Good acting by Barrymore, and will please nearly everybody. Advertising: paper, slide and cards. Patronage: middle class. Attendance: fair. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

NINETEEN AND PHYLLIS. Fine picture if your patronage likes small town stuff. Charles Ray doesn't draw very well for me. Advertising: handbills in addition to regular lobby and billboard. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

NOMADS OF THE NORTH. I have shown a lot of Curwood stories, but this is the best of all. Print in fine condition. You can boost this one. Advertising: ones, three, set 11x14s. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. Chas. F. Johnson, Plaza Theatre, Punta Gorda, Florida.

ONE CLEAR CALL. This is a very good picture. Interesting story, well acted and staged. Advertising: usual. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: fair. J. A. Emory, Star Theatre, Bar Harbor, Maine.

PASSION. It was a wonderful one for those who like that kind of a picture, but our patrons did not care for it. Advertising: slide. photos, three sheets. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. D. D. Purcell, Muse-U Theatre, Cortez, Colorado.

RED HOT ROMANCE. This pleased about 50-50, no more, no less. Put it on Saturday and had a strong short program in addition. Personally, this is a fair program picture, nothing more; should be purchased on that basis. Advertising: usual. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance: good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

ROSARY. A very good picture with a wonderful cast. It is just as good as most of the big specials. There is a little strain of religion all the way through this picture, but not enough to hurt it any. It pleased in our town as well as any picture we have run in months. Advertising: six, three, five ones, slide, newspaper. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre, Skamokawa, Washington.

SALVATION NELL. A very good picture for church people. My people liked it. Advertising: extra cards. Patronage: family. Attendance: good. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

SILENT CALL. You cannot afford to let your audience miss this one. They will talk for weeks after about it. The dog, Strongheart, is wonderful. He is the big star in the picture. We had to hang out the S. R. O. long before opening and turned them away. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

SKIN DEEP. A picture splendidly played, and it delighted large audiences. Florence Vidor, star. Patronage: general. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Fox

BAR NOTHING. This picture pleased Western fans, but they didn't talk about it next day. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

CHASING THE MOON. Not as good as some Tom Mix has made, but it gets them just the same. We had a packed house all the week on it. Advertising: lobby, newspapers, window cards, banner, slides and billboards. Patronage: high class. Attendance: fine. C. R. McCown, Strand Theatre, Nashville, Tennesee.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE. Very good. My patrons all liked it; some of them thought it was great. Patronage: all classes. Attendance: fair. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

IRON TO GOLD. A very ordinary Western. Both of the Farnums may knock 'em dead around the Roarin' Forties, but out here in the sticks they do not raise such a furore. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trags Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

NIGHT HORSEMAN. This picture was nearly seven months old when I ran it, yet I stood them up for it. The house was in continual applause from beginning to end.

Some of them saw this picture twice. M. Oppenheimer, Lafayette Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

PARDON MY NERVE. Just good Western. Pleased my patrons. Buck Jones usually good, but this drew poor. Advertising: newspaper, slide and posters. Patronage: mostly men. Attendance: poor. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

PERJURY. Entirely too long. Eight reels of agony for us. Opinions divided as to whether it was good or bad. Farnum not as good as he was. Patronage: small town. Attendance: very poor. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

ROUGH DIAMOND. Tom Mix is a good drawing card for me. Picture is a good comedy. Advertising: four ones, set 11x14s. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. Chas. F. Johnson, Plaza Theatre, Punta Gorda, Florida.

STAGE ROMANCE. Imagine Bill Farnum in costume play. Better than ether; puts 'em to sleep in first reel. Patrons well pleased with a quiet nap for thirty cents. Advertising: usual lithos and lobby. Patronage: average. Attendance: poor—glad of it! E. L. Wharton, Orpheum Theatre, Glasgow, Montana.

WHAT LOVE WILL DO. Was personally pleased with this melodrama and it was enjoyed by all in attendance. Advertising: ones, three, photos, slide. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

Goldwyn

ALWAYS THE WOMAN. If your word, the prestige of your house, or your reputation for showing good pictures is worth anything, be careful. I spent good money trying to get another picture for second night's showing, but train service was such that I had to go through the agony again, otherwise it surely would have been pulled. Betty Compson produced this herself and in my opinion what she does not know about making pictures for entertainment will fill the big book. We have made inquiry but have yet to find anyone that knew what it was all about, even to the organist, he could it correctly, but when I asked him what he thought about it he replied that he had not been able to follow it and did not know what is was about. A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

ALL'S FAIR IN LOVE. Just a fair comedy; didn't seem to take very well here with our patrons. Drew well on account of Richard being the star. Patronage: all classes. Attendance: good. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

COME ON OVER. A very good little Irish comedy. Pleased everyone. Advertising: slide, photo and three sheet. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. D. L. Purcell, Muse-U Theatre, Cortez, Colorado.

FOR THOSE WE LOVE. A good picture and drew very well. Pleased 100%. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

SNOWBLIND. A truly great picture, as good as any feature. Acting fine; pleased 100%. Advertising: threes, ones and slide. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. D. W. Straver, Monarch Theatre, Mount Joy, Pennsylvania.

WHEN ROMANCE RIDES. This was bought at a fair rental and pleased 100%. A good Western special which an intelligent audience enjoyed. Advertising: twenty-fours, sixes, window cards. Patronage: usual. Attendance: good. Royal Theatre, Princeton, West Virginia.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

"Service" can be just a word or it can stand for that help-the-other-fellow spirit which is the spirit of Straight From the Shoulder.

"Service" means something in our "Regional News and Gossip" columns, too. You can write there for any sort of information you may want—AND GET IT.

Helping the other fellow may look like a thankless job but it pays dividends of good will and helps everybody to cash in on a bond of good fellowship.

Service means more than just reports here. It stands for the good will and help of all of you. In return, whenever you want to get wised up on all the tips that have been sent in on any particular picture—just write or wire and the next mail will bring back the answer. That's part of what Service means to Straight From the Shoulder.—VAN.

Wid Gunning, Inc.

BOOTLEGGERS. For me, absolutely poor. Where do they get this stuff—bootleggers? Patrons expect real bootlegging; a real disappointment. Advertising: six, three, ones, lobby, slide. Patronage: all classes. Attendance: good, but sorry for it. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

MRS. DANE'S CONFESSION. For me, another foreign made piece of junk. Only two fair pictures in the entertainment ten. Most anything will go here on Saturday, but these fell flat. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: poor. Steve Farrer, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

Hodkinson

FREE AIR. A little draggy, but a very good program picture. Good, thrilling finish. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: good. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

GOD'S CRUCIBLE. An excellent picture. Pleased all who saw it. Extra fine scenery. Patronage: rural. Attendance: poor. H. G. Frisbee, Community Theatre, Meredith, New York.

JANE EYRE. This is a good picture, but appeals only to those who have read the story. Title, for me, has no drawing power. Advertising: special exploitation. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: poor for Saturday. W. H. Hufford, Lincoln Theatre, Petersburg, Indiana.

Metro

FIGHTING MAD. This is a dandy. Pleased all. They told me so. It's a picture you can boost. Good lobby display. You can't go wrong on this one. Give us more like it. Wm. Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kan.

FOUR HORSEMEN. September was unseasonably hot and we failed to get more than fair business. The picture pleased. Advertising: special month's campaign. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. H. S. Stansel, Ruleville Theatre, Ruleville, Mississippi.

GLASS HOUSES. Very good, will please all Dana fans. Advertising: one, three sheets, photos, slide. Patronage: family. Attendance: fair. E. T. Dunlap, Dunlap Theatre, Hawarden, Iowa.

I CAN EXPLAIN. It gave satisfaction. Class it as average program. Advertising: usual. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. E. W. Collins, Liberty Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

KISSES. A light little feature that will cause no great favorable comment or adverse criticism. Play it; but bolster up your program with real entertainment, and buy this picture right. Advertising: usual. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance: good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

STROKE OF MIDNIGHT. My opinion, keep away from this one at any price. Fell flat; had to take it off, first day. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: poor. Jake Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

TURN TO THE RIGHT. Opened Labor Day with this feature, and have never shown a picture that pleased our patrons more. 100 per cent. entertainment value. Advertising: newspapers, circulars, window cards. Patronage: average class. Attendance: excellent. Thos. K. Lancaster, Apollo Theatre, Gloucester, New Jersey.

Paramount

DAWN OF THE EAST. This is the best Brady that we have seen in some time. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. Wm. E. Tragsdorf, Trags Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

HEART SPECIALIST. Fine program picture that pleased a Sunday night crowd. Attendance: light, account hot weather and Chautauqua. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre, Jerome, Idaho.

IS MATRIMONY A FAILURE. A corker. Laughs galore. Good cast, and voted a truly excellent feature by all who saw it. Not a special; but get them at the matinee and they'll tell those who didn't see it and be there at night. Advertising: usual. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance. good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

IS MATRIMONY A FAILURE. Fine, Everyone said it was good, except one lady who remarked it was too silly for anything, but you can't suit them all. Play it. Advertising; photos, one sheets and threes. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. Eric Garrett, Richard Theatre, Ahoskie, North Carolina.

THE JUCKLINS. A very good picture in every way. Well developed plot and good settings. Advertising; regular. Majestic Theatre, Willits, California.

LAST PAYMENT. I am afraid if I gave my opinion of it the censorship would cut it out, but if Paramount don't quit shoving foreign stuff on us they will find some of their contracts missing. Advertising; lobby, slide, newspaper. Patronage; better class Attendance; poor. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Oklahoma.

THE MIRACLE MAN. One of the biggest and best pictures we ever showed. Those who saw it said it was good. crowd, no fault of picture. Adver newspaper, photos, posters, telephone. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair second night, poor first night. Kenneth Thompson, High School Movies, Hancock, Wisconsin.

HER HUSBAND'S TRADEMARK. A program picture sold as a special. Gloria Swanson does not shine outside of Cecil DeMille's productions. Advertising, extra, mailing list, programs, etc. Patronage, small town. Attendance, poor. H. S. Stansel, Ruleville Theatre, Ruleville, Mississippi.

IN THE HEART OF A FOOL. If you want to invite censorship, this is a good one. Very suggestive. This is the kind we do not want. Stay away from it. Advertising, heralds, calendar, posters. Patronage, neighborhood. Attendance, poor. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

MANSLAUGHTER. Thomas Meighan and Leatrice Joy. Fine; pleased business at all performances. The picture was well exploited, which brought in good returns. Patronage: general. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

NICE PEOPLE. Hit this one hard. It will please and bring home the bacon. "The Sheik" only picture which ever grossed more here. Story good, and gives them something to think and talk about. No criticisms from anybody. Bebe Daniels is great, and we think, deserves especial praise. J. I. Sims, Reliance Theatre, Orangeburg, South Carolina.

OUR LEADING CITIZEN. A first class picture that will please all classes. Advertising: newspapers and lobby display. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; extra good. Wm. H. Mayhew, Broadway Theatre, Cisco, Texas.

PRINCE THERE WAS. Meighan always a good drawing card and always pleases. I made some money and the picture made some new followers for Meighan. Advertising: regular lobby and newspaper. Patronage: college town. Attendance: good. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

SATURDAY NIGHT. A very good, high class attraction that should please the average theatre-goer. Advertising, posters and papers. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. J. Carbonell, Monroe Theatre, Key West, Florida.

SHAM. Splendid. Good little picture, not too long as most of them are. It will please 95 per cent. Advertising; six one sheets, slide, sidewalk signs, newspaper. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. H. L. Perkins, Dixie Theatre, Bastrop, Texas.

THE SHEIK. Not an extra good story, but wide exploitation made them think it worth while to come and regular price suited them. Oriental garb on billboards kills attendance. Advertising, twice as much as usual. Patronage, general. Attendance, little above average. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT. If you have not played this, do so at once. One of the best bets produced. Advertising, extensive. Patronage, all classes. Attendance, good. Clarence W. Langacher, New Glarus Theatre, New Glarus, Wisconsin.

THREE LIVE GHOSTS. Very good, many favorable comments from patrons. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre, Jerome, Idaho.

TOP OF NEW YORK. Good program picture with liberal amount of comedy Advertising: ones, threes, sixes and photos. Attendance: fair. Myron C. McLeod, Dricia Theatre, Powell River, B. C., ada.

AVELIN' ON. Hart is still one of the drawing cards. Played this picture and did a good business. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. G. K. Nenes, Liberty Theatre, Miami, Arizona.

WOMAN WHO WALKED ALONE. This picture was enjoyed by patrons and a satisfactory business resulted. Advertising; usual. Patronage; health seekers and tourists. Attendance; good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

THE YOUNG DIANA. Very good picture, but seems impossible in the idea. Photography excellent. Advertising: one sheet, insert cards, six sheets. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Daniel Buss, Star Theatre, Tonawanda, New York.

THE YOUNG DIANA. Extravagant production cannot put this star over for us. Picture very ordinary. Can't understand why certain trade papers praise it so enthusiastically. Advertising; program, slides, lobby and handbill. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; poor. W. H. Pike, Majestic Theatre, Las Vegas, Nevada.

THE YOUNG DIANA. The picture seemed to please and caused talk on account of Miss Davies' gowns. Elaborate production. Patronage; general. Attendance; good. Stanley Chambers, Palace Theatre, Wichita, Kansas.

Saying It Straight

Do you book on the "Partial Picture" plan? Meaning—buy a complete picture, only to find it partly a picture and partly a vacuum. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall Theatre, Old Lyme, Connecticut, puts it all in a nutshell here.

"MADE IN HEAVEN (Goldwyn) was good comedy drama but film was in such poor shape that it lost interest. This is a job for Will Hays to see that it is embodied in contracts that the distributor must guarantee condition of films, and not put all the guarantees on the exhibitor."

Selznick

CHIVALROUS CHARLIE. Not much to this one. O'Brien good, but story light. Their "News" saved the day. Advertising: threes, ones, 11x14. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

LOVE'S MASQUERADE. Just a fair program picture. Will please. Would not boost too strongly though. Advertising: newspaper, slide, posters, photos. Patronage: general. Attendance: fair. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

OUT OF THE SNOWS. Northern picture that pleased about 75 per cent. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

PROPHET'S PARADISE. A fair picture; but not up to the usual O'Brien standard. Advertising: ones and insert cards. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Bert Jackson, Star Theatre, Tonawanda, New York.

WHY ANNOUNCE YOUR MARRIAGE? Pleased our audience very much. Advertising: twenty-fours, photos, slide, newspapers. Patronage: high and middle class. Attendance: good. J. Kenrick, Strand Theatre, Ithaca, New York.

United Artists

DISRAELI. If you show high class pictures, don't fail to give your patrons this one and they will thank you for it. George Arliss is the greatest dramatic actor on the screen today. If you played Arliss in "The Devil," this is still better. Book it if you can buy it right and you will not regret it. It is a picture that will stand a raise and you will draw the best class in town. We had reports that this was too heavy, but such was not the case. Those from all walks of life saw it and praised it. More pictures like this and at prices that exhibitors can afford to pay, and there will be no such thing as hard times for exhibitors. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

THE LOVE LIGHT. Wonderful drama, well liked by all. One of Pickford's best; at least my patrons thought so. Advertising; newspapers and posters. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fine. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

Universal

ACROSS THE DEAD LINE. Like all Universal programs, got over very nicely. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. Leslie Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City. California.

BLACK BAG. This one did not take here; not in it with "Scrapper," a former release of Rawlinson's. Advertising: three, one and slide. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

FOOLISH WIVES. Wonderful production: not a kick at either the play or price. Rental too high. Lost money. Advertising: usual bill board, double space; mailing list. Patronage: average. Attendance: fair. E. L. Wharton, Orpheum Theatre, Glasgow, Montana.

FOOLISH WIVES. Play it at regular prices and clean up. They will be disappointed if you raise admission. Advertising: a little of everything. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

LOADED DICE. One of Gibson's best. Full of pep and action. The two hoboes are a riot. Patronage: small town. Attendance: usual. Marsden and Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

MARRIED FLAPPER. Marie Prevost's feature went over splendidly and pleased a big business. Good exploitation, window cards and attractive lobby did the business, and with good results. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

REPUTATION. Good crowd, but sorry for it. certainly was a disappointment; action good but nothing to the plot. Advertising: ones, six threes, cards, heralds, papers, slide. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

THE STORM. With House Peters. Matt Moore and Virginia Valli, very few pictures surpass "The Storm" either in cast, plot, direction, photography or continuity. Characters deserve much credit for the excellent work they did and the direction seemed to get every scene to perfection. Some of my patrons stated this was better than "Way Down East," and I'll venture to say it suited everyone that viewed it. I cheerfully recommend that it be used in every theatre that wants one of the best features made. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

SURE FIRE. Good program picture. Pleased all who saw it. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. Leslie Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, California.

THREE UNIVERSALS. "Millionaires," "Scrapper," "Cheated Hearts." Each one of these Rawlinson pictures met with approval by all. I am still to play my first bad Universal picture. Patronage: transient. Attendance: good. M. Oppenheimer, Lafayette Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

THE TRAP. A little too heavy for average audiences, although Chaney's character work is excellent. Advertising: splash. Patronage. small town. Attendance: fair. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

WONDERFUL WIFE. A good picture: will bring crowd. A. R. Workman, Coliseum Theatre, Marseilles, Illinois.

Vitagraph

COURAGE OF MARGE O'DOON. A picture that the Family Theatre would rate as extra good. Advertising: newspaper, slide and posters. Arthur G. Pearson, Family Theatre, Melrose, Massachusetts.

Comedies

EDGAR'S LITTLE SAW (Goldwyn). Here is another two-reel Edgar comedy starring Johnny Jones which is only good for children and women. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fellsburgh, New York.

HIS NEW JOB (Chaplin-Essanay). This, as others of these re-issues, averages better than some of the much advertised new ones. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, De-Queen, Arkansas.

Finds Truth Here

"Send us some blanks for Straight From the Shoulder talks. We have noticed these and get more real truth than from all others combined." John D. Jones, Crystal Theatre, San Angelo, Texas.

Mr. Jones knows that MORE REPORTS MEAN BETTER BOOKINGS.

KICK IN HIGH LIFE (First Natl.). One of the best slapsticks. Kept Saturday audience in a roar. Attendance: good. J. A. Flournoy, Criterion Theatre, Macon, Georgia.

LITTLE, BUT OH MY (Pathe). A comedy without a laugh. Nuf sed. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

Short Subjects

MOVIE CHATS (Urban). Have never seen a Movie Chat yet which lacked interest. They are a wonderful argument for the educational value of photoplay. Would like to see more houses using them. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

PATHE NEWS NO. 62. A good news reel. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mount Joy, Pennsylvania.

State Rights

BURN 'EM UP BARNES (C. C. Burr). For us, one of the worst pictures we ever played, from a box-office standpoint. Picture seems over-rated. No better than two reel comedies we get from other sources with the same star. John D. Jones, Lyric Theatre, San Angelo, Texas.

BROKEN SPUR (Arrow). For me, five reels of junk. Absolutely poor. Could have been made in one reel and that would have been too much. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mount Joy, Pennsylvania.

GOLD GRABBERS (Standard). Very good program picture. some night scenes too dark. We ran it two days, second day off. If you run it, put a good two-reel comedy with it. Wm. Thacher Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

I AM THE LAW (C. C. Burr). The most over-rated picture that I have had the misfortune to run. With the exception of the cast, there is, to me, no evidence of any money being spent on the production. Inferior to any Curwood story ever produced. Advertising: newspaper, heralds, twenty-fours, sixes, threes, ones, lobby. Patronage: small town, county seat. Attendance: poor. Emmet Nolan, Star Theatre, Yates Center, Kansas.

Consensus of Published Reviews

Broadway Rose

(Mae Murray—Metro—7,227 feet)

M. P. W.—Metro special typically Mae Murray and will please patrons with an eye for the beautiful.

T. R.—Featuring Mae Murray, lives up to all expectations as far as dazzling and bizarre sets are concerned.

F. D.—Is likely to please.

N.—In this, her most elaborately mounted starring vehicle to date, the star's terpsichorean exhibitions are the real feature of the picture and they are given in settings of exquisite beauty and charm.

E. H.—Beautifully produced and well acted.

Confidence

(Herbert Rawlinson—Universal—4,787 feet)

M. P. W.—One of the most acceptable pictures which has starred Herbert Rawlinson. . . . The novelty of theme is only one of the several angles of interest.

N.—There are some bright moments. But you'll have to accept it as burlesque because of the rural hokum.

T. R.—There is a fairly good moral that predominates in the picture, and the story is pleasantly told and could be considered as good entertainment without any extraordinary excitement or climax.

F. D.—May please the star's admirers and appeal especially to those who like "hick" comedy stuff.

E. H.—Will undoubtedly take its place at the top notch with some of the most pleasing pictures in which this star has appeared.

The Eternal Flame

(Norma Talmadge—First National—7,453 feet)

M. P. W.—If you have a "lemon" house on your hands and want to turn it into a gold mine, don't overlook Norma Talmadge's masterpiece production, "The Eternal Flame."

N.—"Smilin' Through" was a splendid picture. "The Eternal Flame" is a better one.

E. H.—A film that will live long in the memory of Talmadge fans.

T. R.—When an eight-reel picture runs its entire course without once losing its grip on the spectators, surely no more significant proof of a film's entertainment values can be required.

F. D.—Norma Talmadge's latest release is a very fine picture and, excluding "Smilin' Through," is the best of all her recent productions.

The Ghost Breaker

(Wallace Reid—Paramount—5,130 feet)

M. P. W.—While it lacks the pep of some of his previous comedies, it will provide good entertainment for the masses.

F. D.—Fair film entertainment.

N.—While Wallace Reid has his work cut out for him he takes it so easy as to make it appear almost farcical at times.

T. R.—A delicious story adapted from the stage play of the same name but with far more comedy brought into the screen version.

E. H.—Ably aided by Walter Heirs and Lila Lee, Wallace Reid fails to make "The Ghost Breaker" a picture which will add much lustre to his crown of stardom.

The Isle of Doubt

(Wyndham Standing—Playgoers—5,483 feet)

M. P. W.—Decidedly entertaining treatment of wife-taming theme in Playgoer's Picture.

E. H.—Interestingly told and well acted.

T. R.—Abundance of thrills, colorful atmosphere and a romantic love story combine to make "The Isle of Doubt" a picture which is likely to please the great majority of movie patrons.

N.—The picture combines the appeal of a society drama with the lure and adventure of the South Sea isles.

F. D.—May pull big in certain districts where they are not critical.

Missing Millions

(Alice Brady—Paramount—5,870 feet)

M. P. W.—As a crook drama, "Missing Millions" strikes the popular note. It is a long time unravelling and provokes much suspense.

F. D.—Interesting "Boston Blackie" story.

N.—Here is a clever crook story for you!

E. H.—Is better than the average crook story and should give general satisfaction.

T. R.—A good crook story with a steady flow of new and exciting interests.

Why Do Men Marry?

(Unity—5,000 feet)

M. P. W.—Luxurious settings and a story that displays some effective intrigue, keep the spectator interested.

E. H.—A much better attraction than many of the foreign productions recently shown in this country.

N.—A strictly continental flavor. . . . Highly involved plot.

F. D.—Way below the standard of our own films and so obviously continental that it wont fool anyone.

T. R.—There is good entertainment in Unity's "Why Do Men Marry?"

Youth Must Have Love

(Shirley Mason—Fox—4,368 feet)

M. P. W.—The picture has an average amount of action and more than average suspense.

F. D.—A threadbare plot. . . . But for those who like the star it will probably suffice.

N.—The picture, once the characters are introduced, follows a conventional groove, with the climax anticipated from the start.

T. R.—There is hardly anything new about the story.

E. H.—It is several points short of being a big, interesting feature.

"One Exciting Night"

Griffith Scores With Thrilling Detective Drama That Should Appeal to All Classes of Patrons.

Reviewed by C. M. Inman

David W. Griffith's new screen thriller, "One Exciting Night," is a picture that in every way lives up to its name. To the legion of film fans who have followed the Griffith flag in the past, his new offering will appear much of a radical departure from the beaten paths, but even they will have to admit that he has achieved the seeming impossible in producing a picture that combines the elements of love, mystery, burlesque and melodrama, and woven a story that is as full of thrills as a cocoanut is of meat.

It has an appeal for virtually every class of theatre-goer, for it contains all the elements that go to make up a complete whole. While it is not a spectacular film, like "Intolerance," nor a historical production, like "Orphans of the Storm," he has shown that he is able to construct a thrilling detective drama with the same skill as a historical narrative, and, at the same time, present an entertainment that is thoroughly Griffithesque. To do this properly, however, there must be at least one big scene that will leave its impress upon the audience. In "One Exciting Night" it is the storm scene, one of the most realistic tempests ever simulated upon stage or screen. His inspiration came from the terrific hurricane that struck the vicinity of New York last summer. The photography in this scene is superb. Flying branches and streaming rain fill the air, huge trees are uprooted, and the howl of the wind and the concussion of the thunderbolts is given with a graphic intensity that causes the most hardened theatregoer to gasp with excitement. It gives opportunity for some of the most thrilling moments of the story, as well, when the heroine, in pursuit of the mysterious villain, plunges through the confusion and is herself rescued from beneath a fallen tree-trunk by the hero.

Carol Dempster, who appeared in "Dream Street," heads the cast, with Henry Hull, who gave a fine performance. Miss Dempster does some remarkable work, and her agility in the storm scene is little short of amazing. Porter Strong, as a colored servant, supplied much of the laughter, with Irma Harrison seconding his efforts most convincingly. Morgan Wallace, as an elderly scoundrel, and C. H. Crocker-King, as the mysterious stranger, did some fine dramatic work, and the rest of the players are well cast. The photography and stage effect are of the highest order.

The Story

The scene of the story is laid in a country house in Baltimore. A prologue takes the audience back to Africa, where are shown certain episodes that explain the rest of the story. Agnes Harrington, a modern girl, is the guest of John Fairfax, a young Southern gentleman. She is chaperoned by her supposed mother, and her fiance, J. Wilson Rockmaine, Aunty Fairfax acts as hostess, and numerous other guests who were not invited, appear at most inopportune times. A huge sum of money has been hidden in the house by departing bootleggers, and the plot centres around this money and the attempts of sundry persons to obtain possession of it. Two murders are committed and everyone is suspected. The climax comes when the heroine leads the chase after a criminal, straight into the heart of the hurricane, where, after thrilling experiences, the villain is discovered to be the heroine's fiance. The heroine turns for consolation to young Fairfax, and the story ends with the wedding of the couple.

Exploitation Angles: Play on Griffith and follow up with his cast and then the production, selling all three points. The story will lend itself to one of the various hidden treasure stunts for exploitation.

"The Face in the Fog"

Absorbing Entertainment Found in Paramount Crook Drama Starring Lionel Barrymore

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Atmospherically, "The Face in the Fog" is one of the most successful mystery dramas that has ever been shown. It is intensely interesting. The photography, the protracted suspense and technical skill of the director combine in securing an effect of obscurity that is varied with just enough flashes of enlightenment to be tantalizing.

The story was originally one of the Boston Blackie series by Jack Boyle. A reformed crook who has not lost his love of adventure is the hero, played by Lionel Barrymore. He is a fascinating character, combining his Sherlock Holmes gifts with some very human, everyday traits, expressed, for instance, in a love for his wife that is stronger than all other emotions. The star, as usual, has a magnetism and mental poise that is a forceful factor in the performance.

In taking note of the cast, there will be found an unusual number of names that should be significant in exploitation. Louis Wolheim, as leader of the revolutionists in "The Face in the Fog," seems exactly the type and the actor for his sensational role. Lowell Sherman, Gustav Von Seyffertitz, Seena Owen, Mary MacLaren and George Nash are others whose clarity in characterization adds greatly to the appeal.

The story is a fascinating revelation of how a reformed crook beats a master of his old game, and saves the royal jewels of Russia. That part of the picture which is confined to his activities is absorbing in its adroit turns and surprises. The latter part, where time goes backward and the scenes move to Russia, are not in the spirit nor up to the standard of the body of the story. From a mood of mystery, the picture changes to a more or less obvious and unconvincing treatment of the Russian upheaval. This part could be shortened if not entirely eliminated.

The photography is so important a part in the attractiveness of the production that it warrants enthusiastic praise.

The Cast

Boston Blackie Dawson....Lionel Barrymore
Grand Duchess Tatlana.....Seena Owen
Count Orloff.....Lowell Sherman
Huck Kant.....George Nash
Petrus.....Louis Wolheim
Mary Dawson.....Mary MacLaren
Count Ivan.....Macey Harlam
Michael.....Gustav Von Seyffertitz
Detective Wren.....Joe King
Surtep.....Tom Blake
Olga.....Marie Burke
Police Captain.....Joseph Smiley
Ivan's Valet.....Martin Faust

Adapted from the Story by Jack Boyle.
Scenario by Jack Boyle and John Lynch.
Direction by Alan Crosland.
Length, 5,569 Feet.

The Story

Dawson had long been a crook. He never paid a night call on a neighbor without carrying his kit along. It was a woman who reformed him. But he wasn't washed altogether clean of his shady old trade.

The time came when Blackie put all this knowledge to good use. The story shows how Blackie "comes back"—not to aid his old fellow-crooks, but to help the Grand Duchess Tatiana of Russia, who has been pursued from the land of Bolsheviks by a gang of thieves and murderers hunting the crown jewels. He emerges from some dangerous complications without harm and more honest than ever.

"The Bond Boy"

Superb Acting by Richard Barthelmess Characterizes His Fourth Feature for First National

Reviewed by C. S Sewell

Richard Barthelmess in "The Bond Boy," his newest picture for First National release, has a production that is strongly suggestive of his first starring vehicle, "Tol'able David." Both have the same type of characters and the stories deal with struggles against almost overwhelming poverty on the part of certain poor white folks in a Southern state.

In this picture, Barthelmess again scores a great personal hit and does some exceedingly fine work. Cast in the title role, as a boy who, because of the extreme poverty of his widowed mother, is bonded out until he becomes of age, to an exceedingly cruel man, the star has an opportunity to do what is probably the best acting of his career. He rises fully to the occasion and his magnificent work elicits your sympathy and holds your attention throughout. You suffer with him the hardships he undergoes. It is a vivid, forceful story, rich in human interest, though in a somewhat depressing vein, dealing throughout with the unmerited hardships that the hero undergoes, until the final happy ending occurs. The only thing that lightens the effect of the gloomy story is a pretty romance, as the girl who is way above him in the social strata sticks to him through thick and thin. There is no attempt at comedy relief except in one scene in the courtroom and it hardly seems in keeping with the occasion.

In the big scene where the bond boy is in his cell awaiting execution for a murder he did not commit, sees on the wall the swinging shadow of the rope on the scaffolding, Barthelmess does some of the finest acting ever seen on the screen. His work is very real and though he almost goes insane he does not overact or indulge in mock heroics. Excellent, too, are the scenes where he is chased across country by the bloodhounds, and his utter dejection when he is captured again.

Supporting the star is a thoroughly competent cast. Charles Hill Mailes makes the "heavy" role particularly despicable; Mary Thurman is convincing as the frivolous wife of the villain and Virginia Magee is sweet and attractive as the girl who loves the bond boy.

Second only to the star in the race for acting honors is Mary Alden, who as the bond boy's mother, contributes a striking characterization. Especially fine is her scene with the boy when he tells her he has a new job and she has to inform him that he has already been bonded to their worst enemy.

Except for a couple of instances where the action is not entirely convincing, the production has been well directed, Henry King having shown particular skill in the selection and handling of the types, and in bringing out with full force the strongly dramatic points in the story.

"The Bond Boy" is a fitting companion picture for "Tol'able David."

The Cast

Joe Newbolt.....Richard Barthelmess

Cyrus Morgan.....Ned Sparks
Colonel Price.....Lawrence D'Orsey
Lawyer Hammer.....Robert Williamson
District Attorney.....Leslie King

Alice Price.....Virginia Magee
Mrs. Newbolt.....Mary Alden
Ollie Chase.....Mary Thurman

Story by G. W. Ogden.
Scenario by Charles Whitaker.
Directed by Henry King.
Length, 6,902 Feet.

The Story

Upon the death of her husband, Mrs. Newbolt finds herself intensely poor, her farm is seized by Isom Chase, and she still owes him money for the small house he lets her occupy. Finally, to square the debt, Chase persuades her to bond her son, Joe, to him. Chase mistreats Joe, and Joe once threatens to kill him. Chase has a frivolous wife, Ollie, whom he also mistreats. Sparks, a book agent, persuades Ollie to run away with him. While Joe is trying to point out to her the consequences, Chase comes on the scene, a quarrel ensues, and Chase accidentally kills himself in getting his gun. Joe is accused and convicted, but makes his escape and goes to Mrs. Chase. She finally tells the truth, and Joe is exonerated. He wins the love of Alice Price, who has stood by him all through his trouble.

"Impulse"

Arrow Presents Neva Gerber in Ben Wilson Production of Average Appeal

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Keeping in mind the attractive material surroundings with which "Impulse" has been invested, and one or two compelling dramatic scenes, including the train wreck, the production can be said to have average appeal. It probably will not satisfy all types of audiences. The theme is not one that will appeal to everyone, the action is not always convincing and the cast has been directed so as to give a melodramatic performance that is not altogether in accord with modern standards.

Neva Gerber, as the star, gives a sincere interpretation of the girl who travelling under false pretenses, finds herself in a house of malicious plottings and brings about justice. She is inclined to overemphasize the seriousness of the situations, but this appears to be through no personal fault, but rather indicative of the mood of the whole picture. Douglas Gerrard barely escapes an effect of burlesque as the sleek villain who laughs after his own misdeeds. One of the most charming members of the cast is Miss Grey, who makes one wish that her part was more pretentious. The interiors have been attractively equipped and arranged.

The Cast

Julia Merrifield.....Neva Gerber
Robert Addis.....Jack Dougherty
Virginia Howard.....Goldie Madden
David Usher.....Douglas Gerrard
Count Sansone.....Ashton Dearholt
Mrs. Cameron.....Helen Gilmore
Felicia.....Miss Grey

Adapted from the Story, "Her Unknown Knight," by Maude Woodruff Newells.
Scenario by J. Grubb Alexander.
Direction by Norval McGregor.
Length, 4,505 Feet.

The Story

It tells the story of the ill-starred romance of Julia Merrifield, who poses for two weeks at an exclusive summer resort as a society butterfly. She wins a sincere friend in Robert Addis.

After her return to the dull routine of her drab existence, Fate intervenes and sends a strange sequence of unusual happenings. Julia finds herself involved in a train of events which border on the tragic. She is almost enmeshed in the clutches of a criminal band and escapes in the very nick of time, to find the man of her heart and a brilliant future awaiting.

In "Lorna Doone," a First National production, Maurice Tourneur has taken one of the classics of literature and produced a wonderful picture, ranking with his best efforts. It is deserving of place in the front rank of the year's pictures.

"Lorna Doone"

First National Production of Famous Love Story a Masterful Production

Reviewed by M. A. Malany

An old English love story, not so familiar to the present generation, yet still a standard "book-seller" is "Lorna Doone." Now done in pictures, by Maurice Tourneur, it is our guess that the book will enjoy a revival.

Why? Because Mr. Tourneur has made a wonderful picture of this story—ranking with his best previous efforts. It is made so smoothly, so realistic, that like a book which holds you into the wee small hours, the picture will keep you interested to the very end. Only in one or two places does it fall down. The rescue of Lorna from an impossible wedding appears to be an improbable feat for the hero, John Ridd, while the battle of the yeomen and the Doones, is so fast and furious, it is difficult to follow. Nothwithstanding, the production is worthy of praise and a place in the front rank of this year's pictures.

The christening of the king's baby is about as big a scene as has ever been shown on American screens. This event contains a mixture of drama and comedy, which makes it all the more attractive. The outdoor settings are accurate and striking.

Madge Bellamy, who is climbing higher and higher, takes another step upward in "Lorna Doone." She and John Bowers give a living realism to the two heroic parts.

The Cast

Lorna Doone.....Madge Bellamy
John Ridd.....John Bowers
Sir Charles Ensor.....Frank Keenan
Counsellor Doone.....Jack MacDonald
Carver Doone.....Donald MacDonald
Ruth.....Norris Johnson

Adapted from Novel by R. D. Blackmore.
Scenario by Maurice Tourneur.
Directed by Maurice Tourneur.
Length, 6,083 Feet.

The Story

Lorna Doone is adopted by Sir Charles Ensor, leader of the notorious Doone's, who treats her kindly. She and John Ridd have been friends since childhood, and John promises to help her if she is ever in trouble. When Sir Charles dies, Carver Doone tries to force her to marry him, but John rescues her.

Lorna is taken to court, John follows, and at the baptism of the king's baby saves its life from anarchists. He is hailed as a hero, but returns home. Lorna renounces her station and comes home to marry him. At the wedding a Doone shoots Lorna, and John, together with the townsfolk, in a fierce battle annihilate the remaining Doones. Returning home, he is amazed to find that Lorna, whom he thought had been killed, will live.

"Playthings of an Emperor"

A Story of the Napoleonic Period That Is an Historic Treat—A Jesse Levinson Production

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

These are seemingly times when the fickle public demands drama-spectacles dealing with bygone days that ever inspire the adventurous writer to dabble into history for some romantic theme to satisfy an appetite for the colorful wooings of men and women long gone into the Unknown Land. The revival of interest in the costume production of massive settings, with historic backgrounds, and with heroic and ardent woocrs of other days as the characters, has resulted in the issuance of many such features. The independent market has from time to time offered some spectacles imported from foreign studios, but because of a public disintcrest they have quietly backed out of the limelight.

With interest in such pictures revived, however, and with program companies turning them out for public exhibition, the independent market should welcome the release of this Jesse A. Levinson production, "Playthings of An Emperor," for it is good entertainment deserving of the patronage of theatregoers who delight in seeing a heart-interest episode from history enacted on the screen in such an inoffensively wholesome way that one regrets only the fact that not all the famous romances have been reproduced in picture form.

"Playthings of An Emperor" as a production is picturesque and beautifully magnetic, for it has the charm of Napoleonic days with no attempt made at exaggeration to baffle the memory of the onlooker. The characters are picked from an incident with which even a school child who has studied foreign history is well acquainted. The story is interestingly told. There are numerous massive sets wherein appear many hundred persons who are well handled by a seemingly careful director who at no time lost sight of the fact that it was entertainment for a fastidious public that he was making. Though foreign-made, "The Playthings of An Emperor" is far superior in American entertainment value to any similar picture brought here from the other side.

The acting of a thoroughly capable cast is minus the characteristic foreign work typical of the average imported picture. This one was carefully produced for international entertainment and in this effort the director succeeded admirably. At the right price this picture should prove a good money-maker, for it treats a historic adventure of Napoleon in such fashion as to prove worthwhile and commendable entertainment for the "hardest-boiled eggs." Scenically, it is a gem, but what is most impressive to this writer is the smoothness and consistency. It is an unusually splendid foreign picture replete with a good box office entertainment value.

The Cast

Napoleon.....Rodolph Lettinger
Countess Walewska.....Marjorie Verlaine
Count Walewska.....Henry Keyes
Count d'Evians.....Anthony Lannister
Duroc.....Charles Magnes

Story Suggested by John Natteford.
Directed by Arthur Rippert.
Length, 5,600 Feet.

The Story

Married to the aged Count Walewska, after giving her girlish affections to young d'Evians, Marie Walewska meets Napoleon. She innocently arouses his admiration. The emperor becomes jealous of the young soldier, sentencing him to exile. He escapes, however, and comes to the aid of Marie when the emperor, upbraided and ignored by the girl who has fascinated him, threatens to invade her homeland. D'Evians is captured and sentenced to be shot, but, after listening to Marie's earnest plea that she loves the young soldier, Napoleon pardons him. This move on the part of the emperor effects a change in the young woman. Though she has now fallen really in love with him, Marie refuses to pardon his offences against her will until Napoleon drops the role of the dominating, arrogant emperor and offers her the heart of a humble and worshipping man, minus the imperial camouflage.

Exploitation Angles: Play on the colorful story and bang away on Napoleon. Get their interest in the period and make a special appeal to the literary set through their clubs, if possible, or directly through your advertisements. Tell that the masses will be interested in the vivid story and the classes by the historical charm. But find some other name for the masses.

"The Lone Hand"

Picturesque and Thrilling Flood Scenes in Universal Feature for Ed (Hoot) Gibson

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

The flood scenes in this Universal production furnish picturesquely dramatic climax. They help to clinch the impression that the picture is one of Ed (Hoot) Gibson's best and destined to enjoy success.

In furnishing the suspense, the author has hit upon the novel idea of trapping the hero in the mine guarded by a water mill. There are some thrilling shots of the rushing waters and the collapse of the old house. Hoot Gibson has an exceptionally active role that is well suited to his unsophisticated style of performing. A light vein of humor runs through the scenes and relieves the melodramatic pressure. Marjorie Daw is wonderfully appealing and is one of the greatest attractions of the picture.

The star is cast as a cowpuncher on his vacation. He doesn't get much of a vacation, as the popular resort and the bathing girls have no attraction for him after he meets the miner's daughter and in protecting her he leads a strenuous life. In securing the final punch, that of demolishing the cabin with a rolling rock, the perspective seems imperfect, but the scene is nevertheless effective and brings the suspense to a sharp climax.

Story by Ralph Cummins.
Scenario by A. P. Younger.
Direction by Reaves Eason.
Length, 457 Feet.

The Story

The story concerns a young cowpuncher, born and bred on the ranch and never ten miles away from it. He decides that he needs a rest and chooses an exclusive summer resort for his vacation. Before his vacation is a day old, however, he comes upon a girl in trouble, and, upon investigating, finds that she is all alone and badly in need of protection from crooks. The young cattleman tries to do the right thing, but the girl is suspicious of him, and when her father returns he, too, orders the newcomer off the place.

But in spite of themselves, the vacationing cowboy helps them, wins the girl and turns his first vacation into a honeymoon.

Evidently New York has not outgrown "The Old Homestead" habit, for the rejuvenated play is doing well at the Capitol Theatre and the sophisticated Broadway patrons are responding to the appeal of the old name and finding new thrills in the wonderful storm scenes. That seems to be the most talked about point in a production offering so many high lights. Of course, Theodore Roberts' fine performance is given full meed of praise, and T. Roy Barnes has scored an unusual personal success in the part of Happy Jack, because he makes him so human. One thing they miss is the hollow cough which Lew Bloom mastered in the old days. They can't put that on the films, but they have offered so much that is new this can well be overlooked. There is just one verdict from New York's unofficial critics and that is "better than the play."—E. W. S.

"The Power of Love"

Stereoscopic Effect Achieved in Perfect Picture's Presentation of Dramatic Story.

Reviewed by W. E. Keefe

This six-reel drama "The Power of Love" which was recently given a preview in Los Angeles, serves to introduce a new method of photography and presentation by which the characters and scenes as shown on the screen are shown in stereoscopic relief.

The picture has been well produced and the story has good continuity. The cast includes Barbara Bedford, Eliott Sparling, Albert Prisco and Noah Beery, all of whom do good work.

While pictures filmed by this process can be projected on standard machines it is necessary for the spectator to wear spectacles equipped with one red and one blue lens.

This production is distributed by Perfect Pictures which controls the process, which is described in another article on page 660 of this issue.

Length, Five Reels.

The Story

Because of financial reverses Don Almeda offers his daughter, Maria, to Don Alvarez, though she does not love him. Terry O'Neill arrives at the Southern California settlement in which the Almedas live, and is slightly wounded when Alvarez's henchmen seek to rob him. He is found by Maria, to whom he loses his heart.

Just before the wedding, O'Neill waylays Alvarez, who is to appear at a fiesta in a mask, and takes his place at a fiesta. Alvarez appears and denounces him. Later, Alvarez, while attempting to steal pearls from the mission, slays the padre with O'Neill's knife. Denouncing O'Neill as the murderer, Alvarez tries to shoot him, but wounds Maria, who throws herself in front of him. Later, she succeeds in proving that Alvarez is the thief and murderer, and everything ends happily for Maria and O'Neill.

"Thundering Hoofs"

Anchor Film Feature Pleases as Result of Work of Star, Peggy O'Day

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

As a second feature on a double bill this New Era production should prove a good investment. As a topnotcher, however, its ability to hold up is doubtful, for the services of a capable cast have been wasted on a poor story. The one redeeming feature of the picture is the stellar work of Miss Peggy O'Day, who is rightfully starred. Had it not been for the horsewomanship and clever acting in this picture, together with the work of Francis Ford, "Thundering Hoofs" would have fallen flat. Miss O'Day runs away with the picture just as she does with the horse race, which would have been one of the best flashed on the silver sheet had not the director or photographer been so generous with the closeups. Long shots would have increased the value of this scene considerably, for Miss O'Day demonstrated her ability to handle the reins; only she should remember that good jockeys never look behind. But that is pardonable, for her work is brilliant and it's a shame that she should have been wasted on such an illogical story, whose only one aim is to effect a December-May marriage, and reverse the moral gained from the historic courtship of Miles Standish.

The only assets in the picture are Miss O'Day and the race, for the story is far from smooth and replete with hokum that is used by stage directors only in moments of utter despondency. Francis Ford, as Jimmy, the "Miles Standish," who subdues youth in this instance, does good work, though his role is not at all clear and is inconsistent with the entire tone of the story and particularly the environments established at its introduction. Harry Kelly, as Bill, is completely successful in a comedy role.

The Cast

The Story

"Thundering Hoofs" is the story of a plucky girl who rides a 100 to 1 shot entry in a handicap in order to win money for friends and the love of her benefactor.

"The Proof of Innocence"

Louise Du Pre as Artist's Model in American Releasing Corporation Subject

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

There is too little suspense in "The Proof of Innocence" to stimulate the desired amount of interest. The story unfolds in simple style without complications, or at least without complications that seem difficult or uncertain. Rather in the dramatic construction than in the material itself, the fault lies, as similar themes have before proven adaptable to popular taste.

Greenwich Village supplies the atmosphere for the first part of the action. Here the heroine of the story, an artist's model, played by Louise Du Pre, is introduced. A promising love affair between the painter and herself is interrupted by her first rival, a wealthy patroness of the arts who takes a passing interest in the artist. This part of the story has been handled without sufficient skill in getting the sympathy for the heroine. This lack of real emotional quality is apparent at other times, too, in the performance. Louise Du Pre, in the featured role, is a pretty type, expressive of a popular ideal in feminine beauty.

The Cast

Story and Scenario by Chas. G. Rich.
Direction by Roy Mitchell and John A. Martin.
Length, 4,800 Feet.

The Story

John Courtney rescues Mignon, a waif; is struck with her beauty, and persuades her to pose for him. Courtney becomes an idol of the smart set, and he becomes involved in debt seeking to keep up the fast pace of his new associations. A commission to duplicate his masterpiece for Stanley Page, a millionaire, is accepted, and Mignon goes to live at the millionaire's residence, but Courtney neglects duty for pleasure, and when the millionaire is found dead, his safe robbed and Courtney missing, this crime is fastened on him. Mignon clears the murder mystery and brings happiness to many.

"Calvert's Valley"

John Gilbert Gives a Fine Performance in Sombre Production Released by Fox

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

John Gilbert's presence is a refreshing antidote for the somewhat depressing effect of most of "Calvert's Valley." Stories in which the hero labors under the impression that he has committed a crime and in which his exoneration is postponed until the end, where it serves as the climax, have lost much of their emotional appeal. Unless the treatment of such familiar material is novel, the entertainment value is more or less of an uncertainty.

In "Calvert's Valley," there is considerable effort to create a mystery regarding the death of a man who was pushed off a high cliff. It is upon this suspense that the pictures relies, in maintaining the interest, and it proves a frail support. The identity of the criminal and hence the denouement of the story is apparent at once to the average mind.

To John Gilbert goes more than ordinary praise. He has dignified both his role and the entire story by his fine, sincere performance. Those who have admired him for excellent work in the past will recognize the test of his ability here and will appreciate him doubly. Philo McCullough accomplishes an effective change in characterization in playing the two brothers. Many of the interiors are elaborate and give the production an effect of richness.

Length, 4416 Feet.

The Story

A brilliant lawyer, Emlyn, becomes involved in a quarrel with James Calvert, another attorney. Calvert is killed a few minutes after leaving Emlyn and the latter, through an unusual set of circumstances, is led to believe that he has committed the murder.

Only one individual knows the manner in which Calvert met his death, but Emlyn is tormented by his conscience. He lavishes money and every possible attention on Calvert's mother and brother, but his moral sufferings are increased by the fact that he finds he has fallen in love with the former sweetheart of the slain attorney.

How the mystery is finally cleared up comprises the rest of the story.

"Pathe Review No. 178"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

A subject of unusual interest is the section in this reel, titled "The Poetry of Motion." It is beautifully photographed and the striking nature scenes of woods and water are enhanced by a female figure in draperies. The effect is to produce a series of pictures that resemble paintings by celebrated artists. Lovers of the beautiful and camera fans will glory in this. Another very interesting section illustrated the cause of volcanoes, while still another shows how an actor makes up as a villain. The reel closes with a color section showing Avignon, France, at one time the residence of the Popes.

In First National's "The Bond Boy," Richard Barthelmess performs some of the finest acting ever seen on the screen and adds to his already fine reputation as an actor. The theme is intensely dramatic and the excellent work of the whole cast holds the attention throughout.

This is a fitting companion picture to Barthelmess' "Tol'able David" and like it the action is laid among the poor white folks of a Southern state.—C. S. S.

"Man vs. Beast"

(Educational—Special—Two Reels)

We doubt if there has ever been so many thrills crowded into two reels as is contained in this special offered by Educational. It contains the meat of a large number of reels showing an expedition into the African wilds, headed by Louis Shuman, and is packed full of action, only enough sub-titles being used to connect the various scenes. There are many remarkable shots at close range showing encounters with wild animals. There are shown enormous herds of gnu, thousands of wild birds in one group, giant pelicacns, close-ups of Mr. Shuman killing two huge hippopotami, herds of zebra, hyena in its native haunts, a dried-up lake of pure salt, and finally a fight with huge rhinoceros. All of those encounters are so exciting that it is hard to pick out any for special mention. Probably, however, the battle with the rhinoceros, one of the most ferocious of beasts, and the rare pictures of the capture of the hyena, are the most striking. This film shows Mr. Shuman to have been a wonderful hunter who took extreme chances and risked his life many times. —C. S. S.

"Screen Snapshots No. 11"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

As usual, this single-reel fan magazine, issued by Pathe, contains pictures of stars which will be of particular interest to devotees of the silent drama. In this issue there is an unusually large number of stars, including Florence and King Vidor, Douglas McLean, Babe Ruth, Eva Novak, Ben Turpin, Hope Hampton, Anita Stewart, Richard Barthelmess and his wife, Edward Earle, Mary Carr, George Walsh, Grace Darmond, Zena Keefe, Mae Murray, May Allison, and the new star, Billie Dove, as well as many others.—C. S. S.

"Out on Bail"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

Audiences who have followed the various adventures of Paul Parrott in previous Hal Roach comedies, distributed by Pathe, will be thoroughly satisfied with this one, which contains a lot of good humorous material and clever situations. It is a comedy of the knock-about type and there is a snappy situation where Paul, as a rookie cop, gets credit for putting a desperado in jail and then a young girl inveighs him into lending her money to bail her uncle out. She invites Paul to meet "uncle" who, of course, turns out to be the desperado; you can imagine what happens. Another good scene is where the desperado steals a watch from the police captain, gives it to Paul and he throws it in the water to save the thief, only to find later that the watch was to be presented to him for capturing the desperado.—C. S. S.

"Bobbie's Ark"

"Bobbie" falling asleep by his toy Ark dreams he sees all the animals in real life. They are shown on the screen, and make a one-reeler of some interest. (Urban Popular Classic).—T. S. daP.

"Fifty-Fifty"

(Winkler—Cartoon—One Reel)

Felix, Pat Sullivan's famous cat, has an amusing encounter with a hobo in this number, a clever example of the cartoonist's art. Pledging allegiance to each other they decide to share everything on a fifty-fifty basis. Felix, however, is too trusting and after his grizzly companion has consumed everything in sight without sharing, he decides to get even. He has the hobo arrested, sentenced for fifty days, and wins the reward of fifty dollars for himself. Thus he interprets the fifty-fifty agreement. The cartoon shows a rich imagination and promises to be generally entertaining. —M. K.

"The Romantic Mouse"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Cartoonist Paul Terry, as usual, has produced a cartoon comedy that will please the average audience. There is a lot of cleverness shown in the manner in which he handles the subject. In this instance a love sick mouse is jilted by his lady love and attempts in a variety of ways to commit suicide, but is unsuccessful. He finally has a chance to save the life of his lady love and all ends happily.—C. S. S.

"The Mirror No. 2"

(Universal-Magazine—One Reel)

Recalling the San Francisco fire of April 16, 1906, reveals a wealth of interesting detail From the sight of some of the most appalling ruins ever photographed to some of the most appalling styles in ladies' millinery ever imagined, the picture has variety as well as historical value. Any exhibitor desiring a short novelty of real value will make no mistake in booking this.—M. K.

"The City Chap"

(Fox-Comedy—Two Reels)

This number, featuring Al St. John, has an abundance of fast action and an average amount of original comedy. It will please Al St. John fans and supply the desired nonsensical flash on a serious program. The action shows the adventures and misadventures of the hero and ends with a wet but romantic reunion with his sweetheart. The drug store scene has some of the most effective comedy. This is one of the "Sunshine" brand.—M. K.

"The Fresh Kid"

(Universal-Comedy—Two Reels)

Johnny Fox is a clever entertainer as "The Wise Kid." His love affairs, his pranks and his heroics comprise an interesting number and his personality was never more likable. Because his modest goat cart can't compete with the village dude's baby automobile, he loses his pretty sweetheart. He encounters the sheriff after stealing some flowers, but manages to lose him by a cunning ruse. How he catches his sister's beau who has robbed a safe, and how his bravery wins back the affections of his girl is the rest of the story. This comedy should be generally liked.—M. K.

The Pep of the Program

News and Reviews of Short Subjects and Serials

New Hutchison Serial "Speed" Tops Pathe Release List for October 22

For week of October 22 Pathe offers an unusually large list of subjects headed by the new Charles Hutchison serial, "Speed," produced by George B. Seitz. This serial contains a number of original and thrilling stunts and the story involves a man who is accused of murder and embezzlement, while the only one who can prove his innocence has fled to South America. "Speed" Stansbury, the hero, of course starts right on his trail.

The same week also marks the final episode of the Ruth Roland serial, "The Timber Queen." Then there is a single-reel Hal Roach comedy, "Shiver and Shake," starring Paul Parrott, assisted by Jobyna Ralston as a pair of newlyweds in a haunted house. "The Romantic Mouse" is the current Aesop fable cartoon; "The Rajah" is a humorous Harold Lloyd reissue.

On the program is also a two-reel comedy featuring Johnny Jones and his capable assistant, little Gertrude Messinger. It is titled "Broadcasting" and naturally deals with radio, by means of which the children succeed in capturing a bank robber.

The Pathe Review in addition to other interesting subjects has a beautiful photographic number entitled "The Poetry of Motion." "Screen Snapshots No. 11" shows an imposing array of stars. Topics of the Day and two Pathe News issues complete the week's schedule.

F. B. O. Filming Two-Reelers Based on Witwer's "Fighting Blood" Stories

Production has been started at the R-C studios on a series of two-reel "Fighting Blood" pictures adapted from the stories of the same name by H. C. Witwer. They will be distributed through Film Booking Offices of America.

For the title role of Gale Galen, a soda jerker who enters the prize ring to obtain money for an education and finally becomes middleweight champion, George O'Hara has been personally selected by P. A. Powers because of his acting and boxing ability from a field of sixty applicants.

Clara Horton has been engaged for the leading feminine role and the cast will also include Arthur Rankin, M. C. Ryan, Kit Guard, Mabel Van Buren, William Courtwright, Albert Cooke and Ena Gregory. Mal St. Clair, who made the first six Carter DeHaven comedies for F. B. O., is directing and the results he has obtained have been warmly praised by Mr. Witwer.

The series will consist of twelve subjects. To date seven of these "Fighting Blood" stories have been published in Collier's. Each story is complete and the same characters appear throughout the series. In addition to the prize fight atmosphere there is a pretty romance and a lot of well-drawn types such as are found in small towns.

"Glad Rags" Selected as Title for Bull Montana's Third Metro Comedy

"Bull" Montana's third comedy which Hunt Stromberg is producing for Metro will be "Glad Rags," which has been adapted by David Kirkland from Rene Rivierre's magazine story, "Silk Purses and Cauliflower Ears." "Bull" will have the role of a roughneck pugilist who became a polished gentlemen to win a girl's heart. Several well-known boxers will appear in this comedy. Hughie Fay, who directed the second comedy, "A Punctured Prince," will direct this one, with Clyde Bruckman assisting.

This indicates an enlargement of the production staff for the "Bull" Montana series. Mr. Bruckman is a magazine writer, was formerly sporting editor of the Los Angeles' Examiner and has written comedies for Lee Moran, "Buster" Keaton and other popular comedians. Mr. Kirkland has been in the motion picture business for several years.

Metro reports receipts of favorable comments from exhibitors on "A Punctured Prince." W. A. Howe, manager of the Glendale Theatre, Los Angeles, says: "House was in an uproar. Give us more comedies like this."

How Roth Does It

Eugene Roth, managing director of the California Theatre, San Francisco, has many times demonstrated that he is a live-wire exhibitor. Now he breaks into the limelight with a stunt which again adds to his laurels and shows that he recognizes the pulling power of short subjects. Not only in his advertising matter in lobby displays, but billboards as well, he lets his patrons know about them. As an instance, on his twenty-four sheet stands covering a feature production he also used a runner announcing the Educational comedy, "The Speeder," starring Lloyd Hamilton.

"Mud and Sand" for Stan Laurel

Metro announces that the third Stan Laurel comedy will be "Mud and Sand," a burlesque on "Blood and Sand." This series consists of two reelers and the first two are "The Egg" and "The Week-End Party." They are being produced by Amalgamated Producing Corporation in Hollywood.

Educational Has New Comedy Series

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., announces the inauguration of a series of single-reel rough and tumble comedies to be known as Cameo Comedies. The first, titled "Crash," will be released early in November, with two releases each month thereafter. The series consists of twenty-four subjects.

The second of the series is titled, "Pitter Patter." The cast of both of these is headed by Jimmie Adams, supported by Virginia Vance. Several of the subjects have already been completed at the United studios in Los Angeles, under the direction of Fred Hibbard.

Noted Poet Praises Fox Educationals

Evidence of the favor in which the Fox announcement of its entrance into the educational field is contained in the numerous endorsements by well-known men. Among these is Carl Sandberg, the celebrated poet and critic of the Chicago Daily News.

Mr. Sandberg, after having viewed the Fox educational "Alligators," wrote a long article in the Daily News in which he referred to this picture to controvert an argument of a friend that the movies don't amount to much or do not exert a good influence. He devoted considerable space to describing the contents of the film and pointing out its thrills, suggesting that the friend to whom he referred, a celebrated Swedish actor, would be interested in seeing "Alligators." Regarding criticisms that there is trash in the movies, Mr. Sandberg pointed out that there is no more than in the current output of stage drama, books, paintings or sculpture.

Filming Girl Comedy

Abe Stern, producing Century Comedies for Universal release, announces that in response to demands for more pictures containing the Century Beauties, that he is producing "The Freshman," a picture of college girl life that will contain plenty of pretty girls. Joe Bonner will be the featured comedian. Zack Williams is also appearing in this production which is being directed by Alf Goulding.

Jack Henderson, formerly in Century Comedies, has rejoined the outfit and will appear as a Scotchman in the new Baby Peggy story, "Little Miss Spunk."

New Keaton Comedy

First National has scheduled the Buster Keaton comedy, "The Electric House," for release during week of October 16. Buster, in this laugh-maker, graduates as a botanist, but by mistake receives a diploma as an electrician and is hired to wire a wealthy man's home for all modern improvements. This is said to afford opportunities for many novel and humorous effects. The story is by Buster Keaton and Eddie Cline, and the latter directed.

Two New "U" Serials Are Under Way

Universal now has in preparation two new serials. One is "Around the World in Eighteen Days," suggested by Jules Verne's famous story, but brought up to date with modern transportation methods. William Desmond, star of "Perils of the Yukon" serial, will be the star of this one, with Laura LaPlante opposite. Carl Coolidge is preparing the scenario and Reaves Eason will direct.

The second serial on which work is about to begin is "The Trail Blazers," another of the historical chapter plays which have proved so successful. It deals with Marcus Whitman's conquest to save Oregon for the United States. Edward Laemmle will direct and Art Acord will be starred. These two were also associated in "Winners of the West" serial for Universal.

"Camera Paintings" in Pathe Review

Pathe Review, 178, presents its second illustration of the power of the motion picture camera in the hands of an artist to reveal beauties of nature as seen in masterpieces of the painter's art. In the example, called "The Poetry of Motion," the effect of reflections of natural objects in water under varying conditions of light is heightened by the introduction of an ideal moving human figure whose outlines are so softened as to make the figure seem a living symbol of the natural beauties portrayed.

Signs "Little Ben"

Little Ben Alexander has been added to the cast of youthful players supporting Johnny Jones in the series of comedies which J. K. McDonald Productions, Inc., is making for Pathe. "Little Ben" is well-known to theatre audiences, having appeared in a number of big productions such as "Hearts of the World" and "The Turn of the Road."

Newsy Notes

All of the Urban projects are now gathered under one roof in the new Urban building at Irvington, New York, including the laboratory. Offices, however, will be maintained in the Borden Building, New York City.

Goldwyn announces two new single-reel Sport Reviews edited by Grantland Rice and produced by Jack Eaton for Artclass Pictures. They are "Trail and Stirrup," a horseback trip through the Rocky Mountains, and "Northwest Mounted," dealing with the training of the Canadian mounted police.

Mack Sennett has selected Roy Del Ruth to direct the next Ben Turpin comedy for First National release.

Lewis Sargent is now working on "Speed," the eighth of the single-reel comedies in which he is being starred by Universal in the "Messenger Boy" series. Scott Darling is directing.

Educational's beautiful love fantasy, "The Enchanted City," has been listed in the bulletin of the Motion Picture League as a "Family Film" recommended for both adults and young people.

Leo Maloney's two-reeler, "Rough Going," distributed by Pathe, has been selected to be shown over the entire Loew Circuit in connection with "Grandma's Boy," starring Harold Lloyd.

Teddy, the Mack Sennett dog, is now appearing in vaudeville for a brief season on the Orpheum Circuit. He is accompanied by his trainer, Joe Simpkins.

Edgar O. Brooks, Pathe serial sales manager, now visiting Buffalo and Cleveland territories, reports a strong demand for Pathe serials, with heavy advance bookings on the forthcoming Charles Hutchison serial, "Speed."

"The Graphic"

(Educational—Magazine—One Reel)

Educational has inaugurated a single reel screen magazine which will be issued weekly, and judging from the first three issues it should prove a winner and find a welcome among the exhibitors. Not only are the subjects interesting and entertaining, but they are instructive as well. Each "Graphic" consists of four sections, covering a wide variety of subjects. From the attractive main title to the end of the reel, there is plenty of snap.

"Graphic No. 1"

A unique subject opens this reel. It shows the activities of what is termed "A Strikeless Factory," the farm of Uncle Charlie Arnold at Tiger, Ga., with its home-made implements and transportation system. Other sections show the stage beauty, Mary Eaton, demonstrating "Waking Up Exercises," designed to aid in maintaining a trim figure, and sketches of famous men by the well-known artist Ollendorff. Becky Lanier, champion horsewoman, is shown taking the jumps on her favorite mount, and the same scenes are repeated in slow motion.

"Graphic No. 2"

Opening with a section showing how a two-year-old baby boy is being raised out in the open with very few clothes and fed entirely on raw food, this issue next contains an interesting section, which is punctuated by slow-motion studies, showing the tennis champion, W. T. Tilden, in a game. Then follows an unusually interesting section showing the operation of a U. S. destroyer attacking and destroying an enemy submarine, which contains some remarkable camera shots. The reel closes with an Ollendorff subject, "Athletics and Women."

"Graphic No. 3"

There is a good lesson to be learned from the first section of this issue which shows how several men who have lost legs or arms or are sightless have overcome these difficulties. Next is a section showing famous beauties who demonstrate two sides of the argument as to which is worth more, face or feet. Unusually beautiful photography and thrills as well are contained in the section showing "Plug Bait Fishing" for bass on a New England lake. Then comes an Ollendorff subject, "Champions."

There seemed to be a difference of opinion over the matter. So the editor put his hat on, walked up to 729 Seventh avenue, into a projection room and sat down to see "The Steeplechaser," an Educational-Mermaid Comedy. Now, a projection room is the toughest spot in the world to see a slapstick comedy. But the editor is one of those ordinary human animals built very much like the average fan—and he's here to say that "The Steeplechaser" is darn good slapstick comedy. The editor started to count the gags that anyone knows will always get over and the count was running pretty high when he lost track and got all balled up as a result of the thrills in the course of some really good steeplechase scenes.—R. E. W.

Giants of the Open

(Universal-Drama—Two Reels)

This is the first number in a series of two-reel features starring Roy Stewart. It is a good subject with which to open the series and leaves a decidedly favorable impression. The story is told, amidst effective forest scenery, of a drifter who is befriended by the owner of a lumber camp, and repays his benefactor by foiling a plot of timber pirates. The suspense is well planned, and with Roy Stewart and some interesting shots of logging activities, "Giants of the Open" can be counted upon to give full value.—M. K.

"Shiver and Shake"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

While told as a dream, the experiences that Paul Parrott and Jobyna Ralston as a pair of newlyweds go through in a haunted house will provoke a lot of laughs. The fun is fast and furious; there are spooks everywhere, and in chasing them everybody gets all mixed up and chase each other. This is an excellent comedy of this type and will please almost any audience that likes rough and tumble humor. It is cleverly conceived and has been directed so as to make the most out of the situations.—C. S. S.

"Once to Every Boy"

(Universal-Comedy—One Reel)

How the great opportunity comes to Jimmy Flannagan, messenger boy and aspiring Romeo is told in peppy style in this Universal comedy, featuring Lewis Sargent. A small part, but one that stands out because of the player's charm is that of Jimmy's sweetheart, impersonated by Mary Philbin. She is remarkably pretty. The story shows how Jimmy falsely accused of a robbery is brought to court, freed and is the means of saving the court-room from the real robber who holds them up. The final scene shows him buying a flivver with the reward money and gaily riding off with his "family."—M. K.

"Broadcasting"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

This is the third of the series of two-reel comedies, distributed by Pathe, starring little Johnny Jones. As indicated by the title, radio plays a big part in the story which has a real plot. It will prove interesting to the thousands of people who are radio fans. The manner in which Johnny and his pals succeed by means of their radio sets in apprehending a bank robber is cleverly handled, and particularly good in the ending. This comedy should prove popular.—C. S. S.

"The Cavy and the Rat"

The first part of this one reel Urban Popular Classic is devoted to pictures of the cavy, or, as he is popularly known, the guinea pig. There are interesting views of different species of this animal, which differ vastly in appearance. Cavies at home-making and at play are seen in interesting sequences.

The latter part of the film pictures a tame rat and her daily doings. Finally, on the arrival of a litter of baby "ratlets" the film depicts their daily adventures when they get large enough to scout around for themselves.—T. S. daP.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Biggest Question

The "Biggest Question" now being answered (August 5, 12 and 19, and Sept. 2, 30, and Oct. 14 issues) is:

If you were called upon to design and equip a 2-projector projection room in a high class, straight motion picture theatre, and to advise as to the location and construction of same, and to advise as to the selection of a screen, what would you do with regard to every one of the items concerned, and why would you do it?

Ventilation (continued)

In order to so ventilate a projection room that it will be healthful, and to insure that in caseof fire all gases will be removed and a slight vacuum set up in the projection room so that air will filter in through the crevices, instead of smoke filtering out into the auditorium through them, I would proceed as follows:

First, however, let me digress to say that if the projection room opens directly into the auditorium it is essential that there be two doors, with a vestibule between, as per Figure 6.

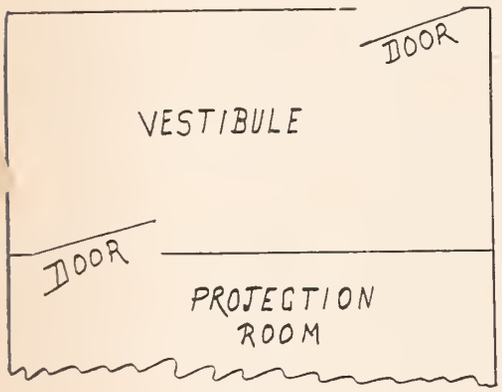

FIGURE 6
Suggested Projection Room Entrance

This is because if we are to avert panic, or any possibility of panic, it is imperative that no one in the audience shall obtain even the slightest glimpse of either fire or smoke. Once they do that you might about as well throw up the sponge. The damage is done and the panic is on, with probable death in its wake.

It requires something less than the wisdom of a Solomon to know that with the projection room door opening directly into the auditorium, when the projectionist rushes out, after having remained in the room as long as he possibly could, a billow of smoke will in all human probability follow him. The vestibule shown in Figure 6 makes this impossible.

And now to get back to the main subject. I would first of all have a fresh air duct, the opening or openings of which must be covered with a radiator cap of the sort used for hot air furnace openings. The kind I mean have swinging vanes, so that they may be opened, closed, or set at any desired opening, at will.

I would have these vanes held normally CLOSED by a strong spring. I would only permit them to be held opened by a cord attached to the master cord, so that the instant the master cord be slackened the vanes will snap tight shut. THIS IS IMPORTANT, for reasons explained further along, and is a very simple thing to arrange. It is only necessary to attach a lever, of suitable length, to the short one which controls the vanes, and to attach a coil spring to this lever in such a way that it holds the lever to closed position.

For sanitary reasons, if the room be nine or more feet wide there should be two of these fresh air inlets, located in opposite ends of the room and quite close to the floor—not more than six inches therefrom. They must be connected, by proper duct, with the outer air.

Next I would install a vent flue in the center of the ceiling, same to be not less than sixteen inches in diameter if it leads directly up, in a straight line, to and above the roof of the theatre. It should be not less than eighteen inches in diameter if it leads to the open air in a straight line horizontally and not less than twenty-four inches in diameter if it leads horizontally and has one or more bends. It should be not less than eighteen inches in diameter if it be vertical, but with one or more bends. In this I am assuming its length to be not excessive. If the length be great, then judgmen should be used in the matter of increasing diameter sufficiently to decrease friction, so as to be assured of a good flow of air.

The outer end of the pipe must be covered with a suitable cap to keep out rain, but it must not operate to set up undue friction.

Are You Working by "Guess" or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens chart (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) is in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

"Don't guess." Do your work RIGHT. Price, fifty cents, stamps.

Address Moving Picture World, either 516 Fifth Avenue, New York City, or 28 East Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, Ill.

Examine Figure 7 carefully. It constitutes what may be called an air injector, or ejector would perhaps be more correct. Anyhow it causes a flow of air by forcing an air jet through nozzle C, A-A being fans and B-B pipes leading therefrom to the nozzle.

The advantage of this arrangement is this: with one fan there is the possibility that it will be out of order just when an audience may be endangered by a condition which demands the 100 per cent efficiency of the vent fans, above all things else; also in case of a fan installed in the vent flue itself it will be almost a certainty that it will be put out of commission within a very short while after a real film fire starts.

By this plan the fans may and should be located entirely outside the projection room. In Figure 7 I have shown them on top of the room, though that would seldom be possible, and often not desirable even if possible.

In Figure 8 you see a suggested method of bringing the idle fan AUTOMATICALLY into full action in case of fire. There is nothing far-fetched, fanciful or complicated about it.

It should be obligatory upon both the theatre and the projectionist to have one of the fans running continuously when either projector is in operation, the penalty for not so doing to be a limited suspension of both projectionist and theatre license for first offense and something even more severe for a second.

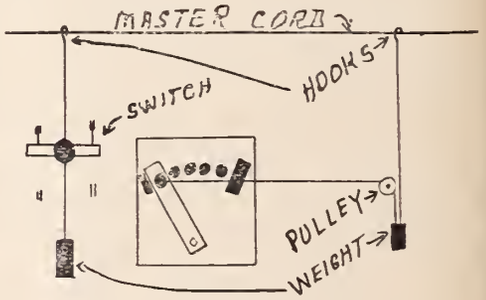

FIGURE 8
Automatic Switch for Fan

The projectionist may regulate the air supply at will with the inlet vanes, and can protect the ports with glass, so that he may have just the amount of air desired at all times, without slowing down the fan.

Important

It is, as I have said, important that the inlet vanes be held normally closed by a spring and that they only be held open against the pull of the spring by means of a cord attached, by a hook, to the master cord. The cord may have a series of hooks one-half inch apart, so that the vanes may be held in any desired position, and the fresh air flow thus regulated.

With this lay-out, in case of fire the action will be as follows: As shown in September 30 issue and Figure 5, within one or at most two seconds after the starting of a fire all port shutters will close AUTOMATICALLY.

No dependence is placed on what an excited man may or may NOT do. One fan is already running full speed. The instant the master cord slacks the other fan is automatically brought into action at full speed and THE INLET AIR PORTS AUTOMATICALLY CLOSE.

The Point

The point in all this is that we have a heavy exhaust of air (and smoke and gases) out through the vent pipe (which should be thoroughly insulated from all inflammable substance throughout its length) with THE INLETS TIGHTLY CLOSED, so that what air enters must perforce enter through the crevices around the port shutters and door. We thus have the fans working almost entirely upon the gases generated, and they should be able to not only exhaust them, but also to create a possible slight vacuum.

Not Costly

Aside from the second fan, the pipes from the fan to vent and the radiator covers for inlet, there is no additional cost entailed in this installation as against present inefficient methods.

That this system will be quick acting and may "go off" when the projectionist does not want it to is conceded. The projectionist does not want the shutters to drop when a fire starts, unless he is unable to put it out. It would surprise you to know how often incipient fires do start, which are exinguished by the projectionist without anyone being the wiser. There are very many of them. Naturally he does not want it known that he has had even that sort of a fire. And I cannot but sympathize with him, BUT the trouble is that once in a while he is unable to put the fire out, and by the time he is done trying he either becomes excited and forgets to drop the shutters, or some one in the audience has had time to get a glimpse of fire or smoke and IT IS TOO LATE.

It is therefore not good practice to put the wishes of the projectionist in the balance as against human life, at a time when the condition is highly dangerous.

The plan shown in Figure 8 is not designed as anything more than a rough suggestion. The quick pulling over of the starting lever would give the motor quite a shock, but since it would occur probably not to exceed once in many months, no serious harm would result.

As to Motors

Roy Beal (as nearly as I can make out the signature), Ft. Wayne, Indiana, arises to remark:

With regard to the inquiry of one of your readers concerning motors, A. C. and D. C., I have decided to set forth the matter as I see it.

I am employed in the experimental small motor laboratory of the General Electric now, here in Ft. Wayne, but am a motion picture projectionist. In A. C. motors there are the induction, the synchronous, induction repulsion, repulsion induction and series commutator motors. There are shunt, series and compound D. C. motors, all of which have commutators.

If D. C. be applied to any of the A. C. motors, except the series, a very heavy current would flow, and either the fuses would go or injury would result to the windings. There would be no torque produced. When A. C. is applied the reactance keeps the starting current down. With D. C. there is no reactance and only the resistance of the windings to oppose current flow. A one-half horse repulsion motor may develop a resistance of about one ohm, but it would not require more than thirty amperes for a very short interval of time to start the motor. If D. C. were applied we have only to apply the rule E divided by R-C to find we will have 110 amperes flowing, and the flow would continue until something let go.

Current Would Be Less

A compound or a shunt D. C. motor would not develop power with A. C., but the current would be less than the D. C. starting current, so that no damage would result. The reactance opposes the A. C., and high resistance of the shunt field causes the field current to lag so far behind the armature current that there is practically no torque developed. If the reactance of the shunt field winding is not too great the motor may run, but the torque would be too low to be of any practical use.

A series D. C. motor will run on A. C., but the power will be reduced. A series A. C. motor will operate on D. C. and will develop more power. A series motor can have its field winding so compensated that the full load rating will be the same for either A. C. or D. C. Such a motor is known as the "universal motor". They are built in sizes up to one-half horse power. The speed of such motors varies considerably with the load. They are coming into very general use on vacuum cleaners, vibrators, drills, electric hammers, washing machines, etc. A series motor may have a tapped winding and operate on D. C. 25 or on 60 cycle A. C., depending on which tap is used.

Not Checked Up

I shall not attempt to check up on this. I am not well versed on motor construction, except in a general way. I have had to change brother Beal's wording a little, to make it read well, but have tried to express his ideas exactly as they were put. Some of you motor sharks can proceed to explain exactly wherein he is in error—if he is in error.

Slow Moving World

From Australia comes a letter, the writer of which requests that his name be not published because "in a small town everybody knows everybody's business." He incloses a letter, with the remark that it is evidence that the world moves slowly.

It seems he wrote the International Correspondence Schools, Sydney, New South Wales, for information concerning a course for projectionists. The manager of the "school" replied that he is uncertain as to what is meant by a "course for projectionists."

Now, this is of no especial interest, except that here is a school which pretends to be a school of instruction in vocational and professional callings, yet it does not even know the right name for the man who places the finished product of one of the leading industries of the world before the public.

The writer says:

One can quite well understand the man on the street not being familiar with the term "projectionist," but the "manager" of a school of technical instruction—well, evidently the world does move slowly. I have a copy of your Third Edition of the Handbook and am eagerly waiting the arrival of the new edition in Queensland. I also subscribe to the Moving Picture World.

The new book is out and I have no hesitancy in assuring you that it will meet your expectations. Just when it will reach Queensland I cannot, of course, say, but presumably very soon after this reaches you.

Distortion

James L. Quinlan, Shreveport, Louisiana, propounds the following query:

Dear Mr. Richardson: I am in the midst of an argument. Will you be good enough to settle the matter? The question is: does or does not the straightening of the side lines of the picture by manipulation of the aperture of the projector correct distortion? I shall not tell you which side I take. Please answer fully.

By that I mean that we want your answer of yes or no explained in detail. If there is any cost attached I will, or we will stand it, up to, say—right at this point we stopped to palaver, and the result is to your benefit, because it is agreed that the loser will send you a check for twenty of those dollars. Trusting that this will be satisfactory we will wait with considerable interest for your answer.

No Charge for It

No twenty or any other sum needed. I only take pay for such things as cannot, for one reason or another, be replied to through the department, except that there is no charge for replies to such letters as might be replied to through the department, but for which there is not room.

As to your query, the answer is a most emphatic NO. Making the side lines of the picture perpendicular does not in any way affect the distortion of the picture.

The picture height, and the height of every object therein, still remains as it was, and that is distorted as to height. The picture and every object therein is distorted as to width, the bottoms of all objects being made more wide than their tops.

The actor's feet are made large in proportion to his head. There is no possible way of correcting this, except by locating the lens centrally with center of a screen, qualified by the fact that a certain limited amount of lens displacement is permissible, because the effect of displacement in picture distortion does not become objectionably apparent until the lens and screen center are considerably off center with each other. You will find this all fully explained, pages 253 to 258, inclusive, in the new handbook.

Some Book

George W. Walker, Beacon, New York, remarks:

Received your latest handbook yesterday. Was agreeably surprised. I'll tell the whole entire world it is SOME book. I assure you I appreciate its excellence and will put it to use at once. From even a somewhat hasty examination, I feel entirely safe in saying that there will now not be a single excuse in the world for any theatre to have any other than good projection.

I am publishing some of the many comments on the new handbook, now beginning to arrive, just to let you who may be hesitating as to whether to "invest" know what those who have the book think of it.

I will gladly provide the full address of the writer of any letter published, should any person for any reason whatsoever desire to have same. Just send me a stamped, self addressed letter. Walker's address is Box 236, Beacon, New York.

Better Equipment

Conducted by E. T. KEYSER

Seventy-four Houses Being Planned or Built and Thirty-three Being Renovated

IN our issue of September 16, we published a list of eighty-six new picture theatres being planned or under process of construction.

Below will be found a list of seventy-four additional houses, reports of the building or planning of which we have received since that date.

In common with most of the lists which we have published, but a very modest proportion of the reports are accompanied by estimates of the amounts appropriated for the erection or equipment of these houses.

Of the current list, but thirty-nine of the items contain information regarding the approximate cost. The estimated cost of these forty-nine houses amounts to $5,460,000, which brings up the total cost of estimated amounts for new houses, reported by us during the current year, to $77,714,000.

The highest priced house on the following list will cost $1,000,000 and the most moderate will cost $15,000. Between these two figures, there is one house which will cost $700,000, one $500,000, one $400,000, one $350,000, three at $200,000 each, one at $175,000, two at $150,000 each and one at $125,000.

The most popular cost appears to be $100,000 at which five new houses are being built. Below this mark, there will be two houses at $80,000, one at $75,000, one at $70,000, two at $60,000 three at $50,000 and three at $45,000.

Three houses will cost $40,000 each, one will cost $35,000, four will cost $25,000 each, while two will be built at $20,000 each.

But it is not only the builders of new houses who are making a good showing in this issue. Following the list of new houses planned will be found reports of thirty-three theatres on which improvements, ranging from extensive to moderate, are being or will be made.

Of these thirty-three houses, details regarding individual expenditures of but thirteen are available. But these thirteen items amount to $676,000.

The amounts to be expended on renovation range from $200,000 to $4,000 per house. The higher figure will be spent by two houses and the lower by one house.

Between these amounts, an analysis shows that one house will spend $110,000, one house $40,000, another house $32,000 and another $30,000.

One house will spend $15,000, four $10,000 and one house $5,000.

It is evident that the current year is notable not only for the building of new picture theatres, but for the bringing up-to-date of the older houses whose proprietors realize that the exhibitor who apparently stands still is actually going backward.

Whiteside Opens Soon

The new Whiteside Theatre on Madison street in Corvallis, Oregon, will be ready in three weeks. The cost has been estimated at $115,000. With a seating capacity of 1,130, the theatre is the second largest in the state. The organ now being installed cost $20,000.

New House in Portland

Tibbetts & Garrigus will erect a theatre on 40th street and Sandy Boulevard, Portland, Oregon, as soon as plans being drawn up by Claussen & Claussen are completed. Bids are now being received by the various contractors. The building will cost $50,000, will seat 1,000, and will have four stories. The entrance will be on Sandy Boulevard.

Washington House Is to Cost $250,000

A large moving picture theatre, to be known as the Rivoli, is to be erected on Georgia avenues, between Garfield and Hamilton streets, northwest, Washington, D. C., according to an announcement by A. Marcus Notes, owner of a chain of Ninth street theatres.

The new house will seat between 1,500 and 2,000. It will cost in the neighborhood of $250,000, and will have all seats on one floor, without balconies or galleries.

The plans for the house show an extensive entrance lobby and foyer, with attractive rest rooms, offices, projection rooms, etc. Numerous exits are provided and the auditorium will be lavishly decorated and equipped with special lighting and ventilating. There will be no basement to the building. Stores will be located on both sides of the entrance lobby. The structure will be of fire-proof construction throughout.

A feature of the house will be an auxiliary open air theatre, of concrete construction, of exceptionally large dimensions, for use in warm weather.

234 Companies Formed in N. Y. this Year

During the nine months this year ending on September 30, there were formed in New York State a total of 234 motion picture companies, which when incorporated with the Secretary of State's office in Albany, showed a combined capitalization amounting to $9,688,100. The greatest number during any one month occurred in March, when 41 companies were incorporated, with a capitalization of $1,712,000. The lowest month was April, when 15 companies were incorporated with a capitalization of $274,000.

During the twelve months last year 455 companies, or about double what have been incorporated during the nine months this year, were formed in New York State. These represented a capitalization that amounted to $28,373,400. Last year the monthly record showed anywhere from 30 to 50 companies incorporating, and as a general thing, the capitalization was greatly in excess of that which has characterized the majority of companies formed this year.

$100,000 Concern Has Been Organized

The Distinctive Pictures Corporation, capitalized at $1,000,000, incorporated and filed papers in the Secretary of State's office at Albany during the past week. The directors are A. S. Friend, H. M. Hobart and C. S. Hervey of New York City

Only three other companies entered the motion picture business in New York State last week, and these were of comparatively low capitalization, including the Revue Productions, Inc., $10,000, Harry Kendler, Fay Fisher and Edith Gordon, all of New York; Empire Play Company, Inc., $20,000, Everett Moses, F. X. Bannon of Newark, N. J., and H. W. Wack, New York City; Criterion Theatre of Utica, Inc, $3,000, James D. Smith, Clarence E. Williams, Utica, and Winford H. Linton, Little Falls.

Criterion to Be New Utica Theatre

The Hippodrome in Utica, N. Y., is to be replaced by The Criterion, which when completed will be one of the finest theatres in central New York. Papers of incorporation have already been filed in Albany.

W. H. Linton, of Little Falls, best known as "Pop" Linton, is one of the well-known persons behind the project. Mr. Linton is treasurer of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State, and is now serving his sixth term. He has also been president of the Central New York Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association for several years. He owns the Hippodrome in Utica as well as the Hippodrome and the Linton in Little Falls.

Others interested in the new theatre include James D. Smith of Utica, former Mayor of that city; Frank A. Empsall of Watertown, owner of the Avon and Strand in that city, and the Grand in Johnstown, and William Rubin of Syracuse, a well-known capitalist.

"Bigger than 'Blood and Sand'"

At the Strand, Omaha, "The Old Homestead" broke the "Blood and Sand" record. Read this wire:

"Business steadily increased during our ten-day run until we had the best Saturday of the year. It drew better than 'Blood and Sand.' Enthusiastically received by press and public.

"A. H. BLANK."

And here's another:

"'The Old Homestead' established a new record for the week at the Empire, New Bedford, Mass. This is remarkable in that all the theatres opened with new shows on our fifth day and still we broke records.

"NORMAN M. DIXON."

is the one picture in all the world that every human being, old or young, rich or poor, highbrow or lowbrow, will cry over, and laugh over, and thrill over.

And here's a friendly tip to exhibitors — PLAY UP THAT CYCLONE. You can't say too much about it. It's positively the greatest spectacular effect ever achieved in motion pictures, and it brings down the house every time.

Every Exhibitor Who Has Seen this Picture Is Strong for It!

You'll rave too when you see this corking attraction. Every player a star. When exhibitors use adjectives you can bet a production has the goods. Don't we know! We couldn't drag it from Broadway. At the Capitol $48,000 rolled into the till in one great week. The Cameo Theatre packed them in for fourteen additional weeks and Moss' Broadway across the street followed with a smashing attendance. Right now the Stanley in Philadelphia is counting record money for a week's run. It's your turn to cash in right now!

Ask Goldwyn!

A Few Of The Thrills

Alice Faulkner disappears from view.
The shadow of Moriarty on the wall.
Holmes blocks the murderous plot at the gas house.
Moriarty stages an attack on Baker Street.
The rescue of Alice from certain death.
Moriarty's disguise fools everybody but Sherlock Holmes
And a hundred other absorbing situations!

CRASH, the first of Educational's series of twenty-four one-reel CAMEO COMEDIES, will be released November 12th.

Cameo Clean-Cut Comedies are fast—mighty fast! They are productions; not the type of so-called comedy exhibitors are accustomed to receive in one reel.

The casts are headed by JIMMIE ADAMS, supported by Virginia Vance, a new-comer to the screen but a young lady of marked comedy ability.

Educational's Branches will be pleased to screen CRASH for you, and a little later PITTER PATTER and ONCE OVER also.

We advise your early inspection.

SHADOWS

Presented by B. P. Schulberg — A Tom Forman Production

Adapted by Eve Unsell and Hope Loring. Photography by Harry Perry

CAST

IN keeping with our announcement that "Every Preferred Picture will be portrayed by a cast of artists whose names are well known to the public," we call your special attention to the cast of "SHADOWS."

Lon Chaney, in a Chinese character, does the finest work of his career—and he reaches your theatre just when his name is one of the greatest box-office magnets.

Harrison Ford, one of the most popular leading men in pictures, having shared honors with Norma Talmadge in "Smilin' Through" and made a hit in "The Old Homestead", appears in a powerful role as a young minister.

Marguerite De La Motte, heroine of "The Three Musketeers" and "The Mark of Zorro," and a girl of wondrous beauty and talent, has the finest opportunity of her career as the young wife.

John Sainpolis, incomparable artist and celebrated for his work in "The Great Lover," "The Four Horsemen," etc., gives one of his best characterizations as Nate Snow.

Walter Long, who added to a notable record as the bandit chief in "Blood and Sand," is here a wolf of the sea.

Buddy Messenger, the famous boy actor, is in the best part he ever had as "Mista Bad Boy."

STORY

WE proclaim "Shadows" the greatest story ever told in motion pictures because it has heart interest without hokum, love interest without mush, romance without riot, thrills without number and a climax without any ragged edges. It builds up continually and never lags on its way to a surprising and startling finish. It was written by Wilbur Daniel Steele, held to be America's greatest living story writer, and was the prize story of the Edward J. O'Brien selection. It appeared originally as "Ching, Ching, Chinaman" in Pictorial Review, and the 2,000,000 readers of that publication will form the nucleus of a far greater audience for the picture.

TITLE

SHADOWS" was adopted as the title, because it has mystery, meaning and merit as a box-office aid. It has the advantage of being a one-word title and lends itself admirably to advertising and exploitation.

DIRECTION

TOM FORMAN, director of "Shadows," needs no introduction to exhibitors who played the Thomas Meighan features, "City of Silent Men," "The Easy Road" and "White and Unmarried." His abilities were proved there, but they were only promises of the greatness he has attained in directing "Shadows." Here he takes his place among the real geniuses of photoplay direction.

PHOTOGRAPHY

EXHIBITORS and critics who appreciated the exquisite photography of "Rich Men's Wives," will get a thrill when they see the artistic results obtained by Harry Perry in "Shadows." Preferred cameramen, electricians and technicians worked day and night, unceasingly, for 72 hours making some scenes, and their efforts were rewarded with results that add to their own fame and enrich the artistic side of pictures.

he "HEADLESS HORSEMAN"

The most sophisticated theatre audiences in America pay as high as $10 a seat to see Will Rogers, Star of the Ziegfeld Follies and one of the biggest drawing cards on the American Stage.

In "The Headless Horseman" you have six reels of the inimitable Rogers at his best!

As Ichabod Crane, in the picturization of "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," Rogers gives the screen one of the most finished bits of fine comedy ever run through a projecting machine.

Forty-eight publishers have issued this book in one form or another, and it is available in fifty-three different editions. Hundreds of thousands of copies have been sold; it is justly considered "The best known short story in the English language."

Here you have a ready-made audience that includes every man, woman and child who has ever languished with Ichabod over the charms of Katrina, or felt the goose-flesh creep at the weird and ghostly night-riding of "The Headless Horseman."

"When Knighthood Was in Flower"

At the Criterion Theatre, New York

"When Knighthood Was In Flower" is now in its sixth week. During that time there has not been a single vacant seat at any performance and the turn-away from the box-office has averaged a thousand daily.

At the Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago

"When Knighthood Was In Flower" opened October 11th with thousands unable to gain admittance. In order to accommodate the enormous crowds the doors are now being opened at 9 A. M. and performances started at 10.30. Yet thousands are being turned away.

At the Scala Theatre in London

This American-made picture drew such a tremendous crowd at the opening October 2nd that the police had to hold back the throngs and traffic was retarded for blocks. It has been playing to the capacity at the Scala since.

"When Knighthood Was in Flower"

Also opens for indefinite runs at Grauman's Rialto, Los Angeles, October 16th; Columbia Theatre, Washington, October 23rd; Park Theatre, Boston, October 26th; Garden Theatre, Milwaukee, October 28; Royal Theatre, Kansas City, October 29th, with other leading cities opening as rapidly as possible.

Vitagraph Announces Twelve Great Specials

A Notable Selection From the World's Best Available Screen Material

VITAGRAPH announces the acquisition of rights to novels and plays from twelve of the world's famous authors and playwrights —each story a masterpiece from the pen of a master. This series of special productions will be one of the greatest achievements in the history of motion pictures.

EACH story has been selected with the greatest care by men who know what the public wants. Although no two are alike in theme and plot structure, each embodies the necessary ingredients of strong human interest and vital, universal appeal that enter into the making of big, powerful, box office attractions.

STUDY the list carefully. Each one an assured success. Vitagraph's faith is pledged that none will be disappointed in the quality of the finished work.

VITAGRAPH feels that the public and the exhibitor will confidently look forward to the brilliant production of this illustrious series with something of the pleasure we take in announcing it.

S P E C I A L S

THE NINETY AND NINE . . . — Ramsay Morris

Hunted and haunted, he touches the lowest depths. The exalted faith of a girl lifts him from the mire. Through a blazing forest he drives, sacrificing all, to prove his redemption.

MASTERS OF MEN . . . — Morgan Robertson

An epic of the sea. On its merciless waters, a boy's character is moulded. The mountains from which he once fled, become mole-hills. He returns to play a man's part.

THE MAN NEXT DOOR . . . — Emerson Hough

Scorning convention, she brings to the narrow city a breath of the wide spaces. But there is a charmed circle she cannot hope to enter—until she meets "The Man Next Door."

A READY MADE HUSBAND . . — Rupert Hughes

She steals Tom's good looks, Dick's happy disposition, Harry's taste and breeding—and more,—and makes herself a perfect mate. Then what,—and what of the "remnant" youths?

HIDDEN HOUSE . . . — Amelie Rives

A story of weird happenings and ghostly sensations. In the shell of this beautiful girl are imprisoned two natures—one fostered by the maniacs who reared her—the other crying for love—and release.

THE KIDNAPPED MILLIONAIRES . . — Frederick Upham Adams

When several of the country's most powerful financiers are strangely missing, there is havoc in the world's markets. An heiress and an editor, after sensational adventures find them—and love.

MY MAN . . . . — Edith Ellis

Deserted by her husband, and with a baby to care for, she finds that society demands awful retribution for a crime. Through, the light of faith burns brightly, until vindication comes.

THE MAN FROM BRODNEY'S . . — George Barr McCutcheon

An island rich with rubies and sapphires. Into the struggle comes the man from Brodney's. He is of fighting stock—luckily for him, and the Princess.

A SHOP GIRL . . . — C. N. and A. M. Williamson

She is a shop girl—a model; while he is a millionaire. Love tries to bridge the gulf between them, while caste and convention seek to widen it. A world-old battle.

STEELE OF THE ROYAL MOUNTED . . — James Oliver Curwood

A tensive drama of God's country, where the weak fall by the wayside—and only the strong survive. A tale of throbbing, vital impulses, told by one who has been there.

THE TENDERFOOT . . . — Alfred Henry Lewis

A thriller of the West. "Tenderfoot" describes him—but he learns fast. The worm finally turns and, in turning, bumps into a lot of adventure and romance.

WHO'S WHO . . . . — Richard Harding Davis

Officially he was dead. Nor can he return to life without extreme peril to himself. Then comes news of the "dead man's" inheritance—and the girl, and he is in a quandry.

This and That

Dr. Ellis Parker Oberholtzer, for six years the Black Horse Trooper of the Pennsylvania State Censor Board, has written a book, "The Morals of the Movie."

The book, we can readily see, is destined to become the textbook and guide of advocates of censorship.

So, while the Doctor probably has no need of our aid in advertising his work, we feel called upon to urge its purchase upon all in the industry who find it necessary to deal with the censor and the would-be censor.

Any attempt to review the book can be summed up in a sentence:

"It has been published one year too late."

The Doctor is talking about a picture business that doesn't exist today; about pictures that are on the shelves and not the screens.

But, of course, reformers who use quotations from his book for years to come won't know that—nor care.

Practical and Constructive

An extract from the current report of the Cleveland Cinema Club will give an idea of the sort of constructive work that such local organizations can accomplish. The following paragraph tells its own story:

"Plaza—East 55th St.—Recommended investigation as dangerous in case of fire. Investigated by Executive Committee of M. P. T. O. A. and city officials. Condemned as unsafe. Building now razed."

The Cinema Club also watches pictures, and devotes considerable attention to the interests of children. Its general summary of production conditions at the moment will be found interesting:

"From this general study of the character of motion picture films shown in Cleveland and Northern Ohio, it will be seen that they are on the whole good, and that conditions are improving . . . We seem to have a healthy all-around growth of the maker, the exhibitor and the public."

Sam Bullock's Friends

The wearying "Don't! Don't! Don't!" of Dr. Oberholtzer's book throws into strong and welcome contrast the story of the Cinema Club movement out in Ohio.

Sam Bullock tells something of the story elsewhere in this issue. Sam calls the women of the Cinema Club his friends; and the women call Sam their friend.

Which sums up the tale. The women of Cleveland, through their Cinema Club, offered sincere and hearty co-operation to the exhibitors in furthering the cause of better pictures and better theatres. The exhibitors reciprocated with equal sincerity and heartiness.

And the results have been wonderful.

Now the Cinema Club idea has spread through the State—soon it will be national. What a contrast this hand in hand co-operation presents to the bickering, quarreling and eternal warfare that goes on between the industry and political censor boards.

And what a weapon the censors will have to face when these thousands upon thousands of women rise in their might!

The Matter of Rentals

A chat over the luncheon table with Jimmie "Goldwyn" Grainger the other day brought out an interesting point.

"I have never had any patience," said Jimmie, "with the film salesman or manager who thinks that all exhibitors spend their time twenty-four hours a day on the thought, 'How cheap can I buy my picture?'

"I have always found that when you have a real showman's proposition to offer, with the money-making possibilities patent on its face, you will find the successful exhibitor more than willing to meet you half way on the matter of price. He haggles most when he isn't sure of his judgment and what he is buying. But offer him a picture that he just feels will whoop things up for his box office and you'll find price the last thing to talk about."

Score one for the fair-mindedness of exhibitors. On the word of Jimmie Grainger. Who knows exhibitors. And exhibitors know him.

Challenge Renewed

Cole Asks Censorship Advocate Concerning Improper Films

General Charles H. Cole, chairman of the Committee of Massachusetts Citizens Against Censorship, has renewed his challenge to B. Preston Clark, leading advocate of censorship, to make good his assertion that improper films are being shown in Massachusetts at the present time, or to retract the statement made by him in speeches and literature sent out by his organization.

Cole's original proposal to Clark was that both should join in inspecting any improper film and, if such was found, to bring action jointly for prosecution under the present State law. Cole asked also that a committee from the Federated Women's Clubs accompany Clark and himself to view whatever film Clark might name as objectionable. The Federated Women's Club leaders have agreed to appoint a committee for this purpose.

Clark failed to name any film that he believed to be in violation of the law and dodged the Cole challenge by saying that he had always refrained from expressing his opinion about any film because such "well-meant action has merely swelled the box-office receipts."

Declaring that "you have no copyright on decency," Cole in his latest note demands that Clark make good his assertion.

Praises Film Actors

Will Rogers Says They Are Church-Going Folk

Will Rogers was a guest of the A. M. P. A. at its weekly luncheon at the Cafe Boulevard on Friday, Oct. 13. Vice-President Victor M. Shapiro presided in the absence of John Flinn. Mr. Rogers was introduced by Harry Reichenbach. The guest of honor defended motion picture people. He said:

"There are some mighty fine people in Hollywood. I never had a better time, with better or more moral folks. You've got to live among them to know them. In the colony you will find a lot of old-time actors who have gone into pictures. They have their church in Hollywood, and in the mornings you will see 700 or 800 people flocking to it. Of that number I expect 400 belong to the motion picture profession."

Won't Review Case

U. S. Supreme Court Refuses to Go Further into Binderup Litigation

The United States Supreme Court, Washington, D. C., this week refused to review the case of Charles G. Binderup against Pathe Exchange and others. Binderup, who was an exhibitor at Minden, Neb., brought suit to recover threefold damages in the sum of $750,000 for injuries due to an alleged illegal combination and conspiracy in violation of the act of Congress known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. He operated several theatres in the state of Nebraska and also booked films for other picture houses within the state. The defendants in this case were members of the Omaha Film Board of Trade.

Binderup charged that the defendants destroyed his business and obtained control of the motion picture industry, combining, federating and conspiring to commit a large number of alleged illegal acts causing injury to him, the principal act alleged being that each and all of the defendants conspired and agreed to refuse to lease, sell or deliver to him any motion picture films upon any terms or conditions whatsoever at any time.

Made Aid to Lasky

Victor H. Clarke to Relieve Famous Players' Official of Detail

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announces the appointment of Victor H. Clarke to the position of assistant to the first vice-president.

It is Mr. Lasky's desire to maintain closer contact with writers, directors and stars and also to be able to devote a greater amount of time to the consideration of the big productions which are now being made and which will be made in the future. The large amount of detail has made it difficult for Mr. Lasky to give the attention to these matters that he would like to give, and the appointment of Mr. Clarke will relieve the situation considerably.

It is made clear that the advancement of Mr. Clarke in no way affects the position of Charles Eyton, general manager of the Lasky studio.

Victor H. Clarke went to Hollywood over a year ago as special representative of the production department. Prior to his coming to the Coast, he spent three months at the Long Island Paramount studio completing construction.

Evans, formerly sales manager of the Cleveland exchange, was appointed general manager of all the United Artists' exchanges in Canada with headquarters at Toronto.

E. J. Eichenlaub was appointed sales manager of the Chicago exchange, Maurice Safier was appointed sales manager of the Cleveland exchange and F. B. MacCracken was appointed sales manager of the Kansas City exchange.

Armstrong Promoted

Edward Armstrong has been promoted to be assistant general sales manager for Universal, with particular charge of the West Coast exchanges. Mr. Armstrong was formerly district manager of the Pacific Coast exchanges.

U. S. Asks Screen's Aid for National Welfare

Requests Theatre Owners' Help in Directing Immigration

(By Wire to Moving Picture World)

SYDNEY S. COHEN, national president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America had an important conference with Secretary of Labor James J. Davis at Mooseheart, Ill., yesterday, on matters affecting the co-operation of all theatre owners with this federal department in the work of aiding the advancement of progressive public programs.

Secretary Davis was accompanied to Mooseheart by Assistant Secretary Henning. General Manager A. J. Moeller, Chairman M. J. O'Toole, of the National Public Service Department; National Director W. D. Burford and State Executive Board Member J. J. Rubens, of Aurora, were with Mr. Cohen. The conference was held in the Administration Building at Mooseheart.

Special reference was made to use of the motion pictures in diversifying immigration. Secretary Davis is doing commendable work in this relation, having studied every phase of this question until he has become exceptionally expert in the matter. He has set in motion the energies of his department toward making the location of the immigrant here fit into the economic needs of the country and the special welfare of the newcomer. To put into such practise such plans as he has in mind and avoid appearing dictatorial in the matter the public must be advised of the moves in prospect and brought into sympathetic co-operation with them.

Secretary Davis hopes to so direct the immigration stream that further congestion of crowded centers will be avoided and agricultural and industrial needs in other places cared for.

The co-operation of the farm organizations, city officials and civic bodies will be needed to make these plans effective and Secretary Davis expects, through the theatre screen service, to carry this message to millions of Americans.

This public service in the theatre will enable Mr. Davis to move forward along these commendable lines so rapidly that he will accomplish during his term of office what would, under other conditions, require a much longer time. The energies of the Department of Labor will now sweep the United States in establishing every necessary local association to meet the needs of this program. This is rendered especially important now in view of the speeding up of industrial activities everywhere and the need for labor in manufacturing enterprises and on farms.

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace will also co-operate in this work.

The Theatre Owners of Milwaukee and adjacent sections in Wisconsin held a well attended and enthusiastic meeting at the Hotel Maryland on Friday. F. J. McWilliams, state president, and one of the leading theatre owners at Madison, Wisconsin, presided, and a number of instructive addresses featured the meeting.

Mr. Cohen spoke on the accomplishments of the national organization, showing where the same exceeded all expectations and constituted real protection and business insurance for the theatre owners. He complimented the officials of the Wisconsin state body on the wonderful efficiency of their organization.

A. J. Moeller told of the advances made by the department of music of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

M. J. O'Toole spoke on public service work in the motion picture theatre and told how this helpful co-operation with the public and all official and civic bodies was now being maintained.

Mr. Cohen and his party are on their way now to Excelsiors Spring, where the annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri will be held Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of this week.

HAMMOND THEATRE
Harry N. Lamere, Manager

Ludlow, Vt., Oct. 16, 1922.

Chalmers Publishing Co.,
New York City.

Gentlemen: Enclosed find check for copy of Richardson's 4th Edition Handbook.

Had a copy of the third edition until June 1 of this year. Since then I have been "lost." Expect I'll find myself when I receive the fourth edition, which I understand is a wonder. Say, what would we country fellows do without Richardson's department and his handbook?

Yours truly,

Bachmeyer Wins

Mae Murray Contest Nets $1,000 For Cincinnati Man

The $1,000 prize given by M. H. Hoffman, vice-president and general manager of Tiffany Productions, Inc., to the Metro district manager doing the greatest amount of business in Mae Murray's pictures, in proportion to territorial quota, was won by W. C. Bachmeyer, of Cincinnati, and the branch manager's prize of $500 was won by C. E. Almy, of the Metro exchange in Cleveland, Mr. Hoffman advised the Metro home offices this week.

The Tiffany productions for Metro, presented by Robert Z. Leonard, are "Peacock Alley," "Fascination" and "Broadway Rose."

As Jacob Fabian Sees It

Jacob Fabian, president of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., of New Jersey, and second vice-president of First National, is a showman of much experience. What he has to say here is short and to the point. Read:

* * *

The season will be prosperous for those exhibitors who have the big productions.

* * *

The outlook is good because people have the money for real attractions, and there should be more this season than ever before.

Business conditions are becoming better and people are reacting more quickly to the better pictures.

As an exhibitor, I would say that the prosperity of the industry depends on the producer making better and bigger pictures. The exhibitor wants the best. Last season he was miles ahead of the producer in his readiness to handle the best.

* * *

Give the public what they want and they are sure to respond. Please tell certain producers to stop bluffing and make real attractions. What makes a real attraction? The question always starts a fight, so I'll stop.

Files Answer to Suit

Says Action Was Brought Merely to Annoy Defendant

Answer to the suit brought in the New York Supreme Court, by the Elwood Amusement Corporation, against the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., Mitchell H. Mark Realty Corporation, and David P. Howells, Inc., which seeks to prevent defendants exhibiting the motion picture version of a German drama "Samurun," has been filed in the County Clerk's office by David P. Howells, Inc.

The answer avers the literary work or story on which the motion picture is based was published in various parts of Germany, and that it was "abandoned to the common and public use and enjoyment," and that the Associated First National acquired the rights to present it in motion picture form here in a legal and legitimate manner. On the other hand, the answer charges that the Famous Players-Lasky corporation in the fall of 1920, attempted to purchase in Germany the rights which Associated had succeeded in purchasing, and failing in this, endeavored to get Associated to give up its rights to the Famous Players Corporation, or go into a scheme for the sharing of the profits of the picture with them, threatening it is alleged if Associated failed to do this that litigation would follow over the rights, which offers and threats it is alleged Associated ignored.

It is further charged by Benjamin F. Howells, who makes the affidavit, that the Famous Players, which he says owns the stock of the Elwood Amusement Corporation, caused its subsidary to purchase the alleged rights of Nathan Burkan, the lawyer to the picture, and got them to take the assignment "merely to harrass, annoy and revenge itself on these defendants." The answer finally holds defendants' motion picture production in no way, or manner resembles the production of plaintiff, except that both productions are based upon the same ancient legends, and therefore, the Howells concern asks that the complaint of the Elwood concern be dismissed.

Goes Into Real Estate

C. H. Christie Forms Company in Los Angeles

Charles H. Christie, prominent motion picture producer, heads the latest real estate organization to be formed in Los Angeles. It will be known as the Christie Realty Company, and consolidates into one organization all of the realty activities in which Mr. Christie and associates have been engaged for the past two years.

The purposes of the new organization, capital of which is already subscribed and paid in, are to acquire and develop property in Hollywood and adjacent territory on a large scale.

Powers Goes Abroad

P. A. Powers, managing director of the Film Booking Offices of America, sailed on Friday, October 13, for Europe, on the S. S. Berengaria. Mr. Powers will be gone several weeks.

Rules Against Tax

Judge Holds City's Tax On Theatre Tickets is Illegal

The cities of the Province of Saskatchewan have no right to collect an amusement tax through local theatres, according to a decision handed down by Justice Ousley at Moose Jaw, Sask., on October 3, in an action entered by Walter Clarke, an exhibitor of Moose Jaw, to have the municipal by-law passed by Moose Jaw to collect a tax on theatre tickets declared invalid and set aside.

This important decision constitutes a victory for the moving picture exhibitors of the Province.

Against Censorship

Organized Labor Wants it Banned at Coming Election

Condemnation of moving picture censorship is contained in a pamphlet issued by the Allied Printing Trades Council of New York State, which urges organized labor to stand solidly behind the Democratic candidates in the coming New York State elections.

The Council urges that all theatre owners use their screens to support the Democratic ticket, stating that theatre owners will greatly benefit by a Republican defeat, as the latter party, the Council states, has refused to make any mention of censorship in its platform, while on the other hand the Democratic party is making an issue of the matter, and is directly arrayed against censorship.

Ben H. Grimm, who left the Universal in New York last March to organize the publicity and advertising departments of the European Motion Picture Company, Ltd., Universal's British distributors, is soon to return to New York.

Talmadge Biography

A new volume, "The Talmadge Sisters," written by Mrs. Margaret Talmadge, mother of the three stars, is now available. With the purpose of narrating the struggle and final success of Norma, Constance and Natalie the book is said to be a rarely truthful account. Henry Bee Company is the publisher.

On Way West

Having completed his business at the home offices in New York, Myron Selznick, president of Selznick Pictures Corporation, and personally in charge of production at the West Coast studios, is now on his way back to Los Angeles.

Picture Engineers Hold Big Rochester Meeting

Many Important and Illuminating Papers Are Read

THE Society of Motion Picture Engineers held its regular fall meeting at Powers Hotel, Rochester, N. Y., October 9 to 12 inclusive. There was an attendance of about sixty representative men. The program was remarkably complete, both as regards instructive papers, discussion and entertainment.

Among the prominent ones present were Frank Renbusch, George K. Spoor of the Spoor Carbon Company; Charles Dentelbeck, supervisor of protection Paramount Theatres, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., A. J. Campe, past-president of the Society; William V. D. Kelley, who has done so very much to make nature available to us in natural colors; Max Mayer whom you all know; Dr. Henry Phelps Gage, who is a firm believer in prizma condensers; R. S. Peck, director of exhibits and publicity bureau, Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, Canada; R. M. Hill, theatre equipment engineers for the United States Army and George Blair, without whom no meeting would be complete.

Among the exceedingly interesting demonstrations staged before the meeting was one by Sander Stark entitled "The Demonstration Model for Showing Lens and Condenser Action in the Motion Picture Projector," another by L. A. Jones and J. I. Crabtree showing a new sensitometer for the determination of exposure in positive printing, still another was "Problems in Processing of Motion Picture Film" by M. Briefer, and the demonstration of a new film waxing device now being perfected by the Eastman Company. This device deposits a very thin line of hot wax along each line of perforations which it is claimed spreads out under pressure of the tension shoes and does the trick effectively.

Among the papers, all of which were well received, was one by Dr. Herman Kellmer entitled a "Motion Analyzer," another by A. D. Hitchens, entitled, "Method of Using Miniatures and Models for the Introduction of Extra Detail In Motion Pictures," a most interesting paper by Carl Anderson, entitled, "Pedagogical Motion Pictures," a paper entitled, "A Split Aspherical Condensing Lens," by Frank Benford, and another by F. H. Richardson, entitled, "Practical Effects of Distance of Projection and Projection Angle on the Screen Image."

The election of officers resulted as follows: president, L. C. Porter, re-elected; vice-president, Dr. Herman Kellner, Rochester; secretary, P. M. Abbott, New York City; treasurer, W. D. Cooke, New York City; member Board of Governors, Dr. Mees and William V. D. Kelley.

In the line of entertainment, the meeting was something even more than a success. First, they took us through the plant of the Bausch and Lomb Optical Company in which we saw a huge pot of white hot stuff which we were assured was glass. They pulled the pot out from a furnace, dumped the contents on a huge steel slab and ran a steel cylinder over it, squashing the mess out into a gigantic sheet of red hot liquid which was then shoved into a furnace. After this stunt, the assembled multitude walked and walked and walked and walked. Personally, the writer is firmly convinced that the Bausch and Lomb plant extends over half the state of New York, and that, judging by what he saw, the company ought to sell lenses by the bushel basket, instead of by the dozen.

The process of grinding was intensely interesting, and very different from anything we of the outer world had imagined.

The trip through the plant, taken as a whole, was very interesting.

We were also taken on an instructive tour of the new Eastman Theatre. The result of our observation will be given in due time in the projection department.

The evening of the second day the members were entertained at a splendidly staged dinner at the Rochester Club, followed by dancing.

One of the afternoons was devoted to a trip through Eastman Kodak Park, where the cameras we all love so much and swear at so enthusiastically when they go wrong, are made. We were shown through the entire plant, and, I believe, saw more red-light than any of us ever imagined existed. We viewed the washing of the cotton, the disintegrating of the silver into silver salts, the making of the film and its perforating and packing. We went through the research laboratories and saw therein more wonders than Solomon of old ever dreamed of. Incidentally in the aforesaid laboratories we witnessed a demonstration of a lamp said to produce 52,000 candle-power. I tried to secure a tallow candle with which to check up this statement, but none could be found.

The next meeting place will be Atlantic City next Spring.

F. H. RICHARDSON.

How Long Should a Feature Be?

Next week we will publish a few of the interesting letters received from exhibitors in response to the recent editorial discussing the length of features and the problems faced by exhibitors in balancing their programs.

One exhibitor writes: "You have certainly struck a live subject."

That's what it is. Watch for the letters next week!

Seek Co-operation

Cinema Club Calls Conference With Better Films Advocates.

Believing that the motion picture industry can be benefited by co-operation of those within and without its ranks the Cleveland Cinema Club called a convention at the Hotel Statler, Cleveland, Oct. 6 and 7, inviting the advocates of better films of Ohio and adjacent territory to a conference.

The Cleveland Cinema Club has been noted in the past for its unflagging interest in the industry and its constructive policies, according to Sam Bullock, one of Cleveland's prominent exhibitors, and its calling of the conference is evidence of the capable manner in which it constantly is on the lookout for opportunities to bring the public and the industry into closer co-operation, it is stated.

Among the prominent speakers at the conference were Mrs. Elmer G. Derr, president Cleveland Cinema Club; Sam Bullock, state organizer Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and M. J. O'Toole, chairman committee on public service, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Inquiry Received

The Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C., has issued the statement that it has received an inquiry (No. 3950) from Czechslovakia for American motion picture films. It is also stated that a film agency is likewise desired for American offerings.

Middle West Mayors Welcome Theatre Owners' Co-operation

Excelsior Springs, Mo., October 17, 1922.

(By Wire to Moving Picture World)

THEATRE owners, public officials and leaders in civic bodies in Kansas City, Mo., and Kansas City, Kansas, tendered a reception to Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, at the banquet hall in Hotel Baltimore, Kansas City, last night.

Mr. Cohen was accompanied on his visit to the Kansas City and Missouri exhibitors by General Manager A. J. Moeller and M. J. O'Toole, chairman of the Public Service Committee of the national organization. Lawrence M. Goldman, of Kansas City, and secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri presided at the speaking exercises which followed the dinner. One of the principal speakers was Mayor Frank Cromwell, of Kansas City, Mo. He praised the picture theatre as a community center and said that when he was running for office all of the newspapers in Kansas City opposed him and that he brought his messages on reform city government to the people through the screens in the theatre, and won out by a good-sized majority. He told the exhibitors that he believed they were real community leaders and should assert this prerogative in helping to advance the interests of their respective communities. He welcomed the co-operation of the theatre owners in everything that would advance the welfare of Kansas City and his people, and said they were giving wonderful service in this connection.

Mayor Burton, of Kansas City, Kansas, declared that he considered the picture theatre screen one of the greatest mediums of expression known and said that it was destined to do more to advance the interests of nation, state and community than any other publicity feature now in the service of the people.

Both mayors spoke against censorship of the screen. Mrs. Ess, former president of the Women's Federated Clubs of Missouri, and a leader in women's activities in the state, made an excellent speech in which she congratulated Mr. Cohen and other theatre owners on the advances made and believed the theatre owners acting with the public were the best censors.

Mr. Cohen made an interesting address, in which he told of the activities of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and the different state bodies.

Mr. O'Toole spoke on public service work in the theatre and Mr. Moeller on movie chats, the screen organ of the national body. He also told of the great advances made by the organization in its music department.

Laemmle Sees No Reason for America to Fear German Competition

WHERE there is a scarcity of beautiful women how can you expect great pictures to be produced? That, virtually, is Carl Laemmle's reassurance to American producers who are afraid of the popularity of German productions in this country.

After spending three and a half months in Europe with a view toward making pictures abroad, Mr. Laemmle expresses his belief in the impracticability not only of such a plan, but of Germany making pictures for the American market.

"They are trying to make up for the lack of physical charm of their players by using elaborate costumes," he explained, in a recent analysis of the foreign policy. "Because a few German pictures, made good here not because of, but in spite of the use of period costumes, the impression seems to prevail over there that this is the type of attraction which American audiences prefer.

"While I was not there for the purpose of studying foreign productions, I had occasion to see a number of examples of what they are making, presumably for the American market. I can honestly say that with the exception of one production, 'Peter, the Great,' made by some one with an unpronounceable Russian name, I did not see anything that will appeal to American tastes.

"In Vienna, Eddie Laemmle, my nephew, tried for three weeks to assemble a cast for a picture which he hoped to make there. It was impossible. He could find none of the types that are popular here. On my travels, I noticed only one actress attractive enough to be a success on the American screen. I expect to sign her up a little later."

Mr. Laemmle states that England is by far the most advantageous of the foreign countries for making American pictures. Within a year he expects to start the reproduction of an English novel, using a cast composed partly of Americans, and the rest, British. The use of English settings, he believes, will lend an atmosphere that will be novel and popular, and the English actors and clothes, he thinks, will be an additional attraction.

F. E. Woods Resigns

Leaves Famous Players to Head Own Production Unit

Notice of the resignation of Frank E. Woods from the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation was received Thursday. A telegram to the New York office of the corporation from Jesse L. Lasky in Hollywood, confirmed the report. Mr. Woods was supervisor in charge of the Paramount West Coast Studios. His resignation will take effect November 11.

Mr. Lasky's telegram said: "By mutual consent there has been arranged for Mr. Frank E. Woods to terminate his employment with the Famous Players Corporation, November 11.

"I understand that Mr. Woods is planning to head a production unit of his own. In leaving this corporation, after years of faithful service, he has the best wishes of myself and my associates."

Two More Join

First National and D. W. Griffith, Inc., Come Into M. P. P. D. A.

The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., added two more to its list of members Monday when D. W. Griffith, Inc., and Associated First National, Inc., were elected to membership.

This brings the total number of units in the organization to 13, leaving only two or three of the largest still outside its ranks. Those which have not joined, but which, it is understood the organization hopes some time to enumerate on its list, are United Artists and Pathe, and probably Hodkinson.

Butler Tells What He Thinks About Film Making of Future

ELLIS PARKER BUTLER, author, has been making a painstaking, unbiased study of motion pictures, says First National. From that study he has evolved some ideas which will prove of great interest to persons in every branch of the industry, it is stated.

Mr. Butler believes that neither those who consider the motion picture a method of showing a drama on the screen nor those who consider it a method of presenting a story by means of action pictures are right. He sees the motion picture as a new method of conveying one man's ideas to another man, whatever those ideas may be. Speech, he points out, is one method, printed pages are another method; the motion picture is a new mechanical method of telling a story that was formerly spoken or printed.

Recently Mr. Butler witnessed a special showing of Constance Talmadge in "East is West," a First National attraction, and was so delighted with it that he has been invited to tell the people of America about "East is West" in a series of advertisements to run six consecutive weeks in the Saturday Evening Post. This will be the first time that an author of national reputation has written the National advertising for a motion picture.

In view of his great interest in motion pictures and the fact that he has made a deep study of them he was asked to outline his impressions of the screen as he has found it.

"The thing desired by all," he said, "seems to be some sort of picture that will suit every man, woman and child that happens to enter a motion picture theatre. Some folks seem to think that 'movies' are hopeless and helpless because every picture produced does not please every man, woman and child that sees it. I can't agree with that.

"I do not like to say what the outcome will be, in pictures. It is probable that in time certain producers will make one kind of picture and be known as doing so, and another producer make only another kind and be known for making that kind. Each will have his own faithful audience. Then certain houses will show one type of picture and another lot of houses will show another kind. If I like 'dime novel' pictures I'll go to the 'dime novel' picture house. And if I like more intellectual stuff, or finer acting, I'll go to the house where I can be sure to see that.

"Already this separation into types is under way, I think. There are small theatres that show only the blood and thunder pictures. There are houses that make a point of showing on Saturday afternoons only pictures and comedies that strongly appeal to young boys and girls—clean, vigorous pictures of the strenuous action sort, with no sex problems or complex social themes.

"What I mean is that pictures will probably fall into groups, just as the magazines have."

No Let-Up in Fight on Censorship

ONE of the plans adopted to draw public attention to the fight against moving picture censorship, which comes before the people on referendum vote on November 7, is embodied in a card that is being generally distributed throughout Massachusetts. On one side is a cartoon, representing a "censor," clad in Puritanical garb, with an exaggerated nose that appears capable of poking into everybody's business, wading through a sea of mud that is labeled, "political mire," and with quantities of this mire dripping from his hands.

On the reverse side is the following: "Do you want one man in Massachusetts, politically appointed, to decide for you what pictures you may see? The censorship folks say it is unnecessary to censor their Grand Opera, with seats at $10 each. But these same stories in motion pictures at popular prices must be censored and picked out by them. The opening attack on Free Speech and Free Press is being started in the proposed censorship of the movies. The American public is the real censor for the motion picture, just as it is for the press and the pulpit. Let the people pick their own pictures. Vote NO on Referendum No. 3, November 1, 1922."

The Boston Telegram has now joined in the campaign against movie censorship and in a recent editorial it declares that "fundamentally it goes to the very roots of American representative government and American independence. There is a limit to all things, and when that limit is reached, there is bound to be a reaction more damaging than any degree of freedom in the first place. The limit in the question of censorship is reached. Let the movies alone."

Monte Blue Injured

Runaway Horse Drags Moving Picture Star 200 Feet

News has just reached New York from San Juan, Porto Rico, of an accident in which Monte Blue, well known picture star, received painful injuries. Mr. Blue has a prominent part in the cast of the second production which Edward MacManus is making for Associated Exhibitors.

Mr. Blue was tied to the saddle-horn and was dragged two hundred feet before the rider could bring the animal under control. No bones were broken but the actor suffered severely from shock.

Changes Announced

Hodkinson Tells of Additions to Its Personnel

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces the following changes in the personnel of the organization throughout its territorial offices.

Miss R. A. McNulty becomes office manager of the Boston Exchange, succeeding J. M. Cummings, who has resigned. Mr. C. M. Miller entered his duties as office manager of the Dallas branch, while H. L. Bozeman becomes identified with a similar position with the New Orleans branch. Mrs. F. Baker becomes office manager of the Oklahoma City branch.

Plans Discussed

Discussion relative to tentative plans for the production of films for schools and colleges was held at the headquarters of the Motion Picture Producers' and Distributors' Organization, New York City, Thursday.

Among others at the meeting were Will H. Hays, and Dr. William B. Owen, president of the National Education Association.

Hamrick, Showman 14 Years, Now a Power in Northwest

AN interesting figure is that of John Hamrick, an old timer who has grown with the industry until he represents a power in the Northwest. Fourteen years ago in Kansas City, John Hamrick, then a builder, began to see a future for films. There was but one company in town, the Yale Amusement Company, which operated two houses.

Selecting the most prominent available location, at Twelfth and Walnut streets, Mr. Hamrick set three shifts to work remodeling a space 18 feet by 77 feet. At the end of that week the Sapphire Theatre opened for business. It was complete even to the electric sign. The Sapphire seated 184 persons and 5 cents was the admission charge, for two single reel pictures.

In those days overhead was not what it is now, but—neither were admissions. A piano was the sole music accompaniment. His doorman was also the soloist. One unhappy day, the soloist developed a cold and could not sing. Mr. Hamrick admits to considerable anxiety and difficulty trying to secure another singer to put the show over. It seemed useless to try to do business without the illustrated song number.

After about a year, Mr. Hamrick sold the Sapphire and secured a location at Budd Park, where he erected the first "tent" show in Kansas City. Benches and a sawdust floor seemed to appeal to the summer amusement seekers, and he did a land office business for two summers. One day Mr. Hamrick put on a three-reel show. Comment was not long in coming. On his way out a steady patron laid a friendly hand on his shoulder.

"Your show's good, John, but it's too long," he advised.

At the end of his second tent show season, Hamrick sold out and built a frame theatre on the next lot. He called it the Budd Park Theatre. From this location he moved closer in, built the World Theatre at Eighth and Highland. This was a large house, having 600 seats. He closed during the summer months, operating a sort of tent "annex" on an adjacent lot. He operated the World until 1911.

Because an exhibitor could not charge over a nickle and stay in Kansas City, Mr. Hamrick went west. He heard that a few 10 cent shows were operating successfully in Seattle, sold his Kansas City house and moved to Seattle. Here he built the Queen Anne Theatre at Queen Anne avenue and Boston street.

In 1913, Mr. Hamrick sold out and again moved to a downtown location, building the Colonial Theatre at Fourth avenue and Pike street. During 1916 he sold the Colonial, remodeling the Melbourne, another downtown house, which he rechristened the Rex.

In 1919 there came an excellent opportunity to sell the Rex, which he did, subsequently building the beautiful Blue Mouse Theatre at Fifth avenue and Pike street, which he has operated now for over two years.

Since the Seattle Blue Mouse has proven such a success, Mr. Hamrick has bought and remodeled the Globe in Portland, which became the Second Blue Mouse; the Apollo, Tacoma, also rechristened, and built and recently opened the Astoria Blue Mouse. In the latter city, Si Danz, who operated the Liberty and Star Theatres, sold out to the Real Arts Theatre Co., of which Mr. Hamrick is managing director.

'Twas Just Thirty Years Ago Finley Showed Dewey Parade

HOW many exhibitors today can go back to the days when the Dewey Parade was flashed on the screen, or when the Serpentine Dance, or the Bowery pictures, or Fox and Lewis in their kissing scene, aroused all sorts of enthusiasm?

Not many, although Albany, N. Y., includes one man, William Finley, who, thirty years ago, traveled over New York State and with a sort of home made machine, patterned after the Pathe product, showed in churches, halls or barns.

Mr. Finley, with an inventive turn of mind, and with the assistance of a man by the name of Newton, decided that he could construct a machine quite as good as Pathe and still not infringe upon the patented rights.

The machine was produced and for years Finley, with a one-horse rig and kalsomine tank strapped behind, toured the state, charging 35 cents admission to an evening's show, in which he was not only the operator and ticket-taker but also the singer for the illustrated songs.

"Those were certainly great days," said Mr. Finley. "Traveling with a horse, I was never able to bill more than two or three towns in advance, but even at that I managed to generally pack the places because of the very novelty of the motion picture at that time.

"The reels ran anywhere from 25 to 50 feet or so, and the program included a serpentine dancer, a railroad picture and a Bowery picture. Of course, when we came to showing in the churches, we cut out the serpentine dance and the Bowery pictures.

"The Dewey Parade was a big money maker for us at that time. It never failed to score a hit. The motion picture was so new at that time, particularly in the rural communities, that one was confronted by the argument that it was only 'another magic lantern show.'

"We used to use a sugar barrel or a bag to catch the film. Instead of a sprocket, our machine had a sort of clutch wheel with an eccentric which served to kick along the film in pretty good shape.

"As a general thing, we used to give them two or three songs during the evening. For instance, 'Sweet Adeline" and 'Goodbye, Little Girl, Goodbye,' were prime favorites those days, and when it came to the chorus we used to have the crowd right with us.

"There certainly have been some mighty big changes in the motion picture business since those days, thirty years ago," soliloquized Mr. Finley as he went back to his present day duties.

What Do You Think About It?

LAST week we gave you the story of John Karzin's life, from the time in 1905 he quit the restaurant business to become an exhibitor, up to the present day. It was interesting, wasn't it?

This week, on this page, we give you brief biographies of John Hamrick, now of Seattle, fourteen years an exhibitor, and William A. Butler, who fifteen years ago sold out his milk business and began exhibiting in Philadelphia. Two successful, worthy showmen! Also the reminiscenses of William Finley, who, thirty years ago, traveled New York State with a home-made machine and showed in churches, halls and barns.

Now don't you think that these sketches are exceptionally good exhibitor reading? We here on Moving Picture World think they are, and we'd like to have your opinion on the subject. Also, we'd like to have your exhibitor history, briefly written, for this series. Turn about is fair play, isn't it? If you enjoy the stories of others, why not let them enjoy yours?

Who is the Daddy of Them All? We'll find him, whether he's in the smallest village in Michigan or in a bustling Eastern metropolis. But you've got to help us.

Here's to find the oldest exhibitor, in years of service, in the United States. The senior, simon-pure, dyed-in-the-wool exhibitor. And when we find him, here's to him, the Daddy of Them All!—S. S.

Showman 15 Years

William A. Butler, who fifteen years ago sold out his milk business and entered the motion picture field with a 250 seat house, the Arcade Palace, at 2926 Richmond street, is today one of the leading and highly respected exhibitors of Philadelphia.

During Mr. Butler's career he has owned and operated the Arcade, Apollo, Clearfield and Edgemont Theatres, all of which he still retains as a fitting tribute to his progressiveness and success.

Mr. Butler entered the exhibiting business in 1906 and is still going strong. He has maintained an independent attitude and will continue this policy until he retires.

Pioneer Houses of the Early Days

These are the theatres that the Middle West boasted when the industry was young. John Karzin is the man standing second from the left in the door of the World Dream, which gave Karzin his start away back in 1906. On the left is Charles Schaefer, "head spieler" and advertising manager; next from the right is George Mills, and on the extreme right is "Doc," whose last name is not recalled on the roster of of the industry's famous, but who in the old days was also a "spieler," and a good one, too.

Atlanta Picture Houses Now Drawing Increased Patronage

"The Valley of Silent Men," which was the feature picture at the Howard last week, played to good business, though it is the concensus of opinion that the picture would have been more of a box-office success had it not followed on the heels of a perfect deluge of "Frozen North" pictures—and, too, it came along the first week of cool weather Atlanta has had this winter.

At the Metropolitan, Mae Murray in "Broadway Rose" played to good business, with an excellently built up musical score, prepared by Buel B. Risinger, and offered by the orchestra under his direction. Kinograms and a Christie comedy completed the program.

Bebe Daniels, in "Pink Gods," drew excellent business at the Rialto, the bill being completed by a Sunshine comedy called "Puppy Love" and a musical score, arranged by Charles Gesser, director of the Rialto Orchestra, which featured some very weird and fantastic African themes.

The Criterion Theatre closed forever, on Saturday, October 7, in a blaze of glory, with a return engagement of "The Storm" as the feature picture, and Lloyd Hamilton's "The Rainmaker" as an appetizer. It was an excellent week's bill.

The Tudor Theatre played three feature pictures last week—"What's Your Hurry?" to two days' good business; "The Sheik's Wife," to two days of exceptionally poor business, and "The Long Chance," starring Henry Walthall, to two days of unusually good business. Manager Jackson reports that Henry Walthall, despite his long absence from the screen, has by no means lost his grip on his public, and that his work in "The Long Chance" was quite as good as anything he has done in the past—which is high praise indeed.

William R. Bedell, manager of the Rialto Theatre, is all puffed up over the fact that he has booked "When Knighthood Was In Flower" for the first week in November.. He states aloud, and doesn't care who knows it, that this is one of the finest things that has ever come to the Silver-Sheet and he is planning to put it over big. It will be played as a regular two-performance-a-day show, at a dollar top.

J. Wright Brown, formerly with Southern Enterprises, in the Jacksonville field, has come to Atlanta to take the place in the home office that was left vacant when Mr. Bedell took over the Rialto.

Willard C. Patterson, of the Metropolitan Theatre, exploited "Remembrance" in a very effective way—with a set of chimes mounted on the Italian balcony which overhangs the sidewalk in front of the Metropolitan and had a musician playing old familiar airs—with "Love's Old Sweet Song" predominating. Great stunt,—caught 'em going and coming. Pat's stunts usually do, however.

James Jackson, of the Tudor Theatre, is all pleased and everything, reason for same being that William Oldknow, "Jim's" friend and "boss" for many years, and owner of the Tudor, has returned from a much-needed vacation abroad, and has some great plans for the Tudor this winter.

Albert Hill, of Southern Enterprises, has taken the place in Jacksonville that was left vacant by the promotion to the home office of J. Wright Brown, who replaced William R. Bedell.

Another landmark in Atlanta is gone. Much to the regret of picture fans, and "native sons and daughters," the Criterion Theatre, which was one of the first worthwhile houses built in Atlanta, is no more. The site has been leased to the L. K. Liggett Drug stores, and extensive alterations have been started by Charles Wimberly, builders. "The Criterion has outlived its usefulness as a picture theatre," said Willard Patterson, with very real regret when questioned about it.

Sol Samuels, who manages the Alamo No. 1, reports that business is excellent. He is running a well-chosen program of westerns, and comedies, and is most optimistic about the coming season.

George Kimball, of the Bonita Theatre, is not satisfied with putting on an excellent tab show—the current week's attraction being called "Laughter-Land"—but also runs a program of carefully selected pictures, and tries to always carry a Mack Sennett comedy if possible, for he says they always mean good business.

W. T. Murray, who guides the destinies of the Alamo No. 2, has booked "The Prisoner of Zenda," which has already played one week's engagement here, for a two or perhaps four day run, and is planning to put it over with a lot of pep.

John Thomas, of the Vaudette, insists that he is not related to the famous singer, John Charles Thomas, but evidently there is a great deal to be said about Manager Thomas, for the personnel of his house-force seem devoted to him.

The Howard Theatre has one of the best trained house forces of any theatre in Atlanta—and this is said in all sincerity and with due respect to the other houses. The Howard's house force is composed entirely of boys—there are two young men who alternate as ticket-takers, and the ushers range in size from two "demi-tasse" youngsters who don't look a minute over eight, or ten, at the most, to boys of sixteen and eighteen. They are buttoned into the smartest of dark-colored uniforms with quantities of silver buttons shining, and they are given regular Boy Scout training to teach them to stand erect, throw their shoulders back, and walk briskly. They are very smart, painstakingly courteous, obliging—in fact, to be attended to by them adds pleasure to going to the Howard, and they reflect much credit on Manager De Sales Harrison, and the Howard, as well.

Sam Hayes, for some time associated with Goldwyn Film Exchange here, has moved his pleasant smile and likable personality from the Row, and has gone over to the Lyric Theatre, where he holds a responsible position. He is very popular and everybody is glad to hear of his promotion, while admitting that he will be missed.

Manager Darley, of the Alpha Theatre, continues his program of "action-pictures," including westerns and serials. His Saturday morning matinees for the children rival in popularity those of the Howard Theatre, and the bill is as carefully selected for these shows as for the regular performances, and he has won the enthusiastic support of all the parents on his side of town. Which is a valuable asset indeed.

Baltimore Exhibitors Fight Increased Tax Assessments

A campaign to oppose the increased tax assessments that have been made on the business and theatrical properties located on Lexington street, between Charles and Eutaw streets, was to be considered at a meeting to be held by those interested on the Century Theatre Roof on Thursday afternoon, October 12, at 2 o'clock.

Charles E. Whitehurst, president of the Whitehurst Theatrical Interests, is heavily involved in the new assessment as three of the largest theatres in his circuit are located on Lexington street in the district where the reassessments have been made. He has loaned the Century Roof for the meeting and will be present at it.

All the business interests in the district interested have been notified by David Bachrach, photographer. Many appeals have been made to them before the Appeal Tax Court and most have been concluded and appeals from its decision must be taken to the State Tax Commission. A full record of reassessments on theatres will be given in the next story.

A petition has been filed in the Circuit Court of Baltimore City by William J. E. Diven, a stockholder in the Circle Theatre Corporation, of Baltimore, asking that a receiver be appointed and that an accounting be made. It is claimed in the petition that the officers and directors of the company have acted in bad faith and "allowed the securities and money of the establishment to be squandered and misappropriated."

According to the partial inventory of the property of the late Jacob W. Hook, who was interested in the Ambassador Theatre project, he left nearly $250,000. Mr. Hook was president of the Old Town National Bank and the Old Town Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association. He possessed 30 shares of Century Theatre preferred stock and 29 shares of its common, valued at $1,800.

Through the courtesy of Charles E. Whitehurst, president of the Garden Theatre Company and Louis A. DeHoff, booking manager of the Whitehurst Theatrical Interests, a moving picture performance was given at the Garden Theatre on Saturday morning, October 7, for newsboys with the Evening Sun newsboys' band furnishing the music

Finds 30 Cents in Pocket So Can't Be a Millionaire

Like many other newspaper announced picture projects, another million and a half moving picture promotion, announced in the newspapers last week, has been blown to the four winds.

On October 6, in the afternoon papers, and also in the Saturday morning papers, there appeared stories stating that James Carrigan, operator of the Aristo Theatre, at Second and A streets, a suburban house, had deals on for leasing of property at Fourth and Jefferson street, extending through from Green to Jefferson, for erection of a theatre to cost around $1,500,000, including lease costs.

However, on Saturday afternoon, newspapers carried a story in which Carrigan gave out a dictated statement reading, in part, as follows:

"I got up this morning and found myself a millionaire, but I found only 30 cents in my pocket. I always found that the newspaper reporters are a smart sort of people, but to write that Carrigan is a millionaire, prosperous, etc., they are surely on the wrong track.

"I have been in the show business all my life, and I have never seen that kind of money; sometimes I have eaten chicken, but the majority of the time it has been bean soup, and I have found very few beans in it.

"So please be kind enough to leave me in peace. By you advertising me on this basis I might lose the Aristo Theatre, because Walter Kohn, Max L. Simons, and also Cary Tabb, will have the impression that I am a 'high-flier' and have an exaggerated ego and that I own Louisville, Ky."

Some local interests believe that Carrigan upon finding that news of his plan had leaked out, decided to block the news, for fear that his deal might be checked. Others believe that it was as Carrigan said, merely a pipe dream from the start. The idea appears to be sound basically, only that the proposed location appears to be a little too far north of the center of things in Louisville.

It doesn't pay to leave watches and valuables in clothing hung up in locker rooms, closets, etc., about theatres. This will be testified to by Emil Greenberg, of the Kentucky Theatre, Louisville, who reported to the police authorities, that his watch and chain was lifted from clothing hung in a closet at the theatre.

Moving picture theatres of Western Kentucky are being used extensively just now by the tobacco growers who are organizing a pool or association of dark tobacco growers, similar to that of the Burley association in Central Kentucky, which has been very successful. At Paris, Tenn., the Dixie Theatre could have used a building stretcher recently in taking care of the jam of tobacco growers who came to that house to hear the organizers of the pool talk.

The Kentucky Theatre, Louisville, which opened for business on Oct. 8, 1921, with its first show, is celebrating its first anniversary this week, using the "Four Horsemen," as the attraction. This theatre has done very well second run material at popular prices. It has booked for showing such pictures as "The Eternal Flame," "Her Gilded Cage," "Nice People," "Fool's Paradise," "Blood and Sand," and "Grandma's Boy."

Announcement was made in Louisville on October 9, of an increase from $6,000 to $12,000 in the capital stock of the Educational Film Exchange of Kentucky and Tennessee, which has filed amended articles. The officers are Col. Fred Levy, President; G. A. Skinner, F. W. Hammons, and Lee L. Goldberg.

It is reported that the Gayety Theatre, on Jefferson, between Third and Fourth street, may be turned into a picture house.

The Jefferson Theatre, Louisville, formerly the Buckingham, after a bad career the past few years with pictures, burlesque, vaudeville, etc., has been turned into a boxing show house, a permanent squared ring having been installed, and seating arrangements changed materially, so that a better view of the ring is to be had.

Simon Switow, nephew of M. Switow, prominent theatre owner of Kentucky and Indiana, was married on Oct. 6, to Miss Francis Marcoffsky, of Louisville. Simon has been active for years in the management of picture houses and aiding his uncle in handling a string of houses.

C. H. Bean Is Re-elected

The questionnaire of the New Hampshire Federation of Woman's Clubs on the subject of moving pictures was endorsed at the annual meeting of the Moving Picture Theatre Owners of New Hampshire in session at Manchester. It was voted by the theatre owners to communicate with different organizations of the state in regard to co-operating for the betterment of conditions for all concerned in the state. The Grange, Parent-Teachers' Association and the Federation of Women's Clubs will be conferred with.

President C. H. Bean, of Franklin, presided. At the annual election of officers the choice was as follows: President, C. H. Bean; first vice president, J. E. Charbonneau, Manchester; second vice president, Herbert B. Daley, Claremont; third vice president, A. A. Davis, Nashua; fourth vice president, Fred Couture, Rochester; secretary, C. A. Riva, Tilton; treasurer, A. L. Couture, Manchester.

Members of the executive committee are Michael White, Dover; J. B. Hallisey, Nashua; D. J. Adams, Concord; C. C. Baldwin, Keene; George Lapierre, Lakeport; A. M. Graves, Lebanon; George W. Yetton, Exeter.

An invitation was extended the exhibitors of Vermont to join the organization. The session attracted twenty theatre owners from all over the state.

New Clearance Schedule Pleases 'Frisco Showmen

Following a long period of controversy the San Francisco Film Exchange Board of Trade has adopted a clearance schedule for Greater San Francisco which is meeting with general approval from exhibitors. Downtown clearance against all theatres is now a minimum of twenty-eight days, except in the case of vaudeville houses, with a maximum clearance of sixty days from opening date where the subject is to be played one week.

A maximum clearance of 70 days is allowed where the subject plays more than one week and not over three weeks, and where the subject plays over three weeks a maximum clearance of forty-two days from closing date is allowed. The Mission and Fillmore districts are given a maximum of fourteen days clearance from their closing date against the Richmond, Polk Street, Haight Street, Castra, New Lyceum and Verdi districts.

Oakland first runs are protected against Berkeley and Alameda first runs only during Oakland first run. Berkeley and Alameda are permitted to start their runs the day following Oakland's closing run. Oakland first runs are granted a twenty-eight days clearance from opening day against Oakland's second runs, but after the second run no clearance is given. No exclusive contract shall be given anywhere in Greater San Francisco.

Herbert Rothchild, principal owner in the California, Imperial Granada and Portola Theatres, has returned from a business trip to New York.

S. S. Thellar, of Yreka, Cal., was a recent visitor in San Francisco and announced that changes were being made in his house there. He also plans to open a theatre at Marysville, Cal.

P. W. Brubeck, formerly of Modesto, Cal., has purchased the Majestic Theatre at Concord.

The Lincoln Theatre, San Francisco, has been remodeled and new equipment installed by G. A. Metcalfe. It was reopened recently by Enno Lion, of the Rex Theatre, Santa Clara, and E. Rosenthal, of the Washington Square Theatre.

C. A. Pendleton, of the Orland Theatre, Orland, Cal., was a recent visitor on Film Row and purchased considerable new equipment for this house.

The Auditorium Theatre at Grass Valley, Cal., has been closed for extensive alterations, including the removal of the balcony. The Strand Theatre is being used while remodeling work is in progress.

The Palmer Theatre Company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $25,000 by Robert A. McNeil, O. B. Attkinson, W. B. Attkinson and L. S. Hamm.

Who Can Answer This Question?

Editor, Regional News and Gossip:

Have just read your article, "The Daddy of Them All," in October 14 issue of Moving Picture World. Have been at this game ever since the time when we stood on the sidewalk (with a megaphone) and yelled: "See 'Em Walk."

Am interested to know the location of the first motion picture show and date of opening. If you have this information, will you please give it to me?

Thanking you in advance for this favor, I am,

Yours truly,

New 2,500 Seat House Opens in Kansas City to Big Trade

The formal opening of Kansas City's newest theatre, the Electric, 542-548 Minnesota avenue, was held October 19, according to A. F. Baker, manager of the new house. Details of the constructure of the $500,000 building, owned by Grubel Brothers, were rushed to completion, in order that everything might be ready for the grand opening.

The Electric is said to be unsurpassed for beauty in either of the Kansas Cities. With its velvet carpets, magnificent mirrors, soft-hued lights, perfect harmony of blues, grays and golds, the theatre will be a delight to patrons. The theatre has three floors, the main floor, mezzanine and balcony, in addition to a nursery in the basement.

The foyer is finished in walnut and Verdi antique marble, while the lobby is in pink Verona marble. The seating capacity is 2,500 persons and the seats are mahogany with blue leather cushions, and blue leather backs. The main drop curtain of blue plush is 26 by 40 feet and was designed by Carl Boller, theatre artist.

The large dome, twenty-five feet in diameter, is one of the distinct features of decoration. From it will be suspended at a drop of eighteen feet, a chandelier with 100 lights. Art glass is used in the ceiling through which soft tints of rose, blue and lavender will show. Numerous side lights in polychrome fixtures will be an added note of decoration.

The rest rooms, smoking room and offices are on the mezzanine floor. At the rear of the theatre will be eight steel-enclosed dressing rooms. Each will have running hot and cold water, and numerous shower baths for vaudeville performers and employes.

The architecture of the exterior of the theatre is Spanish Renaissance. The management has secured the services of a ten-piece orchestra. The theatre boasts the largest pipe organ in this territory. This organ will be in charge of E. Morril Morre, a conservatory graduate. The policy of the theatre will be first-run high class attractions, supplemented by vaudeville and musical specialties.

Colored girls will serve as ushers. They will wear uniforms of gray silk poplin, trimmed with French blue, in harmony with the color scheme of the interior.

The bandit, who twice within a fortnight led in highway attacks upon C. H. Burkey, owner of the Summit Theatre in Kansas City, was believed identified this week as C. W. Carlson, 21 years old. Burkey, who made the identification shortly after the arrest, said that Carlson was a participant in both of the robberies. The first robbery was September 18, when two men hopped on the running board of the theatre man's car and relieved him of $407 and a gold watch and then drove his car away. The second robbery was October 2, when Burkey was robbed of $115 and his car under almost exactly similar circumstances. A charge of highway robbery will be brought against Carlson.

Ed Smith of the Isis Theatre, at Russell, Kans., was visiting some of the exchanges this week.

Bert Byler, owner of the Bixman Theatre at Clinton, Mo., was seen rambling along the street of the exchange colony the other day.

Stanley Chambers, manager of the Miller, Palace, Regent and Princess Theatres at Wichita, made a trip to Kansas City last week in order to look over some of the season's latest releases. Chambers reports a good, steady business at his Wichita houses.

W. D. Fite, also of Wichita, was a visitor at some of the film exchanges last week. Mr. Fite has the Novelty Theatre.

H. L. Stout of the Liberty Theatre, Ft. Scott, Kans., was calling on "Doc" Cook, business manager of the M. P. T. O., of Kansas, last week.

R. V. Turner, who has the Panama Theatre at Burlingame, Kans., paid a call on the various exchanges this week. Mr. Turner hardly ever gets to Kansas City, but when he does he makes all the rounds.

Jack Gross, manager of the El Dorado Theatre at Eldorado, Kans., broke into the editorial column of that town's leading daily paper recently. The lengthy editorial headed "El Dorado in the Movies," tells of the production of "Liquid Gold," a story of the oil fields. The editorial said that El Dorado owes its thanks to Jack Gross, who helped immensely with the multitude of details involved. The picture was produced in Kansas by the Chenoweth Film Corporation.

Exchange managers had the pleasure of a visit from Mrs. Wes Millington of the Crystal Theatre at Ottawa, Kans., last week.

Ben Levy of the Hippodrome Theatre, Joplin, Mo., made a trip to this city recently and booked some big attractions. Mr. Levy seldom gets to Kansas City because of the distance from Joplin.

John I. Saunders, Cheney Theatre, Cheney, Kans., was seen at the local Universal exchange this week.

Charles Gerald ("Pat") Argust, the live wire of the Rialto Theatre, Colorado Springs, Col., and Mrs. Anne Louise Funk were married on October 9. Sincere and hearty congratulations! They are spending their honeymoon at the Hotel McAlpin, New York City.

Bob Leonard of the Strand Theatre, Thirty-sixth and Troost, has taken over the Alamo, Thirty-fourth and Main streets. The Alamo has been closed since early summer.

"Grandma's Boy" is playing to large crowds at the Liberty Theatre, this city. Stanley Chambers of the Palace Theatre at Wichita, Kans., says that the picture played to capacity audiences at his house.

H. K. McAfee of the Liberty Theatre, Parson, Kans., secured a one-page newspaper tie-up on "Fascination," when the picture was running at his theatre. In addition to the tie-up, McAfee gained considerable publicity throughout the paper.

The Roanoke Theatre, a suburban house, recently bought by Bob Leonard, opened for the season last week. The theatre was closed during the summer. Mr. Leonard has had the house completely redecorated. The first attraction for the fall opening was "The Four Horsemen."

Tax Revenue Shows Bigger Business by Montreal Houses

A substantial increase in both the number of tickets sold for admission to amusements and in the amount of revenue through the tax in the City of Montreal during the past 12 months, as compared with the preceding 12 months, is noted in the official annual report of A. Bienvenue, superintendent of privileges and licenses at the Montreal City Hall, just issued. The report gives the statistics for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1922.

The amusement tax report for Montreal shows that the number of patrons at theatres and other places of amusement in the city during the past year was 17,089,585, this being the number of paid admissions only. The actual sum received in payment of the amusement tax in Montreal alone was $609,854. As the tax is collected on a 10 per cent. basis, as in the United States, it means that well over $6,000,000 was spent in amusements in Montreal during the year.

For the corresponding period of 12 months ending September 30, 1921, the number of paid admissions on which the amusement tax was collected totalled 16,422,927. This means that the combined attendance at shows during the past fiscal year was some 666,000 greater than for the previous year. The revenue through the amusement tax during the year 1920-1921, amounted to $449,475, which was $160,000 less than the revenue for the year just closed. This indicates that Montreal theatres secured greater combined patronage during the past year and also a greater box office receipts through the larger attendance than in the previous season.

According to the Quebec Provincial Law, half of the amusement tax returns from the City of Montreal is turned over to the Province for distribution under the Quebec Charities Act while the second half is retained by the civic administration. Out of the latter half, the city must pay for all cost of printing and providing tickets, collection and supervision, the balance of the city's share to be divided among various charitable organizations in Montreal.

The Century Theatre is the name of a brand new picture theatre that is nearing completion in Montreal. The new house, which will cost $100,000 when completed, will be operated with a suburban theatre policy. It is situated at Monk Boulevard and Cardinal street.

The many exhibitors of Montreal, fittingly observed the week of October 8 as "Go to Theatre Week," practically all of the local houses joining in the co-operative movement. Special references to the stunt were made in the newspaper and other advertising by the exhibitors, invitations being made by the managers to picture fans to see pictures that had been selected for the week.

The Manitoba Exhibitors' Association, at luncheon in Manitoba Hall, Winnipeg, Thursday, October 12, decided to proceed with arrangements for the staging of a "Go to Theatre Week" in Winnipeg in November. The association decided to invite Will H. Hays to visit Winnipeg during the celebration. G. de Grandcourt of the Fox Film Corporation, who is now located in Winnipeg, was appointed chairman of the committee to make arrangements for the special week.

The new Gaiety Theatre, Winnipeg, has been scheduled to open Saturday, October 21, under the management of Henry Morton, lessee, who also has been manager of the Monarch Theatre, Winnipeg. A large amount of money has been spent to make the Gaiety one of the most attractive downtown theatres in Winnipeg. Orchestral music is to be featured along with pictures.

Harry Dann, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Regina, Sask., has been appointed manager of the Pantages Theatres, Hamilton, Ontario. Dann is a former resident of Hamilton, having gone to the Canadian West only a year ago.

Geary Peebles, proprietor of the two picture theatres in Dauphin, Manitoba, was a recent visitor in Winnipeg, where he formerly conducted the Arlington Theatre.

Allen James, projection machine operator at the picture theatre in Blenheim, Ontario, fell only two feet from the branch of a fruit tree on October 7 and fractured both arms.

Labor Troubles Adjusted; Albany Patronage Increases

Exchange managers and exhibitors in the Albany section of New York State are doing a lot of smiling these days and as they smile, they visit the banks. Like a well known beverage, "there's a reason." After months of existing differences between labor unions and traction companies, matters have been adjusted in Albany, Schenectady and Troy, and the car shop strike, which played havoc with the motion picture theatres for a time, has also been adjusted, and nearly all the old hands are back at work.

North of here, in Corinth, Glens Falls, Fort Edward, Ticonderoga, Hadley, Watertown and other cities and villages, where International Paper company mills are located, the strike which started a year ago last May, while officially unsettled, has nevertheless reached a stage where mills are once more in operation and the sheckels are once more rolling in. A visit to every exchange in Albany, made this week, brought forth the statement that business this fall is far ahead of a year ago this time, and furthermore that each week shows a pick-up over the preceding week.

Every one of Albany's theatres reported excellent business this week and the same statement was forthcoming from theatre owners in Schenectady and Troy. In short, business is going ahead with an impulse that gives every evidence of attaining its old tme swing at the very opening of winter, and having attained that swing, that the theatres will enjoy prosperity throughout the winter when tens of thousands demand wholesome entertainment.

For the first time in several weeks, a prologue was offered patrons of the Mark Strand Theatre here last week in connection with the "Old Homestead." A quartette of local singers, attired in farmer togs, scored a big hit with capacity audiences.

Talk about a good feature picture helping out a vaudeville bill! Manager Joe Wallace of Proctor's Grand, is lavishing his praise over the crowds that were attracted by Harold Lloyd in "Grandma's Boy," which ran for the entire week and set the whole city to talking.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Regan, who run the Star at Greenwich, paid a visit to Albany last week and booked up some good features for the coming weeks.

There is a report to the effect that Edward Colligan has sold the theatre which bears his name in Carthage to the Schiner Theatrical Company, which has a chain of houses in Central and Western New York.

Fred Elliott, owner of the Clinton Square Theatre in Albany, having heavily advertised a week's feature, "What's Wrong With the Women," received the print in such shape that he was obliged to make a sudden change at the last moment.

F. W. Mansert, who runs the Rialto in Glens Falls, is qualifying in the Barney Oldfield class these days. A few days ago, he had occasion to make a quick run to one of the Albany exchanges. The trip was made by Mr. Mansert in about 90 minutes, or one-half the time which the ordinary motorist takes to cover the distance.

Following the lead of Fred Elliott, Samuel Suckno is now booking double features at the Albany Theatre and finding it a paying proposition.

Potsdam, Tupper Lake and Saranac Lake are in line for new picture theatres. The one in Potsdam will seat about 600 persons, and will cost about $25,000. The houses are being projected by Frank G. Pond of Malone, who has formed a corporation known as Pond's United Theatres, Inc., with a capitalization of $150,000.

The Star Theatre in Potsdam has just been sold to H. E. Flack and Sylvester Nicollette, who will make numerous repairs and alterations. The roof will be raised to allow for a balcony. When remodeled the house will seat about 1,000 persons.

It's rather odd how a nickname will hang to one. Years ago, the Daisy Theatre, in Green Island, was run by the selfsame Halligan who is now looking after Universal's affairs in the Capital District. And everyone knows Mr. Halligan as "Daisy" Halligan. He is one of the old timers in the business, doesn't say much, but delivers the goods.

Chiefs Honored

When "The Third Alarm," the companion picture to "In the Name of the Law" and the second Emory Johnson production for release through the Film Booking Offices of America, is released it will be dedicated in each city where it is shown to the local fire chief. This dedicatory title will, in many instances, include either a motion picture or a photograph of the local chief. The motion pictures were obtained at the recent convention of fire chiefs in San Francisco when the heads of departments from all over the entire country gathered in that city.

Paramount Filming "Bella Donna"

Scenes in London's luxurious Savoy Hotel marked the start, on October 7, of Pola Negri's first American-made Paramount picture, "Bella Donna," by Robert Hichens. This George Fitzmaurice production, adapted from the Hichens' story by Ouida Bergere, will present Conway Tearle and Conrad Nagel in featured roles in support of Miss Negri, while Claude King, noted member of the New York dramatic colony, who played opposite Ethel Barrymore in "Declassee," will portray the important character of Dr. Isaacson.

Selects Cast for "Coronation"

The complete cast for "Coronation," the forthcoming photoplay in which Robert Z. Leonard will present Mae Murray, has already been selected. Studio production of the new motion picture, to be released by Metro Pictures Corporation, has already been begun, according to advices received at the New York offices of that company. "Coronation" is being made in Hollywood.

In support of Miss Murray are Rod La Rocque, Robert Frazer, Edward Burns, Jean Herscholt, Lionel Belmore, Herbert Standing, Mrs. J. Farrell MacDonald and Wilfred Lucas.

Clancy Goes Abroad

Carl Stearns Clancy, producer of "The Headless Horseman" or "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," which will be released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation on November 5, sailed recently on the liner France for an extended business and social trip through England, France and Northern Italy.

Tells of Important Foreign Alliances

Announcement is made by Walter E. Greene, president, and F. B. Warren, vice president of American Releasing Corporation, of an alliance just completed in England by Holmes C. Walton, head of the foreign department of the American organization, under which Wardour Films, Ltd., becomes the distributors of the entire 1922-1923 output of American's releases for England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales under a long-time contract. This contract was effected in August in London by Messrs. Henry Hibbert, the managing director, and J. W. Thorpe, the general manager of Wardour.

Wardour will begin public release of the American Releasing pictures inside of six months from the date of the arrival of each picture in London. The first picture selected to lead off in England is Dirigo Films' production, "Timothy's Quest." This will be followed the next week by the release throughout England of Ray C. Smallwood's Pyramid production, "Queen of the Moulin Rouge" and next in order by J. L. Frothingham's "The Woman He Loved," directed by Edward Sloman.

Wardour Films, Ltd., will release one big production received from its American ally each week in the year and delivery has been made by American Releasing of the first eight subjects, besides having placed in London other of its prior to September 1st releases for immediate screenings and trade showings.

Messrs. Greene and Warren also announce the sale to Max Glucksmann, through Jacobo Glucksmann in New York of the entire output of this big distributing concern for Argentina, Chile, Peru, Bolivia, Uruguay and Paraguay and announce that twenty productions have arrived in Buenos Ayres and Montevideo for immediate South American release.

Announcement also is to be made in a few days by American Releasing of the closing of contracts for its Australian and Scandinavian distributions. Initial deliveries of pictures have been made to Ignacio de la Barra in Mexico City for the Mexican distribution of the company.

Making Some Films a Joy Says Vignola

Contrary to the general opinion among motion picture and lay people, the making of an historical production is a pleasurable experience, according to Robert G. Vignola, the director of "When Knighthood Was In Flower."

"Despite the fact that a great deal more mental and physical labor is involved in the making of an historical picture than is possible in a modern story, it is, nevertheless, a distinct treat to be able to make such a production," said Mr. Vignola. "Any one who loves history can readily understand why 'Knighthood' gave me such enjoyment.

"For one thing I had to do a lot of reading up on English history in the reign of Henry the Eighth. I am partial to history anyhow and this task proved far from irksome. Then again it was an unusual experience and a happy one to leave the twentieth century at the studio entrance and spend the whole day in the sixteenth century.

"From the director's point of view one of the joys was the cast. In all my experience I've never had such whole hearted cooperation from the players and the technical staff."

Important Deal Is Made by Hodkinson

A picture deal of importance was consummated by Producers' Security Corporation last week which places the "Bull Dog Drummond" feature with W. W. Hodkinson for distribution in United States and Canada.

During the runs of the stage play in New York and London many producing companies were said to be angling for the picture rights. Hollandia Films were finally successful in landing it.

Evelyn Greeley has been selected to play one of the star roles. Carlyle Blackwell will play opposite Miss Greeley. Oscar Apfel will direct the feature.

New Metro Film

"The Fog," by William Dudley Pelley, will be picturized by Graf Productions, Inc., for release through Metro Pictures Corporation, it was announced this week from the New York offices of the distributing organization.

The first of these photoplays produced under the personal supervision of Max Graf, "The Forgotten Law," is soon to be ready for booking, and work will begin immediately at the Western studios of the Graf Company upon "The Fog."

Schools Close When "Nanook" Comes

Pathe quotes the following letter received from Wachter and Bernard, lessees and managers of the Empire Theatre, Port Henry, N. Y., dated October 8:

"It might interest you to know that at a meeting of the School Board of this village held on Friday last it was voted to close all the schools in this place on Friday, October 13, at 3 o'clock, to enable the scholars to attend a special matinee on that day of 'Nanook of the North,' which having been seen by one of the former members of the board, was so heartily endorsed by him as to cause this action.

"In consequence of the above action, the two large convent schools here, as well as several of the smaller schools outside of the jurisdiction of the Village Board here, have also voted to do the same thing."

For Release on October 22

Paramount's feature release scheduled for October 22, is "The Cowboy and the Lady," with Mary Miles Minter and Tom Moore, a picturization of the romantic Western stage play by Clyde Fitch in which S. Miller Kent starred on tour for a number of years.

Julien Josephson, who scenarized "The Old Homestead" for Paramount, also wrote the continuity for "The Cowboy and the Lady."

Badger to Direct New Metro Film

"Your Friend and Mine," a dramatic sketch by Willard Mack, which was also played in vaudeville under the title of "The Rat," will furnish the nucleus for the next Metro S-L special production.

Clarence G. Badger, director of "Quincy Adams Sawyer," will stage "Your Friend and Mine."

REPORTS FROM THE BOX-OFFICE

Selznick

Reported Missing, with Owen Moore. —A great audience picture. Played to excellent business two nights at 15 and 35 cents. How they did howl and yell with laughter. Get it, by all means. Also clever advertising accessories.—F. E. Sabin, Majestic theatre, Eureka, Mont.—Small town patronage.

Reported Missing. Certainly this is the best thing Owen Moore ever did. The comedy by the big fellow was simply a scream. We know of no better picture than this one. Best of all, we bought it right and made money.—Ned Pedigo, Pollard theatre, Guthrie, Okla.

Reported Missing, with Owen Moore. —They said a mouthful when they said it was "the fastest moving picture on record." It's fast and funny. Book it.—L. I. King, Sunbeam No. 3, Los Angeles, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

Reported Missing, with Owen Moore. —Here's seven reels of laughter. This picture is full of action from start to finish. As for comedy, it cannot be beat. Book it and push it big. Drew fine.—Anderson & Weathersby, Gem theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Reported Missing. You can't go wrong on this. If they don't like it they're dead and don't know it. Comedy and excitement rarely blended. Tom Wilson is a new Bert Williams. Play it up big. Good chance for tie-ups. Patronage high class. Attendance good.—E. W. Large, Strand theatre, Ithaca, New York.

Owen Moore's Selznick Feature, "Reported Missing," Draws Exhibitor Praise from Every Quarter.

Reported Missing, with Owen Moore. —The best picture Owen Moore has ever been in. Patrons left the theatre more than satisfied.—Mrs. Frank Paul, Marvel theatre, Carlinville, Ill.—General patronage.

Reported Missing, with Owen Moore. —Great. For screen entertainment it's hard to beat. A good audience picture that will tickle the male patrons.—Charles Born, Elks theatre, Prescott, Ariz.—General patronage.

Reported Missing. Made them laugh plenty, and they came in goodly numbers. Play this; if properly exploited you'll do well—I did. Patronage, health seekers and tourists. Attendance good. —Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Reported Missing. Very good comedy and drew good houses. Well bolstered with short stuff. Advertise as comedy and you'll do good business. Patronage, city. Attendance, good.—(L. O. Hoover viewing as spectator while on trip), at Princess theatre, Denver, Colorado.

Reported Missing, with Owen Moore. —This picture is one that will greatly please your patrons. Easy to advertise and will be enjoyed by everyone who sees it.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., Odeon theatre, Chandler, Okla.—General patronage.

Reported Missing. Here's one that will "make good" anywhere. Owen Moore is at his best in this role, and Tom Wilson kept the audience in a continuous roar. Patronage mixed. Attendance good.—W. C. Benson, Laurier theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

Reported Missing, with Owen Moore. —Good entertainment picture. Plenty of action and thrills and a laugh in every scene.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Reported Missing, with Owen Moore. —A dandy farce comedy. A whirlwind for action. Suitable for any theatre. Worth an extra effort. Business good. —Idle Hour theatre, St. Charles Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Reported Missing, Owen Moore (Selznick). Picture a real knockout. Audiences usually cold-blooded, but they managed to thaw that look off their faces and were able to laugh heartily and often. Picture was one of the best shown here in many months and is safe booking for any exhibitor. Attendance excellent, despite warm weather.—Lehigh Orpheum.

Reported Missing, with Owen Moore. —A good comedy picture that gave good satisfaction. It certainly is a dandy picture. You will make no mistake by booking it.—E. L. Graef, Opera House, Hortonville, Wis.—Small town patronage.

Reported Missing.—Good comedy. All the chance in the world for exploitation. Advertising, advance teaser cards, splash lobby, billboards, newspapers. Patronage, small town.—W. Ray Erne, Rialto theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

Reported Missing, with Owen Moore. —The picture from every standpoint is entirely different. It surely is an action picture every inch of the way. The picture gets many laughs, as it should.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy theatre, Winchester, Ind.

Reported Missing, with Owen Moore. —Good picture. Played to full house and heard no kicks.—R. O. Rhoades, Orpheum theatre, Converse, Ind.—Small town patronage.

Reported Missing. Good picture with many laughs. Colored man fine. Advertising, cards, throw-aways, posters, and slides. Patronage mixed. Attendance, good.—D. Buss, Star theatre, Tonawanda, New York.

Reported Missing, Owen Moore (Select). During a week of relentless rain this picture met with great success. Audiences fairly howled with glee.—Howard theatre, Atlanta, Ga.

Reported Missing, Owen Moore (Selznick). This one seemed to appeal to the patrons, and the box office figures were excellent. — Criterion, Oklahoma City, Okla.

Reported Missing, with Owen Moore. —Played on two hot days and did a good business. It is certainly an amusing feature.—City theatre, Hoboken, N. J.—Neighborhood patronage.

Reported Missing, Owen Moore (Select). This neighborhood house attracted a capacity business on this one for a half-week run.—Shea's North Park.

Reported Missing, with Owen Moore. —Excellent. This one seemed to appeal to the patrons and the box office figures were very fair.—William Noble, Criterion theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla.—General patronage.

Reported Missing, with Owen Moore. —A real good comedy that was properly advertised with special heralds and newspapers and brought big business for two days. This picure will draw well and live up to the special rating given it.—B. C. Brown, Temple theatre, Viroqua, Wis.—General patronage.

Newspapers Praise "Trifling Women"

"All around," said one of the New York newspapers of the opening presentation by Metro of Rex Ingram's "Trifling Women," at the Astor Theatre, October 2, "it was a brilliant occasion."

Notice of the brilliance of the occasion was not all the dramatic critic had to say of "Trifling Women." Seldom has any screen drama brought from reviewers the praise that "Trifling Women" did, it is stated.

Quotation of the summary lines in the criticisms follows: "Rex Ingram . . . is the same Rex Ingram . . . we find . . . the same clever detail that marked the other films that established his reputation"—The Sun. "A superb motion picture . . . 'Trifling Women' is practically perfect in its direction, wonderful in its photography and its cast could not be improved upon."—Don Allen, Evening World. "There is an evening of exciting entertainment in store for you at the Astor."—New York Times.

"'Trifling Women' deserves a place with the big pictures of the year."—New York Evening Post. "Both acting and direction are excellent."—The Globe. "Georgeous and glittering exhibition. . . Its direction is superb."—Quinn Martin, The World. "The only way it could be done on the screen is the way Ingram did it, and it is interesting."—New York Tribune.

"The settings of the picture are elaborate, and the whole thing is well done and acted."—New York American. "Deftly made with intelligent direction."—Morning Telegraph. "It is all good picture work, and always interesting."—Evening Mail.

Castle Film Makes a Hit in Theatres

Hodkinson says in order to prove the widespread success which is being achieved by the feature, "Slim Shoulders," with Irene Castle, in conjunction with the Castle Promenade, it is announced that more than 100 of the best theatres in the country have played this production in less than thirty days after release date with gratifying results.

Since its Broadway premicre at the Capitol Theatre, "Slim Shoulders" and the Promenade have been presented in practically every large city in the United States, and it is stated that bookings for this novelty have been made for many months to come. The success of this enterprise, according to the Hodkinson Corporation, is due not only to the popularity of the name of Irene Castle, but also to the fact that this presentation is something distinctly out of the ordinary.

Furthermore, it is stated, there is a universal appeal attached in regards to the display of up to the minute feminine wearing apparel of all kinds. It is reported that throughout the country the women have been 100 per cent. for this production.

Goldwyn Acquires More Big Stories

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation announces the acquisition by it of the motion picture rights to several important stories which will be made into super-features for inclusion in its list of "Big Twenty" productions for the present season. Work on them will get under way in the near future and they will, in all probability, be released in the late winter or spring.

Goldwyn has acquired the rights to Ethel M. Dell's new novel, "Top o' the World," the film rights costing $30,000. It will also make a photoplay version of Edward E. Rose's new play, "The Rear Car," recently presented with such conspicuous success in Los Angeles. This play is a mystery melodrama. Another of the acquisitions is that of the rights to Hardy's "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," which will be a Marshall Neilan production.

The fourth new picture to be included in the twenty features will be a film version of Thackeray's "Vanity Fair," which Hugo Ballin is to make at the Goldwyn studios, with Mahel Ballin in the role of Becky Sharpe.

Ballin Casting for "Becky Sharp"

Mabel and Hugo Ballin left for Los Angeles last Wednesday afternoon. Immediately upon their arrival on the West Coast, Mr. Ballin will start casting for his new special production, "Vanity Fair," in which Mrs. Ballin will be seen as "Becky Sharp." This picture will be a Goldwyn release.

"Vanity Fair" will be considerable of a screen spectacle, it is announced. The cast, it is said, will be one of the largest ever assembled for a motion picture production. Mr. and Mrs. Ballin expect to return East in February.

Title of Fox Film Is Changed

Changing the title of the Fox picture now in its eighth big week at the Lyric Theatre, New York City to "Who Are My Parents?" necessitated getting out a new press book.

The resulting sixteen-page press book is believed by Vivian M. Moses, director of Fox publicity, to be the most valuable box-office aid yet rendered to exhibitors.

"Who Are My Parents?" was first shown at the Lyric Theatre under the temporary title of "A Little Child Shall Lead Them." A prize of $1,000 was offered to the public for the best title to supplant this. The number of replies received totalled 11,741.

Mayor Hands City's Key to Griffith

When D. W. Griffith, noted motion picture producer, reached Boston city to attend the opening performance of his latest production, "One Exciting Night," Mayor Curley presented to Mr. Griffith the key to the city.

It was said that this is the first time any motion picture producer or theatrical man has been so honored by Boston.

Selznick Activities Are Increasing

Activities around the offices of the Selznick Company are increasing. There is much hub-bub in the matter of getting out the sixteen big special productions which Selznick Pictures Corporation will contribute during the season, 1922-23.

David O. Selznick, vice president of the company, has much to do in closing up the final details which have to do with the production of the big Theda Bara special which will be begun in the East within the next week or ten days. New employes are being taken on to keep up with the added work.

Miss Dalton Starts "Black Fury"

After a vacation of several months Dorothy Dalton has started another Paramount picture. She began work this week at the Paramount Long Island studio on an original story for the screen by Edmund Goulding, temporarily titled "Black Fury," under the direction of Victor Fleming.

Prominent in the cast are Robert Ellis, Jose Rubens, Ellen Cassidy, Pat Hartigan and Marie R. Burke.

Mr. Goulding as well as being the author of the story has written the continuity.

More Tie-ups for Castle Film

Additional successful tie-ups with department stores are being reported to the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation relative to the success with which the Irene Castle Promenade, in conjunction with the showing of "Slim Shoulders," is being received throughout the country. The Castle Promenade is now invading the South. Newspapers are giving it large display.

Says Johnson Film Is Going Good

Martin Johnson's latest feature thriller, "The Head Hunters of the South Seas," has got off to a fine start, say officials of Associated Exhibitors, which organization is distributing the picture.

It is said there has been a heavy booking demand for the present release, while reviewers who have seen this offering have declared it the best Mr. Johnson ever made, it is stated.

Interest Shown in New Features

Wide interest, says Associated Exhibitors, already has been shown by exhibitors in the release, set for October 29, of "The Woman Who Fooled Herself," the first of the series of Edward MacManus productions for Associated Exhibitors, and the first of the MacManus features to be made in Porto Rico. The featured players are May Allison and Robert Ellis. The production is in five reels.

Exhibitor Praises Metro Picture

If any exhibitor's theatre carries a mortgage, a simple means of clearing the title is the showing of such pictures as the Rex Ingram production for Metro of "The Prisoner of Zenda."

Such is the gist of a telegram of appreciation received this week by A. H. Fischer, of the Metro exchange in Minneapolis, from A. L. Picker, general manager of the Ironwood Amusement Company, Ironwood, Michigan.

Mr. Picker telegraphed: "Give us more like it (Prisoner of Zenda) and the mortgages will soon be lifted. Picture talk of the town"

Universal Officers Given Reception

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, and his associate officials of the Universal home office, were feted in Philadelphia Monday at a Prosperity Dinner, given in honor of the recent record breaking business being done by Universal's Philadelphia Exchange.

Prior to the Prosperity Dinner, held in the Arcadia Restaurant, following a theatre party attended by the entire Universal force in Philadelphia, Mr. Laemmle and the other Universal executives were the guests of Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company, at a small dinner held on the Ritz-Carlton roof.

"Remittance Woman" Nearly Finished

Ethel Clayton is nearing the completion of "The Remittance Woman," the working title of her second production for release through the Film Booking Offices of America. The story is adapted from Achmed Abdullah's novelette of the same name.

Miss Clayton is again directed by Wesley Ruggles, who was responsible for "If I Were Queen," the star's initial release through F. B. O. which is now being issued. For the leading male role Rockcliffe Fellows was selected.

"Timothy's Quest" Highly Praised

In a letter to American Releasing Corporation, The Better Films Committee of Atlanta places its unqualified endorsement upon Kate Douglas Wiggin's "Timothy's Quest." This committee comprises representatives of schools, parent-teacher associations, newspapers, welfare boards and clubs of various kinds.

The letter from Mrs. B. M. Boykin, chairman, says in part: "The Better Films Committee of Atlanta feels that it (the picture) cannot be praised too highly, and places its unqualified endorsement upon 'Timothy's Quest.'"

Violet Heming in Pyramid Film

Violet Heming is featured in Pyramid's, "When the Desert Calls," adapted from Donald McGibney's stories appearing in a widely read magazine, scheduled for release by American.

Directed by Ray C. Smallwood, Miss Heming heads a cast which comprises such well-known players as Robert Fraser, Sheldon Lewis, Julia Swayne Gordon, J. Barney Sherry, Huntley Gordon and Nicholas Thompson. The adaptation was made by Peter Milne and Georgette Duchesne while the continuity was the work of Peter Milne.

Finishes Filming

The filming of George Patullo's story, "The Summons," which George Randolph Chester prepared for the screen, has been completed at Universal City.

London Papers Laud "Nanook of North"

The latest batch of London newspapers reaching New York give unusually generous space to reviews of "Nanook of the North," says Pathe. These are unanimous in their praise of the picture, heartily agreeing on both its solid screen value and intense popular appeal. They are characterized, too, by a warmth of expression seldom indulged in by these writers—as the following excerpts indicate:

Daily Graphic—"I saw yesterday a film which will make history, 'Nanook of the North.' It is full of the most appealing humanity." Daily Express—"The most remarkable film ever seen in London is 'Nanook.'" Westminster Gazette—"It is a masterpiece alike of enterprise and photography."

Daily News—"'Nanook of the North is a wonder-film." Morning Post—"The film is weird, terrific and well nigh unbelievable." The Times—"The whole production is one of the most comprehensive that has yet been seen in London." Evening News—"One of the most wonderful pictures ever made." Daily Mail—"A film of absorbing interest."

Weekly Dispatch—"The film gives one the sense of being an intimate of the Nanook family circle, whose struggle to exist in the barren Arctic wastes is an epic of human endurance." Daily Chronicle—"To see Mrs. Nanook washing her baby will be a joy forever to film-goers." Kinematograph Weekly—"Robert J. Flaherty, F. R. G. S., has done for 'Nanook' and his tribe what Longfellow, with his pen, did for 'Hiawatha.'"

Tom Mix to Star in Fox's "Arabia"

"Arabia," formerly announced as "An Arabian Night," will be the December release for Tom Mix. It is a Fox production. The story was written by the Fox star and Lynn Reynolds, who also directed.

The star is supported, it is said, by an unusually capable cast including such names as Claire Adams (feminine lead), George Hernandez, Ralph Yeardsley, Norman Selby, better known as Kid McCoy, Eddie Piel, Hector Sarno, and "Tony," the famous steed who has been featured in many Fox westerns.

The story, it is stated, provides the star ample opportunity to exhibit his array of difficult stunts, among which are the leap in an automobile over a fifteen foot embankment into the sea, horse-riding on the sinking sands of an Oriental desert, the liberation of himself from a grave in Morocco, and the single-handed stand against a hostile tribe of roving Bedouins.

Fox Film Corporation has detailed the work of preparing the advertising and publicity background for the production to an expert group of writers and showmen. The matter will consist of posters, lobby photos, slides, heralds, press books, newspaper cuts, mats, etc.

Plans to Picturize "The Deerslayer"

"The Deerslayer," James Fenimore Cooper's story of the plains, is to be Pyramid's next production for distribution by American Releasing Corporation.

Ray C. Smallwood, accompanied by Ben Carre, art director, is now in Los Angeles assembling the cast.

Fox Changes Title on Big Picture

Exhibitors and the motion picture industry in general will recognize the significance which is attached to the announcement this week by Fox Film Corporation that the title of "A Little Child Shall Lead Them," the current season's special, now in its eighth consecutive week at the Lyric Theatre, New York, has been changed to "Who Are My Parents?"

The new title was selected as the result of a contest carried on by means of newspaper advertisements in New York City. A prize of $1,000 was offered to the person not connected with the corporation who would submit a suitable name for the photoplay. The decision to make the change came after it became apparent that some persons were misled by the title into believing the picture to be of a Biblical nature when, in fact, it is a strong social modern melodrama.

Fox Film Corporation desired to select a title which would confirm in the public mind the dramatic qualities of the picture, and therefore make a strong box-office title for exhibitors. Exactly 11,741 contestants in New York City and surrounding territory sent their suggestions to the offices of William Fox.

"Who Are My Parents?" submitted by Miss Julia Gordon, of 836 Dawson street, New York City, to whom the $1,000 prize has been awarded, was chosen as a title which gives the essence of the plot of the picture and embodies all the necessary box-office characteristics.

Prints of "Pawned" Are in Work

J. Parker Read, Jr.'s "Pawned," the first of the big outside specials to be handled by Select is finally cut, titled and edited, and prints for the thirty-odd Select branches throughout the country are in work. It is expected that these prints will be in the hands of the selling crew within the next ten days or two weeks.

The photoplay is the pictured version of a Frank L. Packard story which was first published in Munsey's magazine and later in book form by the George H. Doran Company. As such it is, Selznick says, assured of a lot of help in getting over to the public by the Frank H. Munsey interests throughout the country. Mr. Packard is author of "The Miracle Man."

Makes Interesting Innovation

Exhibitors and others in the trade who follow with interest the development of the various news reels have, Selznick says, probably noticed during the past week or two a cartoon innovation which has been introduced as a regular feature of Selznick News. The idea is a new one, originated by Albert Weisberg, who has for some time been connected with the Selznick Company's art department.

Up to the present time only one of the semi-weekly releases of Selznick News carried this interesting feature. In the near future there will be a similarly animated drawing in each issue.

To Give 20 of 'Em Film Try-out

Acting upon orders of Harry Beaumont, authorities in Los Angeles and Hollywood this week conducted a flapper roundup which netted twenty of the species. Five more were apprehended but subsequently released. The score taken into custody were remanded to the Metro studios in Hollywood, to be held over for trial for parts in Viola Dana's forthcoming photoplay, "Miss Emmy Lou."

Of the twenty prettiest, three gave California as their home addresses, and the remaining seventeen were traced to eleven other States.

Director Beaumont immediately sentenced them to an indefinite term of hard labor in the cause of art.

"The Sin Flood" Preview at the Capitol

"The Sin Flood," Goldwyn's picturization of Henning Berger's drama, "Syndafloden," will be next week's attraction at the Capitol Theatre, New York. This is the picture which Goldwyn has been, metaphorically, holding up its sleeve for some months and which, it is confidently expected by Goldwyn officials and by critics, writers, directors and actors who have seen it at private showings, will prove one of the biggest things of the year.

Change of Plans Is Made

The proposed cash awards to exhibitors by the Jackie Coogan Productions for suggestions and ideas in exploiting Jackie's recently completed and soon to be released "Oliver Twist" production has been cancelled.

The producers of the Coogan picture found that the Postoffice rulings on contests of this nature interfered with their plans and before the said contest was started, it was decided best to cancel it entirely.

Charles Jones in New Fox Film

Charles Jones, in "The Bells of San Juan," Fox release Oct. 15, is one of the most delightful program pictures this star has ever appeared in, Fox says. Jones plays the role of Roderick Norton, a young sheriff.

Others in the cast besides Charles Jones are Fritzie Brunette, Claude Peyton, Harry Todd, Hardy Kirkland, Katherine Key, William Steele, Otto Matieson and Sid Jordon. The photoplay is adapted from the story by Jackson Gregory. It was directed by Scott Dunlap.

Booked for Run on Big Circuit

"Till We Meet Again," the production by Dependable Pictures Corporation, Morris Kohn president, which is the current offering of Associated Exhibitors, was booked recently by Southern Enterprises for runs in its circuit of six theatres, scattered through six states.

Mae Marsh, Martha Mansfield, Walter Miller and Norman Kerry are among the well known players in the cast.

Plans to Produce B. M. Clay Book

Pyramid Pictures, Inc., announces that its production plans for the immediate future include the Bertha M. Clay novel, "Wife in Name Only," "Captain Eri" by Joseph C. Lincoln, "The Deerslayer" by James Fenimore Cooper, and "Tatiana" by H. S. Sheldon. Two of these stories will go into production within a few days, and two more are to follow almost immediately. Slightly further along Pyramid will produce three other pictures.

Big Publicity for Pola Negri

One of the biggest publicity campaigns in behalf of a motion picture star has just been launched by Paramount in the interest of Pola Negri, who recently started work at Hollywood on her first American-made picture, "Bella Donna," under the direction of George Fitzmaurice.

The opening gun in this campaign is a series of ten special Sunday feature articles in the New York World and thirty other papers, telling Miss Negri's life story and titled, "The Mirror of My Life."

James Cruze Takes a Hard Assignment

The making of Emerson Hough's "The Covered Wagon," undoubtedly is Paramount's most ambitious production undertaking to date, according to a statement from that company's office, and in the filming of this epic of the West, adapted for the screen by Jack Cunningham, James Cruze has taken one of the most difficult directorial assignments in motion picture history.

Early this month Cruze left for Baker, Nevada, accompanied by one hundred technical assistants, the vanguard of an army of three thousand who are to be in camp for nearly two months on an immense 200,000-acre ranch.

Some of the outstanding features of the production will be an immense prairie fire, attacks by Indians upon a large village which is being completely built on the prairie, the breaking of horses and oxen for ranch use by a group of a hundred genuine cowboys and the trek of an immense wagon train across the plains.

Continuity Ready for "Vanity Fair"

Hugo Ballin has himself prepared the continuity for his screen version of Thackeray's "Vanity Fair," one of the most famous novels in all literature. He has based his story upon Thackeray's novel and not upon the stage version prepared for Mrs. Fiske under the title of "Becky Sharpe."

The continuity has been completed and both Mr. Ballin and his wife, Mabel Ballin, who will act the leading role, are now at the Goldwyn studios, where the production will be made for Goldwyn release, at work on the scenic production and selecting the cast.

"Vanity Fair" contains plenty of material of a spectacular nature, such as the military ball, the bazaar and mob scenes, and the battle of Waterloo, and these will be adequately dealt with in the picture, it is said.

Recommends Nine as Appropriate Films

The National Committee for Better Films of the National Board of Review, in presenting a plan for the use of motion pictures during Children's Book Week, Nov. 12 to 18, lists nine First National Attractions which it recommends to be shown during that week.

"Librarians testify to the demand among both adults and children, for books upon which popular pictures have been known to be based," says the committee in outlining its plan. Exhibitors who co-operated last year in this Book Week reported full houses and desirable publicity, it is stated.

The First National Attractions recommended for Book Week are "All For a Woman," "Bob Hampton of Placer," "Kindred of the Dust," "The Last of the Mohicans," "Lorna Doone," "The Old Swimmin' Hole," "Penrod," "Pilgrims of the Night," and "The River's End."

In All-Star Cast

Bessie Love has been engaged to play in the all-star production, "The Ghost Patrol," now being made at Universal City. Nat Ross is directing the feature, which is from the story written by Sinclair Lewis.

Says Record Rental Is Paid

What is declared to be the highest guaranteed rental ever paid by a San Francisco exhibitor for any type of picture is stipulated in Pathe's first contract booking, "Dr. Jack," Harold Lloyd's new five-reel feature comedy, for the Portola Theatre in that city.

This contract was made last week at the Pathe home office by Eugene H. Roth and General Manager Elmer Pearson. Mr. Roth is also the owner of the Imperial, the California and the Granada Theatres in San Francisco. He had made the trip to New York with the special object of personally booking "Dr. Jack."

The guaranteed rental price agreed to by Mr. Roth is not indicated by either party to the contract further than in the above statement, that it establishes a new advance booking record for San Francisco, no star or type of production excepted.

The exact date of the Portola's opening with "Dr. Jack" is not stated, but it is said to be toward the middle of November.

Helen Holmes Back in Pictures

Helen Holmes returns to the screen in "One Million in Jewels," a melodramatic story of the Secret Service which J. P. McGowan is directing at the Brush Studios in Miami, Florida, for distribution by American Releasing Corporation. Besides directing, Mr. McGowan assumes a leading role in the picture which has a cast including Elinor Fair, Nellie Parker Spaulding, Charles Craig, Fred Kalgrer, Leslie J. Casey and Herbert Pattee.

H. Lubin on Trip in Interest of Film

Herbert Lubin, of S-L Pictures, left New York this week to visit several key cities throughout the United States in the interest of "Quincy Adams Sawyer."

Following his return to New York, the release date of the film will be announced, together with the name of the theatre in New York which will present the S-L special for an extended run.

At Work on a New F. R. Adams Film

"The Vengeance of the Deep," Frank R. Adams' story of the South Sea pearl fisheries, is being directed by A. W. Barringer in Honolulu and surrounding territory for distribution by American Releasing Corporation, with a cast which includes Ralph Lewis, Virginia Brown Faire, Harmon MacGregor, Maida Vale, Van Mattimore and "Smoke" Turner. Much of the action transpires under water.

Mae Murray Loses No Time

Mae Murray lost no time after her arrival in Los Angeles in getting started on "Coronation." This photoplay, to be presented by Robert Z. Leonard, is her newest Tiffany production for Metro.

Less than a week from the time the star of "Peacock Alley," "Fascination," and "Broadway Rose" stepped from the train in Los Angeles, she was before the camera for the initial scenes for the new picture.

In a Leading Role

Lillian Rich has been engaged by Universal again for a leading role. She will play opposite Herbert Rawlinson in "One Wonderful Night." The last thing she did at Carl Laemmle's film city was the chief feminine portrayal in "The Kentucky Derby."

Whitson Lauds Film

This is what W. W. Whitson, proprietor of the Plaza Theatre, San Diego, Calif., had to say about Charles Ray and "A Tailor Made Man": "It was one of the few pictures that the Plaza has been able to use for a two week's run."

R. W. Tully Goes to France

Richard Walton Tully, whose productions are released through First National, sailed for France on the Steamship "Amerika," October 7, with his wife and daughter. Mr. Tully will be in Paris for several weeks and will make preliminary shots for his forthcoming production of "Trilby," in which Guy Bates Post will play the part of Svengali. Mr. Tully also intends staging "The Bird of Paradise" in Paris.

From Paris he will go to London and arrange for the premier in that country of Guy Bates Post in "The Masquerader."

Dinner in Mae Murray's Honor Attended by Press and Exhibitors

Mae Murray Making New Metro Picture

California motion picture exhibitors and press representatives welcomed Mae Murray to Los Angeles this week at a dinner in her honor at Marcel's.

Miss Murray recently transplanted her photoplay production activities from New York to Hollywood. Robert Z. Leonard, who presents her Tiffany Productions, is now directing the star in "Coronation," a forthcoming Metro release.

Arrangements of the affair were made by Ben F. Rosenberg, manager of the Metro exchange in Los Angeles. Fred Niblo, whose screen version of "The Famous Mrs. Fair" is part of the Metro schedule for the coming season, acted as toastmaster. Sixty exhibitors attended the dinner, and forty newspaper men.

"Coronation" was written by Edmund Goulding. The producers are Tiffany Productions, Inc., of which M. H. Hoffman is Vice-President and General Manager.

Unusual Paper for "Oliver Twist"

The series of lithographs that has been created for Jackie Coogan's "Oliver Twist" production has been proclaimed one of the finest sets compiled on a feature production in a long time, the Coogan organization says.

The series includes, in addition to the usual one, threes, sixes, and twenty-four sheets, two styles of half sheets which the exhibitor will find most valuable in his campaign on the Coogan offering, it is said.

Very little wording has been inserted on the "Oliver Twist" posters and each poster carries a line in italic type taken from the exact episode the poster represents.

Joins Distinctive

Dorothy V. Cleveland has joined the staff of Distinctive Pictures Corporation, in their offices at 366 Madison avenue, New York.

Miss Cleveland, who is originally from Atlanta, Ga., recently returned from an eight weeks' trip down South, visiting Richmond, South Boston, Danville, Norfolk and Virginia Beach in Virginia and Tarboro, N. C. In her new post, Miss Cleveland will have charge of all magazine and newspaper publicity.

Stage Success to Go on Screen

Announcement is made that "A Bill of Divorcement," the big Denison Clift production, starring Constance Binney, has been placed with Associated Exhibitors for distribution. The picture is presented by Ideal Films.

"A Bill of Divorcement" is an adaptation of the play of the same name by Clemence Dane. Alan Pollock was the star in the play during its long run at the Times Square Theatre, New York, last year. The screen adapation was by Denison Clift, who also directed the production.

New Feature Begun by Robbins

Jess Robbins, producer of the comedy features, "Too Much Business" and "The Ladder Jinx," has begun shooting on a new feature in the series, which is being released by Vitagraph. The new picture is from the pen of Arthur Goodrich, author of "It's a Boy," and "So This Is London," two stage successes.

The new feature, which has not yet been titled, differs widely from its two predecessors in the series, it is said.

Fox Films Based on Literary Subjects

Through its Educational Division, Fox Film Corporation is co-operating with the National Board of Review in presenting films based on literature. New prints have been supplied to all Fox exchanges covering several screen creations from famous authors' works. Exhibitors across the land will play during Book Week, November 12 to 18, the following subjects, among others, which the National Board of Review has announced in a circular posted in public schools and libraries, everywhere in the United States:

Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves, Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court, Evangeline, If I Were King, Jack and the Beanstalk, The Lamplighter, The Last Trail, Les Miserables, The Men of Zanzibar, Merely Mary Ann, Monte Cristo, Over the Hill, A Self-Made Man, A Stage Romance, A Tale of Two Cities, Treasure Island.

Plays to Capacity

The first of Goldwyn's "Big Twenty" pictures to be released, Rupert Hughes' "Remembrance," had a second week on Broadway, after its big week at the Capitol Theatre, having been sold to B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre. It attracted as much favorable comment and did as proportionately big a business as it did at the Capitol.

In Los Angeles the photoplay was retained for a second week at the California Theatre and sold to Tally's Theatre for a full week.

In Chicago, where the Hughes picture was put on at the Chicago Theatre last Sunday, a wire received at Goldwyn headquarters stated that the house records for attendance on the first day of a showing was broken by "Remembrance."

Heerman Directing New Selznick Film

President Myron Selznick, in charge of the Western Selznick producing unit, has put in production at the studios in Los Angeles another Owen Moore picture which is expected to be even more entertaining than anything he has previously done, Selznick says. The Selznick Corporation recently completed "Love is an Awful Thing."

The new production is being directed by Victor Heerman, to whose skill in bringing out the best things in the Owen Moore style of comedy President Myron Selznick attributes much of the success achieved by "Reported Missing" and "Love is an Awful Thing." Mr. Heerman is not only directing the picture, but is also responsible for the story which is being made under the title of "One Dollar Down."

Jackie Coogan to Make New Film

Jackie Coogan is going to make a circus picture. "Circus Days" is the title of the new Jackie Coogan production and work will start in the near future on this story. United studios, Hollywood, will be the seat of activity.

The story comes from the pen of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Coogan, who also wrote the "Fiddle and I" story, which Jackie recently completed.

$1000 for Idea

There is a prize of $1,000 waiting for the person who can produce the best idea for a motion picture scenario before November 1. There will also be prizes of $100 for second choice and $50 each for third and fourth.

The idea may be expressed in three or four words. In fact, the shorter the expression of it the better. The limit is 300 words. There are no other conditions.

Cecil B. DeMille, producer of Paramount pictures, wants the idea for his next production. Several years ago Mr. DeMille staged a contest of this kind and received the idea for "The Woman God Forgot" and he wants to get another.

DeMille states that no conditions have been placed on the offer so that it will be open to all instead of being restricted to those who have had training in writing scenarios. All he wants, he says, is the idea. He will have it written and produced.

So that there will be an impartial judgment Mr. DeMille has made arrangements with the Los Angeles Times to handle the contest. All ideas should be submitted to the DeMille Contest Editor of that paper before November 1. The only ones barred from competing are employees of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and the Los Angeles Times and their families.

Newsy Bits

Sam Morris, of Warner Brothers, returned to New York this week, following the opening of the Franklin Film Exchange in Boston, which he attended in an official capacity. This new exchange is releasing the Warner product. Al Feinman, exploitation manager of the New York Warner exchange, was on hand exploiting the Warner pictures.

With the motion picture championship golf tournament opened at the Great Neck, L. I., course on Thursday morning, Oct 19, the independent offices in New York were virtually all deserted, most of the executives being at the course. A dinner on Thursday night was to feature the meeting, which is an annual affair.

Al Lichtman, president of the Al Lichtman Corporation, returned to New York on Tuesday, following a conference held in Kansas City with B. P. Schulberg.

Robert J. Trimble and Frederick G. Becker, president and producing director, respectively, of Arthur Trimble Productions, Inc., arrived in New York this week bringing prints of three two-reel fantasies starring Arthur Trimble, the boy actor. They have established headquarters at the offices of Joseph L. Rhinock.

Monte Blue left this week for the Coast, in company with Harry M. Warner, to start production at the Warner studios on "Brass." Harry Ranf will produce this feature, which Sidney Franklin will direct.

Agnes Egan Cobb, producers' agent and distributor of Caryl S. Fleming Productions, has moved to her new offices in the Earle Building, 1674 Broadway, New York City.

"Ten Nights in a Barroom," the Arrow special, was sold 100 per cent this week, when a deal was closed whereby Sandor Weiss, an exhibitor of Columbus, O., purchased the Ohio rights to this picture.

David J. Mountain, that live head of Arrow's foreign department this week sold the Australian rights to "Ten Nights in a Barroom" and a minimum of 52 two-reel comedies to the Co-Operative Film Exchange, Ltd., of Melbourne, Australia.

Herman Rifkin, owner of the Eastern Feature Films Exchange, of Boston, took the place of Harry Segal, of Pioneer Film Exchange, that city, in the Amalgamated Lineup of exchanges. Bob Lynch, of Metro Philadelphia, took over the franchise that was expected would be given David Segal, of Royal Pictures, Inc., of that city.

The premier showing of Burton King's "The Streets of New York," which Arrow will state right, will be held at Frank Hall's million-dollar State Theatre Jersey City, N. J., but not on Oct. 22, as was originally intended. Instead the premier will take place Nov. 4.

The announcement last week that Alfred Weiss had become president of Artclass Pictures Corporation came as a delightful surprise to the trade in general. Mr. Weiss is no relation to any of the three Weiss brothers, Louis, Max and Adolph. The transaction is said to have involved an exchange of $250,000. The Weiss brothers are now exploiting "After Six Days."

A private invitation showing of "Shylock of Wall Street," starring Dore Davidson and Zena Keefe, will be held Sunday evening, Oct. 22, at the State Theatre, Jersey City, N. J.

The Week in Review

JOHNNY HINES'S latest achievement, "Sure-Fire Flint," is a comedy drama no exhibitor can afford to overlook. It is a picture with a human heart, full of typical Hines thrillers and comedy that is refreshingly entertaining. This is any audience's picture. Its appeal reaches out to everybody, for there is combined in this production elements that interest all sorts of fans. C. C. Burr has given the independent market a production of which it well should feel proud. It is well constructed, superbly acted and cleverly directed by Dell Henderson. Johnny Hines is rightfully the "whole works." Photographically, the feature is picturesque. Briefly, "Sure-Fire Flint" is the surest fire comedy drama this writer has seen in many a day. It should jam every house where shown.

Eddie Bonns's moving. He's going from Warner Brothers to Goldwyn. The change came like a shock. We are sorry to see Eddie quit the independent market, for he was one of its best and stauchest boosters. His exploitation campaigns dignified the market. They have been original and have inspired others to do big things. He has always behaved as any real, genuine, upright, aggressive showman would have behaved. And because of that behavior he has made money for everyone with whom he came in contact. Eddie's absence is a distinct loss not only to Warner Brothers, but to the trade in general. He delivered the goods as few have. He need bow to no exploitation man in the business. When his pal, Jimmy Grainger, induced him to come to Goldwyn, he was inducing a human dynamo to join him. We extend our heartiest and sincere congratulations to our own pal, Eddie Bonns. We are not afraid about his future. They can't keep a man like Eddie down. Good luck, Eddie; we'll miss you. We're sorry you've quit us, but as your friend, Harry Warner, says he couldn't compete with a pal. He's sorry to see you go and, like everybody else, is pulling for you.

ELSEWHERE in this section there is published a report from up-State New York relative to the inconvenience and loss of money sustained by an exhibitor because a certain print reached him in such shape that it was impossible for him to carry out his program. This, of course, is not an uncommon exhibitor complaint. Yet, it is one of those "big little kicks" that should not be. No exhibitor can afford to disappoint his patrons who pay to see a certain advertised picture, and once inside the house are introduced to another. The exhibitor buys pictures, but not junk—and he should get what he pays for. And it is the business of the exchangeman to see that he does.

The other day this writer had the pleasure of previewing Burton King's latest production, "Shylock of Wall Street," which in our opinion is the best thing that director ever did. Aside from the clever production, the most impressive feature of the picture to this writer was the marvelous "come-back" of Maurice Costello, the star of other days. We marveled at the excellence of this veteran's work in an extremely difficult role. He carried off every scene in which he appeared. His acting was that of a finished artist, one who felt the part he was playing. It was as splendid a piece of characterization as we have seen this year in any picture. Maurice Costello will regain thousands of old friends when this production is flashed on the screen. He will recall fond memories, for his is an excellent example of what a dogged determination to "come back" can be accomplished when backed with sincerity and ability.

MURRAY GARSSON has returned to the independent market, stronger and with a determination to let the world know that he is very much active. In addition to having two production units at work, Mr. Garsson is negotiating for several productions, which should launch his organization auspiciously. He has surrounded himself with a staff of executives who are well known and experts in their particular line. Harry Diggs is a thorough showman and a motion picture man who is well known. This week news was given out to the effect that George Gould, formerly managing editor of Motion Picture News and well known and liked in the industry, had joined the Garsson organization.

Trade Notes

Herman Rifkin, owner of the Eastern Feature Film Company, of Boston, was a visitor to the New York offices of Principle Pictures Company in the Loew-State Theatre Building this week. Mr. Rifkin, whose exchange reports an unusual business on the Lon Chaney special, "Flesh and Blood," is negotiating for the initial Principle Pictures Company release, "Chicago Sal," co-starring Milton Sills and Alice Lake.

Sam Werner, of United Film Exchange, St. Louis, announced during the week that he has obtained "Young America," which is being widely boosted by the Boy Scouts. It is a picturization of George Cohan's stage success. Sam also will shortly start releasing the "Weekly Witticisms" which he obtained from the Art Film Corporation, Cleveland, O.

"Orphan Sally" will be released in the St. Louis territory about November 1 by the Exhibitors Direct Service Exchange, which recently took over the distribution of pictures of the Fine Arts Pictures Corporation.

Dave Segal and Jay Kenter, of the Royal Pictures, Inc., Philadelphia, report that Fred G. Nixon Nirdlinger and the Stanley Company of America have booked "Sure Fire Flint," starring Johnny Hines, at the Victoria, that city, Monday October 22, when Johnny Hines will make a personal appearance.

Fred Elliott, owner of the Clinton Square Theatre in Albany, N. Y., having heavily advertised a week's feature, "What's Wrong with the Women?" received the print in such shape that he was obliged to make a sudden change at the last moment

The big Chicago Theatre, Chicago, Ill. is another of the long list of first class theatres which has booked "Rich Men's Wives," on which the bookings are still piling up heavily.

Al Lichtman returned from another of his periodic trips through the Middle West this week. He found a strong current of optimism prevailing in that section of the country.

B. P. Schulberg's production plans are on to the minute. His releases are distributed by the Al Lichtman Corp. "Shadows," the second, starts playing first runs this month after its private showing at the Biltmore on Friday evening October 27. "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" is the third. The fourth and fifth "The Hero" and "Are You a Failure?" are in the works on the Coast. Gasnier is producing the first and Tom Forman the latter.

The Stanley interests in Philadelphia thought so much of "Rich Men's Wives" that they placed it in the Capitol on lower Market Street close after the termination of a week run at the Aldine. The stunt worked by Ben Amsterdam of Masterpiece with the Wilbur Chocolate Company has brought great results there.

Milton Simon, who for a time was traveling representative for United Theatre Productions, Inc., has been made manager of the St. Louis exchange of Film Booking Offices.

Tom Leonard of the St. Louis Pioneer Exchange recently made a tour of the southern Illinois territory, visiting exhibitors in that section. He came back with a batch of fat contracts, and the trip was worth while in every shape. Conditions generally, reported Leonard, are improving, with exhibitors more inclined to book independent pictures.

2200 Film Folk Applaud Johnny Hines in "Sure-Fire Flint"

C. C. Burr Production Proves Superlative Treat to Record-Breaking Audience at Hotel Biltmore Showing

Virtually everybody who was anybody in the motion picture industry in the metropolitan district was present Wednesday night, October 18, at Hotel Biltmore, New York, at the double premier showing of "Sure-Fire Flint," starring Johnny Hines, and "Secrets of Paris," featuring an all-star cast. Some 2,200 motion picture producers, distributors, directors, stars, technical hands, studio helpers, exhibitors, exchangemen, their friends and guests from out of town, applauded and laughed enthusiastically at Charley Burr's latest Hines production, which was unanimously voted the greatest and finest laugh-provoking attraction in which that dare-devil, versatile star has ever appeared. The opinion was general that "Sure-Fire Flint" was Hines' masterpiece.

The showing was by far the largest attended in New York. The spacious ballroom of the Biltmore was taxed to its capacity. Fully two hundred persons stood through the showing of both productions, while about 150 who had made their way into the luxurious lobby of the hotel, learned to their disappointment that the attendance forced the management to put the ban on admitting any more. But the affair was a complete succcess, socially and otherwise. The program, despite the enormous crowd, was carried out without a single hitch. Once the first picture was started the entertainment continued with machine-like precision and not a single hitch marred the evening's diversion.

The record capacity was a compliment to Mr. Burr as producer and distributor. Had he admitted all who expressed a desire of seeing the pictures, he could well afford to have engaged the Biltmore for a full week's showing with assurance that the audiences would be capacity at every show.

"Jimmy" Bradford and his orchestra contributed no small share to the entertainment of the evening. In fact, it was Mr. Bradford who compiled the musical score for both the C. C. Burr production, "Sure-Fire Flint," and the Burr-Whitman Bennett all-star feature, "The Secrets of Paris." Later in the evening, after the showing of "The Secrets of Paris," the hall was cleared in quick time and dancing enjoyed until the wee hours of Thursday morning.

Lew Cody was among those present. Mary Anderson, who is making personal appearance at the Newark, N. J., Strand Theatre, where her latest picture, "Wildness of Youth," is being shown, also was on hand.

Among those invited were: Lillian Kinoy, J. Lindner, Raymond S. Harris, William M. Vogel, Joseph J. Rein, Akiba Weinberg, Joseph Miles, Warren G. Newcombe, Homer Bousbey, Earl Hurd, Earl W. Warners Buy Three Play Rights

Just before leaving for the coast, Harry M. Warner, of Warner Brothers, announced that he had purchased screen rights to "The Beau Brummel," Richard Mansfield's great success; "Cornered," in which Henry W. Savage starred Madge Kennedy, and the Elinor Glyn story, "How to Educate a Wife." These will all be produced by the Warners for 1923 release. Other plays are now being negotiated for, Warner Brothers planning to make 18 pictures this season.

Presence of Stars Helps Box Office

Personal appearances have seemingly come into their own, for reports from various parts of the country this week indicate that starts are helping in no small measure the drawing power of certain features. The personal appearances of Harry Houdini and special mystic acts in conjunction with the showings of his feature, "The Man from Beyond," is contributing in no small way to the financial success of that picture which, according to box-office statements, has set three records in as many weeks, two in Detroit and one in Boston.

However, some of the houses, boastful of the business done with these personal appearances, are overdoing the stunt to the extent that they are hurting their business by booking in unknown quantities, utilizing their appearances with this or that notable as an apologetic reason for their appearance. It is only a question of time, however, when these freaks will be on the outside looking in.

Doris Kenyon, who is now appearing in Philadelphia in "Up the Ladder," increased her bankroll considerably and incidentally strengthened her popularity by making personal appearances at the Victoria Theatre during the premier showing there of C. C. Burr's "Sure Fire Flint," starring Johnny Hines.

Speaking of "Sure Fire Flint" recalls a despatch from Boston where Johnny Hines is personally appearing in conjunction with the showing of that production at the Modern. Johnny Hines does an act that easily is the best offered by any of the stars, who seem to adhere to one stereotyped line of talk about studios, etc. Incidentally, the public has tired of this chatter and it will be to the advantage of stars to alter their bits.

Margery Wilson, star-producer-director-author of "Insinuation," is headed toward New York where she will arrive next week to sell territorial rights to that feature. This week Miss Wilson is appearing at the Victory Theatre, Providence, R. I., meeting with splendid success. She is appearing also at the Music Hall, Pawtucket, R. I., this week, using a machine to cover both towns.

Peggy O'Day, star of "The Storm Girl" and other New Era Productions, and incidentally one of the best horsewomen on the screen, will start on a personal appearance tour some time early in November. Bookings now being arranged will keep her busy for six or seven weeks, covering New England, New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

If negotiations now under way materialize, clever little Miriam Battista, star of many successes, who is being ably managed by Robert Edgar Long, formerly with D. W. Griffith will make a series of appearances in the East in conjunction with the showing of the L. Lawrence Weber-Bobby North picture, "The Curse of Drink," directed by Harry Hoyt.

Mrs. Rodolph Valentino (Jean Acker) has completed her vaudeville tour for the time being and is back in New York, working on the initial release of Amalgamated Exchanges of America. E. K. Linc

Virginia Lee is winning many admirers by putting over a neat little stunt, which is neither long nor too chatty. She has been in New England for the past few weeks.

The plan of Tom Soriero to organize an aggregation of stars to tour the small-town picture houses has apparently fallen through, for nothing has been heard from that showman.

"Flesh and Blood" Sets New Records For Theatre Owners

Conclusive evidence that exhibitors everywhere will book quality productions regardless of who makes them is furnished in the daily booking reports pouring into the New York offices of Western Pictures Exploitation Company from exchanges releasing the Lon Chaney special, "Flesh and Blood." Representative first-run theatres in every key city in the country have booked this feature, which has been enthusiastically praised by both trade and daily press critics, who see in the "man with a thousand faces" a character deluxe, whose box-office value is undisputed.

However, the success of "Flesh and Blood" is due entirely to the calibre of the production togcther with its exploitation possibilities, which, wherever capitalized by exhibitors, have been productive of amazingly splendid results at the box office. Particularly successful was the showing of "Flesh and Blood" over the U. B. O. Circuit of New York, which, according to box-office statements, brought this picture a gross that compared favorably with the foremost productions of the year.

Every theatre circuit of importance has booked "Flesh and Blood." These include the B. S. Moss, B. F. Keith, F. F. Proctor, Marcus Loew, Haring & Blumenthal and the Sydney Cohen circuits in the metropolitan area. Other equally important bookings came from the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, which is in virtual control of the exhibition field of the South; A. H. Blank circuit of Iowa and Nebraska, and the Gordon string of houses in New England.

The second largest and most beautiful theatre in the country, Balahan & Katz's Chicago Theatre, introduced "Flesh and Blood" to Chicago, where the production was given a spectacularly commendable presentation. Other first class Chicago houses that have booked "Flesh and Blood" include the spacious Tivoli, Riviera and Howard.

Following is an incomplete list of first-run showings already contracted for on "Flesh and Blood:"

Waldorf Theatre, Akron, O.; Edward F. Albee's Victory Theatre, Providence, R. I.; Edward F. Albee's Scenic Theatre, Pawtucket, R. I.; Avon Theatre, Decatur, Ill.; Graphic, Bangor, Me.; Regent, South Norwalk, Conn.; Majestic, Hartford, Conn.; Loew's, Indianapolis; Rialto, Milwaukee; California, Los Angeles; Strand, San Francisco; Moore's Rialto, Washington; Modern and Beacon Theatres, Boston; Rialto, Atlanta, Ga.; Strand, Birmingham, Ala.; Liberty, Sacramento, Cal.; Liberty, Stockton, Cal.; Liberty, Seattle, Wash.; Majestic, Portland, Ore.; Mission, Santa Barbara, Cal.; Rialto, Long Beach, Cal.; Rialto, San Diego, Cal.; Bijou, Green Bay; Nemomonee, Menominee, Mich.; Temple, Saulte Ste. Marie; Capital, Lynn, Mass.; Strand, Lawrence, Mass.; Bijou, Ventnor, N. J.; Capitol, Atlantic City, N. J.

CLEVELAND—"The Sage Brush Trail," with Roy Stewart, Johnny Walker, Wallace Beery and Marjorie Daw, opened a week's engagement at the Orpheum Theatre here. Hugh B. Evans staged the presentation, which opened big, giving promise to do a record business, which fell back to ordinary on Tuesday.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—"Yankee Doodle, Jr," occupied the No. 2 spot on a double bill at the Victory Theatre this week, the house concentrating on "Insinuation," with Margery Wilson, who starred in the picture and who appeared in person.

JERSEY CITY, N. J.—Harry Houdini will personally appear here during the week of Oct. 22 in conjunction with the showing of his feature, "The Man From Beyond."

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—The fact that "Ten Nights in a Barroom" was made at Gloversville, N. Y., a short distance from here, attracted much local interest to that feature, which topped the combination bill at Fay's Theatre this week. The Monday opening was far better than business recorded previously on Mondays.

PITTSBURGH—"Rags to Riches," the first Warner 1922-23 special, was given its premier showing at the Grand Theatre here Monday, receiving splendid notices from the local critics. Business picked up considerably on Tuesday, with indications that the engagement would go big.

PITTSBURGH—The Liberty Theatre had Wesley Barry in "Rags to Riches" for its feature attraction this week, the production opening big, with business holding up thereafter.

NEW YORK CITY—Owing to the fact that the C. C. Burr-Edwin Carew special, "I Am the Law," is undergoing several changes, the engagement at the B. S. Moss Broadway Theatre was postponed two weeks.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—"Rich Men's Wives," the B. F. Schulberg production, followed the "The Prisoner of Zenda" into the Rialto Theatre here this week. This house usually gives a two-feature bill, but in this instance this policy was dispensed with as sort of an experiment. Much to the surprise of Manager Bill Mahoney, the bill not only pleased, but brought audiences that were as big as those which had attended "The Prisoner of Zenda" engagement. The press reviews characterized the picture as one of the best brought to Providence.

BOSTON, MASS.—Johnny Hines personally appeared at the Olympia Theatre here in conjunction with the premier showing of "Sure Fire Flint" this week. The house has been doing a sell-out business at every show, with Hines' act going over with a bang. The Boston reviewers were loud in their praise of the feature.

BOSTON, MASS.—"The Man From Beyond," the Harry Houdini picture, did such a great business at the Globe Theatre that it was this week moved further uptown to the old Bowdoin Square Theatre, where it resumed its record-breaking career. The Great Clayton appeared at the Globe, but Houdini personally is appearing here with his old tricks. Business is the biggest ever recorded at this house since it took up a movie policy.

INDIANAPOLIS—"After Six Days," the Weiss Brothers' spectacle, opens at the English Opera House here on Sunday. Bert Ennis, of New York, is here exploiting the picture, which is creating considerable talk. Many clever local tie-ups with clergymen, societies and schools have been negotiated. Several special showings are being planned. The newspapers are cooperating nicely.

NEWARK, N. J.—Ivan Abramson's Graphic feature, "Wildness of Youth," was given its premier showing at the Strand Theatre this week. A clever exploitation campaign helped business considerably.

"More to Be Pitied" Makes Good Show

"More to be Pitied," first of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's series, went over big at two premicre showings in different territories this week, and proved itself a real box-office success at both.

The first opening on Monday, the 16th, was at the Hippodrome Theatre, Reading, Pa., and marked the opening gun in this territory of De Luxe Film Co. of Philadelphia, which holds Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey rights to the pictures. De Luxe has been lining up ideas on putting over this feature, and according to a wire received from them by C. B. C. the day after the opening, the picture opened to turn-away business.

The other big premiere was the first showing of this feature in the Michigan territory, where it opened a week's run at the Colonial Theatre, Detroit, also on Monday. According to Ray J. Branch, who holds the Michigan rights to the picture, it broke many house records for attendance there and proved one of the biggest box-office attractions ever played in Detroit.

Word of the booking of "More to be Pitied" over two entire circuits—the biggest and most important in the territory—comes from H. A. Lande, president of Quality Film Corp. of Pittsburgh, whereby the feature will be shown over the entire Rowland & Clark circuit in Pittsburgh, and in addition to this, over Ike Libson's circuit, covering Cincinnati, Columbus, Dayton and Louisville.

Frank E. Woods Quits F. P.-L. to Produce Independent Pictures

HOLLYWOOD, CAL.—Official substantiation of the exclusive report published in the Independent Section of Moving Picture World five weeks ago that one of the "best and biggest producers in the business now associated with a leading producing and distributing organization as production chief" would join the new and increasing army of independent producers, was obtained here today when Frank E. Woods, supervising director of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, tendered his resignation to Jesse Lasky, for the purpose of organizing his own independent producing company. The resignation was by mutual consent and will take effect Nov. 11. In leaving the Lasky lot, Mr. Woods carries with him the best wishes of every member of the Famous Players organization. In officially confirming the resignation, Mr. Lasky paid Mr. Woods a high tribute.

Film Moguls Will Attend Showing of Lichtman's "Shadow"

At the request of a number of Lichtman franchise holders, the private showing of "Shadows," B. P. Schulberg's second release through the Al Lichtman Corporation has been postponed from Friday evening, October 20, to Friday evening, October 27. The place will be the Biltmore grand ballroom.

When the date was first arranged, the territorial partners at once began arranging for the bringing on to New York of prominent showmen in their respective exchange cities. The time was found, however, to be too short and so, in order to make the party a real one, the date was postponed one week.

Tom Moore, franchise holder ing Washington; Harry Asher, New England franchise holder; Ben Amsterdam, of Philadelphia; Sam Grand in Buffalo, and various others intend making special trips to attend the premiere. All franchise holders, who are within a day's journey of New York, have definitely promised to attend. Locally, there has been considerable interest aroused over the presentation.

The professional colony in town has been invited en masse. The entire trade is expected to be on hand for the occasion, which, according to advance indications, looms up like a typical theatrical first night.

Erne Rapee, conductor at the Capitol Theatre, has been engaged to direct the orchestra of twenty-six pieces which, for the first time, will render Louis F. Gottschalk's special musical score. An elaborate presentation will be put on with special lighting effects.

Invitations will be extended to the Authors' League, the Motion Picture Directors' Association, the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, the F. I. L. M. Club of New York, the National Board of Review and organizations of that character.

Close on to 2,000 people are expected. The list of guests will, in all likelihood, include the following, in part:

E. M. Asher, W. E. Atkinson, George Arliss, Harry G. Ballance, Lon Banm, Ben Blumenthal, Edward Bowes, Col. A. C. Bromhead, Floyd M. Brockell, Jules E. Brulatour, Charles C. "Chicago Sal", with Alice Lake Starred, Big Principle Film

Word reached Eastern Manager Irving Lesser of Principle Pictures Corporation this week from Los Angeles to the effect that the Irving Cummings special, "Chicago Sal," starring Alice Lake and Milton Sills, who are supported by a distinguished cast of players, had been completed. Work on cutting and titling this production is now well under way and it is expected that this latest feature will be ready for general release some time next month.

While reports from the coast studio praise the production as one of the best of the year, Manager Lesser, after carefully reading the lengthy reports and statements from the studio, stated that under no consideration would he offer the picture to any exchangeman before the latter has had an opportunity to see it.

"I want to emphasize our policy of making pictures for anything but competitive propositions," said Mr. Lesser. "I am happy to receive this information relative to 'Chicago Sal,' whose title we are contemplating changing. But I will not hop out of my chair in enthusiasm, for while the reports from the Coast brand it as a 'feature Principle Pictures Company should feel proud of,' I want to reserve all exclamations and decisions until after I have seen it.

"Principle Pictures Corporation will at no time make an effort to sell any of its product to any exchange man who has not seen the picture. We will place our productions strictly on their merit, and only on such a basis will we offer them to exchanges. As soon as a completed print of this new feature reaches our Eastern offices exchange men will be duly notified and showings will be arranged for those who are interested.

"The organization of Principle Pictures Corporation is completed to the extent that we maintain a field force. Members of this staff, men well known to exchange men and exhibitors alike, will make a special tour of the key cities for the purpose of showing our pictures to prospective buyers.

"We maintain that the time has come when an exchange man must see for himself just what his hard-earned dollars are buying. We do not buy any story on the contentions of others. On the contrary, we insist on careful consideration of every story submitted. We intend to extend to our clientele the very same courtesy. Principle Pictures Corp. will adhere strictly to the principle that to be fully developed this industry must make it its business to see that all in it receive fair play—and our policy is just that.

"Our production department believes that in 'Chicago Sal' it has a production that is superlative. This information they convey in daily confidential messages to this office. I am glad to receive such information, for it indicates that our production department itself is pleased. That means considerable, for the reason that orders were given on the Coast by Mr. Rosenberg, who is in charge of production, to refrain from any outbursts of enthusiasm unless they were distinctly justified.

"But we are waiting patiently for the completed picture, and not until after I have seen it will I have any statement to make as to 'Chicago Sal.' Then my opinion will be transmitted to exchange men through the trade press."

Cast of Popular Names Appears in Warner Film; Coast S. R. Studio News

LOS ANGELES—(Special)—A cast of popular screen players is included in the Warner Brothers' production, "The Beautiful and Damned," featuring Marie Prevost, announced as the second of seven releases for this season. The production, directed by William A. Seiter, was made from the novel of the same name written by F. Scott Fitzgerald. Olga Printzlau adapted the story for the screen.

Included in the cast, headed by Miss Prevost, are Kenneth Harlan, Louise Fazenda, Tully Marshall, Harry Meyers, Cleo Ridgely, Emmett King, Kathleen Key, Clarence Burton, Walter Long, Parker McConnell, George Kuwa and Charles McHugh.

Clarence Bricker, producer of the Frankie Lee series of comedies, has loaned that star to B. P. Schulberg to portray the title role in Director Gasnier's feature, "The Hero." As soon as Frankie completes this picture he will start work on the first American boy comedy-drama two-reeler, which Bricker will produce for East Coast Productions, Inc.

"Weight For Me" is the title of the first comedy of the new series of "Fatty" Karr two-reelers, which will be ready for release through Franklyn Backer's East Coast Productions, Inc., Nov. 15.

Bruce Mitchell, producer of the "Fatty" Karr comedies, has leased the Federal Studios at 3700 Temple Street, Los Angeles, to make the series.

Ben Wilson has started work on the third William Fairbanks Western production at the Bertwilla studio. The second feature, "The Sheriff of Sun Dog," has been completed and a print of the feature sent to Arrow Film Corporation, which is distributing the pictures.

Harry M. Warner, head of Warner Brothers, was expected here early this week, but owing to an important deal pending in New York his departure was delayed, according to a wire received at the Warner studio. Mr. Warner is expected here Sunday, Oct. 22. When he arrives his brother, Abe, will return to New York. Several important production deals are pending.

The production activities have developed to such an extent that there is a strong probability the Warner Brothers will acquire another studio pending the enlargement of their own plant.

Wesley Barry, the Warner Brothers' star, this week started on a tour of the Orpheum Circuit. He recently completed his second 1922 production for Warners, "Little Heroes of the Street."

Production has been completed on "Chicago Sal," the Irving Cummings special that Principle Pictures Company will release. The cast includes Milton Sills and Alice Lake.

Production has been finished on the screen version of F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel, "The Beautiful and Damned," featuring Marie Prevost. This production will be handled by Warner Brothers distribution. Jack and S. L. Warner produced it. The latter are now preparing for the production of "The Little Church Around the Corner." E. Mason Hopper will direct the latter picture. Who will appear in it has not been disclosed.

Two additions have been made to the co-operative producing company which B. P. Schulberg is developing here. They are Karl Struss and Harry Perry, both veteran cameramen who have been responsible for the photography of numerous successes. Strnss is working with the Gasnier unit on "The Hero."

Will Tryout Booking Plan

Dallas (Special)—The Schulberg-Lichtman producing and distributing plan will be definitely launched in the South the week of October 29 when "Rich Men's Wives," the first release of the new organization, will play four important first-runs jointly.

E. C. Leeves, manager of the Al Lichtman Exchange of Texas, Inc. has closed with the Interstate Circuit, an important independent company in Texas for first-runs in Dallas, Houston, Fort Worth and San Antonio. The production will have week stands in each city.

George Gould with Garsson

George D. Gould, well known former trade paper editor and formerly managing editor of the Motion Picture News, is now business manager of Murray W. Garson, Inc. He will also direct the publicity and advertising for the concern, which in addition to offering a new series of Nick Carter pictures, now has two units producing feature pictures. These units are under the supervision of Ralph Ince and Roy Sheldon.

Amalgamated List of 'Changes Complete

Announcement was made this week of the list of Amalgamated Film Exchanges, Inc., franchise-holders. The franchise holders include some of the foremost exchanges in the country. The complete list follows:

J. H. Beaver, formerly manager of the Electric Film Corporation, Washington, D. C., has gone into business for himself.

Carl S. Sonin Heads Warner Detroit 'Change

DETROIT—(Special)—Carl S. Sonin is now in active charge of Warner's Exchange in this city, succeeding Dave Warner, who left for Los Angeles, where he will be permanently located, according to a report here. Mr. Sonin is an experienced exchangeman, having been associated with a number of the biggest distributing companies. He gave out the following statement this week:

"We are going to have seven big specials, the first of which will be "From Rags to Riches." Warner Brothers appreciate the splendid support which they have received from exhibitors, and their ambition is to remain independent by producing big specials that every exhibitor will want. I want Michigan exhibitors to feel that they are welcome at our office and that we stand ready at all times to meet them 50-50 on any proposition. We are here to make money both for them as well as ourselves."

Standard Film Service-Federated Exchange here has mailed out about 500 copies of its latest publication, entitled "A Book of Dates, 1923" the same being a date book. The book is being distributed from all four of the Harry Charnas exchanges in this city, Cleveland, Cincinnati and Pittsburgh.

The splendid box office record established here some time ago by "The Kid" was shattered last week by Harry Houdini and his special, "The Man From Beyond," at Kunsky's Madison Theatre. The picture is being road-showed in this territory.

Exchangemen from this city attended the exhibitor convention at Flint, en masse, last week. The boys all agree that exhibitors generally admitted that business was improving consistently.

"What's Wrong With the Women?" the Equity special, plays at the Capitol Theatre here week of October 22.

W. S. (Dad) Witman of the Rex Film Company says business is improving and he has chalked up some of the best houses in the State to show "The Vigilantes," "The Unfortunate Sex" and D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World."

"Insinuation" at R. I. State Prison

Howard, R. I.—(Staff Special)—Four hundred and fifty-two inmates of the Rhode Island State Prison were on Sunday evening, Oct. 15, treated to a special showing of the Margery Wilson feature, "Insinuation." The showing was arranged by Manager Matt Reilley of the Victory Theatre, where that feature played this week in conjunction with "Yankee Doodle, Jr." Miss Margery Wilson appeared personally and her brief, but clever talk made a distinct hit with the inmates who applauded her enthusiastically for several minutes.

Houdini Picture Smashes Record

Detroit—(Special)—"The Man From Beyond," the Harry Houdini special, broke all records at Kunsky's Madison Theatre here last week, the gross business surpassing that done by Charley Chaplin's "The Kid."

Boston—(Special)—"The Man From Beyond," the Houdini picture, in conjunction with the showing of which Clayton, The Mystic, personally appeared, closed a most successful two-week run at the Globe Theatre here Saturday, Oct. 14.

Ray Johnston Puts Over Deal

W. Ray Johnston, vice president of Arrow Film Corporation, has sold to Qualtoplay Film Company, of Syracuse, the Jack Hoxie series, for Upper New York. Mr. Johnston, who visited Buffalo and Syracuse on his recent trip, called on all the independent exchanges and reports conditions on the upgrade in the Northern New York territory.

Novelty Exploitation Stunts For Will Nigh's "Notoriety"

The producers of Will Nigh's photo drama "Notoriety," have left nothing to the imagination in the exploitation campaign mapped out for the use of exhibitors during the run of the picture. The procedure is as simple as it is effective and is now being put in practice by Sam Grand's exchange in Boston. The title itself suggests the tie-up, as the word "Notoriety" is automatically connected with newspaper sensations. Every angle of theatre exploitation from lobby to street and newspaper is covered and consists of the following:

The exhibitor first selects the biggest local paper and concentrates on it in all his publicity, in return for which the newspaper concentrates on the theatre in its publicity for "Notoriety." In his lobby, the exhibitor builds a monster sign showing the front pages of the particular newspaper with the sensational stories underlined. Across the face of the sign the exhibitor has the word "Notoriety" written in rough script. The same paper is used to cover his box office and to make paper clothes for his ushers and attendants. Across the reading matter, the word "Notoriety" is written. The newspaper benefits by the publicity that its name and front page receive, which makes reciprocal publicity for the theatre an easy matter. One newspaper contest in particular is expected to prove unusually successful. This consists of the newspaper calling upon its readers to count the number of stories in its daily issues, exemplifying notoriety. The reader or readers guessing the correct number, receives free admission to the showing of the picture.

There always are a good number of notorious scandal stories in the papers every day and this contest makes it necessary for the reader to peruse the paper carefullly.

Another valuable newspaper tie-up is a "notoriety contest," in which every advertiser in each edition of the paper is presented with a free pass to "Notoriety."

New Boston 'Change Is Formally Opened

BOSTON (Special) — Formal opening of the new headquarters of the Franklin Film Company, who are the New England distributors for Warner Brothers, occurred on Tuesday of this week in the presence of more than 200 exhibitors from all over the district. The local film district also was well represented by managers who called to tender their congratulations and best wishes. Many handsome floral offerings testified mutely to the felicitations of well-wishers.

The Franklin Film Company starts off with a bang and with a sales force that is bound to be heard from in the New England district. "Bill" Shapiro is president and general manager, Irving L. Walenstein is the office manager and will have charge of sales in Boston and vicinity; Harold S. Eskin has been assigned the Connecticut territory, and will make his headquarters at New Haven; and the rest of the New England territory will be looked after by Charles B. White, Saul Smokler, Harry F. Goldstein and Ben Lourie.

In connection with the opening of this new distributing office, it may be mentioned that Warner Brothers have started an exploitation stunt for "Rags and Riches," the Wesley Barry classic, and their picturesque float is attracting great attention on the streets of Boston and its environs. The picture is to be shown next week at Loew's New State Theatre, and the float is to be here all next week. Incidentally, it also is being used to combat the censorship

Simeral Acquires Arrow Features

A big Arrow sales deal was consummated this week between Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, and Harry Simeral, who operates the H. C. Simeral Company, an independent exchange in Pittsburgh, of which Mr. Simeral is the president and P. W. Hamilton is the secretary and treasurer.

Under the terms of this contract, H. C. Simeral Company will distribute in Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia the following pictures:

"Night Life in Hollywood," "The Streets of New York," "The Innocent Cheat," "Chain Lightning," "A Motion to Adjourn," "Back to Yellow Jacket," "One-Eighth Apache," "Little Casino," "A Yankee Go-Getter," "Dangerous Paths," "The Price of Youth," "Impulse," "The Hidden Light," "Love, Hate and a Woman," "The Splendid Lie," "Six Jack Hoxies," "Peaceful Peters," "The Sheriff of Sun-Dog" and Eddie Lyons Special Comedies—twelve.

Mr. Simeral is building up a new organization for the proper handling and exploiting of the pictures named above. Ben Abrams one of the real veterans of the film industry, who began his activities some eighteen years ago with Ad Kessel and who has just severed his connection with First National, which organization he served in the capacity of special representative, has affiliated himself in a like capacity with the new company.

Hyperion Will Have Six Productions

Announcement of interest to the independent market is made this week by the Hyperion Pictures Corporation, which offers to independent exchanges a group of six pictures, for release this season.

"Finger Prints," the first of the six, is now ready, and the other five will be released at regular intervals of about six weeks. "The Seventh Noon," from the novel by Frederic Orin Bartlett, is in preparation and the titles and other details of the remainder of the series will be made public shortly.

According to the statement of the distributing organization, the series of pictures is being made by men who have intimate knowledge of conditions in the independent field, and these photodramas have been produced to fill the need now urgent in that field.

These six pictures, the company officials declare, will have competent direction and experienced casts, high-class productions, strong stories by popular authors, and titles with big exploitation and publicity possibilities.

Big Month For Principle

If the plans of Messrs. Sol and Irving Lesser and Michael Rosenberg, of Principle Pictures Company, do not miscarry, November will be an epoch-making month in the history of not only that new-born organization, but for the leading exchanges associated with it. According to a statement issued this week by Eastern Manager Irving Lesser, that concern will have two big specials ready for release next month. The specials are "Chicago Sal," an Irving Cummings production with an all-star cast, and "The World's a Stage," an Elinor Glyn feature, starring Dorothy Phillips.

Eddie Bonns Joins Goldwyn

Eddie Bonns, who has been making history for independents as exploitation and publicity director of Warner Brothers, joins Goldwyn on Monday, October 23, as head of the exploitation staff. Since Jimmy Grainger became an executive of Goldwyn, rumors were rife that Eddie was to join his old friend, but not until this week was the report officially verified. Lon Young, who has been associated with the Warners for many years and who has been doing splendid work as head of the contract department, will succeed Bonns as publicity and exploitation director. He will be ably assisted by Lou Marangella, who has been Bonns' right hand man since he took over the position.

Two Murray Garsson Units Start Production Activities; News of Eastern Studios

Indicative that Murray W. Garsson intends to take a prominent place in the producer ranks is the announcement made this week that two companies, under his banner, began work on big feature productions.

Ralph Ince started shooting on October 16 at the Talmadge studios, New York, on a screen version of the stage hit, "Success." While the working title of "The Has Been" has been used in announcing this production, it is probable Mr. Garsson will keep to the original nomenclature, "Success," when the feature is ready for release. The cast includes Joseph Kelgour, Naomi Childers, Brandon Tynan, Mary Astor, Dore Davidson, Stanley Ridges, Lionel Adams, Gay Pendleton, Billy Quirk. Thomas Atkins is assistant director.

Simultaneous with the activity of the New York company, another group under the direction of Roy Sheldon, which left New York on October 15, starts work on "Way Down South" at Albany, Georgia, the locale of the story. Careful selection by Mr. Garsson of players has resulted in the collection of an unusually strong cast in support of Marian Swayne, who plays the leading feminine role, and Joe King, the male lead. The cast includes Jack Richardson, Irene Boyle, Isabelle Fisher, Norma Lee, Dan Haynes, W. F. Chaplin, Melville Shyer, John Jenkins and Frances Grant.

With the completion of "The Shylock of Wall Street," Burton King is now concentrating on his plans for the next production, which in all probability will be "Plastered Saints." Production, however, is not expected to start until late this month.

Margery Wilson, the producer-director-star, writes to the effect that she will be in New York next week to negotiate releasing arrangements for her picture, "Insinuation," which she has been personally exhibiting in New England houses.

Will Nigh will not start production on his second L. Lawrence Weber-Bobby North feature until late next month. This week announcement came from the Weber-North offices that three pictures had been purchased for Nigh, based on Broadway successes.

There is a letter at this office for Master Joseph Depew.

Johnny Hines, the C. C. Burr star, is making personal appearances in conjunction with premier showings of "Sure Fire Flint." He is in Boston this week, and next week he appears at the Victoria Theatre in Philadelphia.

The first "Torchy" comedy that Ray McKee and an all-star cast are making for Master Films, Inc., has been completed. During the making of one of the thrillers in the first picture, a chase staged in the midst of heavy traffic on Fifth avenue, several players were injured, one still being in the hospital.

Ben Silvey, Burton King's assistant director, is one of the most versatile directors in the business, according to his big chief, who gives him no little credit for the splendid aid he gave him during the making of "Shylock of Wall Street."

Edria Fisk, one of the winners of the Atlantic City beauty contest, who was engaged by Arrow Film Corporation for a part in their new James Oliver Curwood special, "Jacqueline," started work on Wednesday at the Peerless studio, Fort Lee, N. J.

Export-Import Buys Reelcraft

Export & Import Film Company, Inc., this week announced that it had purchased from the receivers of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation all rights, title and interest in negatives in the possession of the latter firm. These negatives embrace 160 in number, including one and two-reel subjects with Billy West, Texas Guinan, Alice Howell, Bill Franey, Matty Roubert, George Clarke and Milburn Mornati comedies.

Selling the Picture to the Public

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Bondage to Artist Is Wasteful Loss of High Priced Newspaper Advertising

LAST week, in this department, we ran a series of charts which very conclusively prove that ticket sales have no definite proportion to excess advertising space. Larger spaces may gain more attention, but as Lem Stewart adds, the sales value lies in the copy rather than in the size of the space. A strongly written display in three nines can sell more tickets than a poor appeal taking a quarter or half a page.

The article was written chiefly in response to the correspondence from numerous managers following an earlier story which carried no illustrative charts. Managers seemed to feel that the remarks on saving money through conservative and intelligent use of space was a matter of importance.

A Greater Waste

There can be no question as to the value of the charts. They demonstrate that large spaces: space in excess of actual requirements, is wasteful. Of that the managers appear to be convinced, but some of the very men to whom the saving through reduction seems to appeal strongly countenance a far greater waste. To quote from a letter from Lem Stewart, which followed his drawings:

"Analyze these charts to the bottom and they show that the mere attention value gained by the use of larger space plays but a very small part in returns. The substance—content—is the thing that counts, be it large or small. Large space is a costly substitute for lack of ability. Too many managers publish announcements rather than advertisements, and seem to think that extra inches mean extra advertising."

But Mr. Stewart makes no mention of the greater waste due to a lack of proper proportion between cut and copy, though his remark applies with even greater force to this phase of advertising.

Greater Losses Sustained

For every dollar wasted through the use of a larger space than is necessary to put over the argument, many dollars are thrown away in the use of over-elaborate art work. Although art work is supposed merely to attract attention to the text, it often happens that the artist so grossly exceeds his proper space allowance that less than ten per cent. of the space is given over to the text which really sells. Only about once in a thousand times does the drawn design sell over the printed word, and to get room in which to display his talk, the agent is forced to take a larger space in order to obtain legibility. He is often compelled to set real selling talk in unleaded six point because the artist has hogged a majority of the space for a cut absolutely without meaning and often not even slightly relevant to the attraction.

In other words a manager is paying the cost of ten lines for each line of copy printed.

Artists Are Difficult

And this is due to the fact that the artist gets first chance at the space. Generally he draws the layout and gives it to the press man to fill in with type such holes as it may please him to leave. He deliberately wasted his employer's money to demonstrate his artistic skill. And managers fear to argue with the artist because he is so temperamental.

The artist who is too temperamental to consider his employer's interests first and to be willing to do the work for which he is employed is a detriment rather than a help. It would be the better move to throw him out bodily. Better a type advertisement without cut attrator than an advertisement which is so filled with art work that there is no room for proper display.

Poor Business

It is bad enough to pay an artist his salary without being forced to pay advertising space on his advertising botches, and this applies whether the rate be ten cents an inch or fifty cents a line.

For the past several years this department has fought against this reckless waste of money and opportunity in its advertising criticisms. Perhaps the Stewart ad. charts will serve also to direct attention to this greater, and more wasteful evil.

If your artist will not do as he is told, fire him and get one—even though an inferior one, who will. Get a man who is competent to take the designs from the press book and work them into the space, you will save on art work and get better advertising to boot.

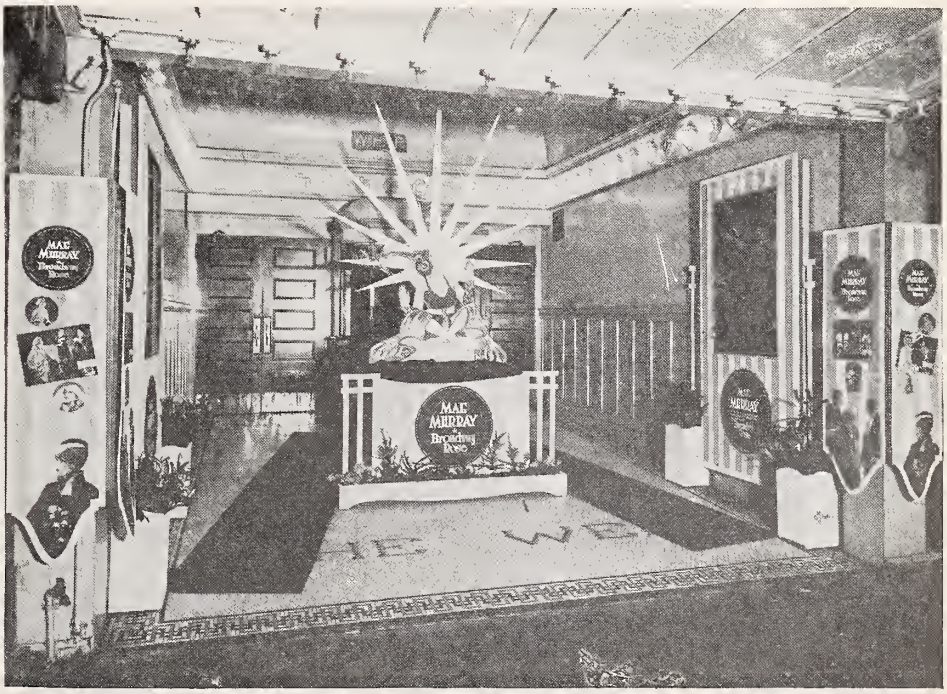
Lem's Word

Almost the entire Paramount staff seems to have been taking a crack at Lem Stewart's word to indicate a repellent advertising idea, but the best suggestion comes from the purchasing department rather than from the publicity or exploitation staff. Thomas J. Walsh suggests "nixploit" and "nixploitation."

Claud Saunders has a vocabulary of several hundred words, but "bustation" and "backfirication" are the only printable ones, and we do not care much for either.

Russell Holman prefers "exspoilation" and A. M. Bottsford says that a nixploiter is a "floppateer." Sam Palmer, who runs a drug store on the side calls it "badex" (advt.), and John D. Howard likes "Malploit" better than we do.

Ralph Ruffner has been heard from at last. He offers "blotto." This is an English word meaning "stewed" (they still have it in Canada, you know), but the word is snappy and suggestive and Lem might do worse than to make his choice between "blotto" and "nixploit." We like the latter better.



A Metro Release

O. T. TAYLOR'S DESIGN FOR MAE MURRAY IN "BROADWAY ROSE"

The basis of the design for this Tiffany production was the same as that used for "Fascination," but no one would ever know it. It made good business at the Weir Theatre, Aberdeen, Wash. Natural roses should be used on the trellis when in season.

Toy Train Display Cleans on Fast Mail

When "The Love Special" came out some one down South discovered that toy train running in the lobby would get larger crowds than the usual advertising ideas, and it was very generally used. It was worked again for "The Iron Trail" and for "The Old Nest," and on other plays and always with the same result. There is something about the mechanical train that always wins favor.

John D. Jones, of the Lyric, Palace and Crystal Theatres, San Angelo, Texas, who pulls a pretty exploitation every little while, has adapted the idea to the showing of "The Fast Mail," which is right in line with the idea, and he built this display at a cost of less than four dollars.

The platform of old material is supported on four oil drums, and the train, track and station were borrowed from the local dealer while the tunnel is merely a window card, though tunnels can be also borrowed from most stores. The track was laid out as a square with rounded corners, and the train ran as long as the current was kept on.

The larger engine is cut from a sheet and mounted on compo-board, serving as a backing. A nitrogen bulb serves as a headlight.

The display held crowds all day long and at showing times, and brought a larger return than would many pretentious displays.

A Fox Release

THIS STUNT FOR THE "FAST MAIL" COST FOUR DOLLARS

It was worked by John D. Jones, of the Crystal Theatre, San Angelo, Texas. The train was borrowed and the engine was cut from compo board and provided with an electric headlight. The train idea has cleaned up for other plays than this Fox release.

Forty Inch Candle Not Eternal Flame

Huge candles have been generally used for advertising Norma Talmadge in "The Eternal Flame."

The Auditorium Theatre, Winston-Salem, N. C., used one forty inches tall in the window of a jewelry store, surrounded by a display of Norma pearls. To invite guesses as to the number of hours it would burn would be to face trouble under the lottery law, but it was found possible to interest persons in the life of the candle by presenting it as a test of their accuracy in computation. As the candle burned for some time, it brought the people back to see how close they came to being correct, for it is only human to be interested in your own cleverness.

A large candle is not an eternal flame, but it is a good ticket seller. If you do not know where to obtain a large candle, ask some Catholic priest.

At It Again

All of the theatres which used chariots for Theodora are getting out the two-wheeled carts for Fox's Nero, figuring that it is not too soon to repeat on a stunt which brought money once.

If you have Nero and did not have the other production, you can make a nice chariot out of the tongue and front wheels of a lumber wagon, plus a couple of boards for a platform and a tin or even cardboard structure.

Girl Perambulators Told of "The Storm"

This stunt seems to have been suggested by the Universal press book, since it has been so widely used, but it is worth while and cheap. In Los Angeles it cost the Superba only $32 for six days, and it was worth a great deal more than it cost.

A First National Release

THE RAINY DAY GIRLS

This will work on any weather title and if you are at a loss for a stunt, it can be worked on almost any title on a pinch. If you send a girl out, mark the handle of the umbrella so that she can see when the sign is in the proper position for display.

A Universal Release

PUTTING EVERYTHING BUT THE PAYROLL ON THE LOBBY FRONT

The Blackstone Theatre, Detroit, believes in telling the world. Those lower frames contain every picture ever printed on "Foolish Wives," and some the artist drew to eke out with. It's noisy, but the Blackstone thrives on display loudness.

Booked It

About the only thing needed to put over "Kindred of the Dust" at the Victor Theatre, McKeesport, Pa., was a hook-up with the four booksellers in town and the suggestion that the patron read the book and see the play. Then heralds and throwaways drove home the idea. It worked like a new stunt.

Don't exploit a poor picture and don't overlook the exploitation possibilities of the good one. Make exploitation your guarantee.

A Paramount Release

A NICE CANOPY DISPLAY FOR "NICE PEOPLE" IN WICHITA

This is the front of the Palace Theatre, and while the cutout letters over the canopy do not show up well in the photograph, because of the strips, they made a fine showing when you got the color effects.

Shifted the Cage

Up to date 8,164 exhibitors have advertised Gloria Swanson in "Her Gilded Cage" by making some sort of a cage for the lobby.

The other man is Harry McClure, of Emporia, Kansas. He made a seven-foot cage and hung it to the telegraph pole in front of the house.

That's better still.

Some Slam

When "A Fool There Was" played the Rowland and Clark theatres, Pittsburgh, the theatre hooked up to a beauty contest running in a local paper and drove the winner around town in a borrowed car, which was labeled "The Fool Proof Car." That lifts the curse a little, but we think it rather ungallant to use a local beauty to exploit the title.

Painted the Car

It cost R. K. Dunham, of the Rex Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Wash., nine dollars to have his car painted over with bright red water color on which was lettered the title and book derivation of Goldwyn's "When Romance Rides." It brought business two hundred dollars over the average, and Mr. Dunham considers that he got his money back.

After the engagement was over he merely turned the hose on the car and had it washed down with a soft sponge without detriment to the enamel.

This is old stuff, but it is used very little in proportion to its efficiency.

Perfectly Safe

Ike Swenson, of the Angelus Theatre, Spanish Fork, Utah, in collaboration with Kenneth O. Renaud, of Paramount, spent a couple of dollars on throwaways to assure the populace that the bull fights at the race track would be perfectly safe, because the bull pens were properly constructed.

Then a couple of days later they spent a few more dollars stating that the fight had been forbidden by the Sheriff but that no earthly power could prevent Valentino from butchering the bull at the Angelus, so the people laughed—and came.

Fools First Again

Once more the title of "Fools First" has been worked into a safety campaign. This time it was San Francisco which argued against jay-walking, and the taxicab companies were the parties of the second part, opposite the Tivoli Theatre, where the Marshall Neilan-First National was played first run. "Fools first in accidents" was the slogan. Simple and telling.

Paid Big Profit

It cost only $10 to put over "Grandma's Boy" at Gadsden, Ala. A. L. Snell worked the Grandmother's Matinee, sixty-four accepting the invitation. A street ballyhoo of grandma and her boy was used, freight cars were bannered, cutouts of Lloyd were given auto rides and a small telephone campaign was used.

The average business was doubled.

Butterflies Hover Over Eternal Flame

Two enormous candles in a jeweler's window typified "The Eternal Flame," then playing at the Des Moines Theatre, Des Moines, Ia. Butterflies were attached to the mirrors near which the candles burned.

A more effective form would be to wire the candles for electric bulbs and then use invisible wires to bring the butterflies close to the enticing flame, better carrying out the idea.

This Is a Pip

Perhaps "pippin" is an antiquity and we should call it the cat's meow or something, but anyhow it's good.

A. C. Cowles, of the Rex Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., is campaigning to get back a public spoiled by a revival meeting, and he works with jazz.

For "Grandma's Boy" he set a scales into the loby with the sign: "Laugh and Grow Fat. Weigh yourself as you go in and again as you come out, and see how much you gain."

After the house was in the scales was tricked to register an additional ten pounds. Everyone knew it was a fake, but they laughed and told others.

Just for a Change

Just as snow lobbies were being worked out, Ross Rogers, of the Mission Theatre, Amarillo, Texas, got the idea of working Christmas trees on "The Top of New York," playing up the Christmas angle of the picture. He placed several trees in the lobby with a cutout of Miss McAvoy in her dancing dress at the rear. It was effective, suggestive of winter, and yet away from the usual stuff.

Perhaps it was the Christmas angle which suggested to Mr. Rogers that he hook a local drug store to an offer to give free pads and pencils to the children attending a certain matinee. Then the faculties were sold on the distribution of cards to the school children:something they have never permitted before, but passed this time since it gave the children something for nothing. It gave business a boost at a cost of $8.

A Paramount Release

NOTE HOW THE FLOOR LINES CARRY THE IDEA TO THE ENTRANCE

This was done in water color and ran the eye to the sill formed by the set display, where a legend ran "Come on in." Part of Tom Clemmons' work for Paramount Week at the Tivoli Theatre, Beaumont, Tex. It was a return date, but it got the coin.

Beats Old Idea of Banking the Films

Some time ago a number of exhibitors made a lot of comment by storing their features in a safe deposit vault, but that was not colorful enough for Des Moines where Ed. M. Helmts, of the Strand, and Johnny Friedl, Paramounteer, wanted to bump "Blood and Sand" to capacity.

Friedl wrote an innocent-looking letter to the chief of police telling how costly the print of the Valentino feature was and asking his advice as to a good safe place for storage. The courteous chief offered to store them in the headquarters' safe.

Selecting a time when they knew the police run reporters would be hanging around for news, Helmt and Friedl took the cans over, and persuaded the chief to pose for a picture beside the reels. The reporters actually begged for copies of the print and reluctantly Friedl assented, with the result that the police guard story was in all the papers, and no one realized that a print of "Blood and Sand" has no greater intrinsic value than the worst bloomer. If you work the stunt, stress the loss of business from non-exhibition rather than the value of the reels, and you can bat it over.

If you can borrow the patrol wagon for cartage, so much the better. That was one point Friedl overlooked.

A Paramount Release

A PARTICULARLY GOOD WINDOW CARD FOR "MANSLAUGHTER"

There may be no real connection between "Manslaughter" and wedding rings, but Wayland Taylor, the San Francisco Paramounteer, helped Milt Samis break into a jewelry store without getting into trouble with the police. Done for the Imperial Theatre.

The Good Old Timers Win Again for Jackie

Not to be too radical, the Butterfly Theatre, Milwaukee, got out an impersonation stunt for Jackie Coogan in "Trouble." Also they used the street parade. And there was an orphan's matinee. It was a regular Coogan campaign.

But they also had a balloon race, and they got a much prettier window from the clothing store than the average shown. Just a fence and a brick wall to back up the cutout, but it made a real picture that caught the attention.

The balloon race was the throwaway stunt, with passes attached, 150 being used, about one to each ten kids.

Trick Transparency

Building up on the oiled lithograph, J. B. Robertson, of the Palace Theatre, Ft. Smith, Ark., took a step ahead.

The paper was a six-sheet of Betty Compson, in "The Bonded Woman." This was set into a shallow box and lighted from behind. It gave a good daylight display. and at night it looked like real money.

The scene showed a tropical landscape, and to get his new effect Mr. Robertson put small streamers behind the picture and a little distance to the rear. A small electric fan kept these in motion and as they were not clearly silhouetted against the paper, the suggestion was that of moving foliage, creating an additional interest in the picture. The idea is capable of considerable development.

The stunt cost only $2 and is credited with a twenty per cent. increase.

Puffed Up Gloria from Gilded Cage

Puffing up "Her Gilded Cage" was a literal fact in Atlanta the week before the picture played the Howard Theatre.

The Howard has a large foyer and in the centre of this was a handsome gilded cage, roped off from the patrons by ribbon barriers. Just before each de luxe performance a small orchestra would start to play on the mezzanine balcony and a girl somewhat resembling Miss Swanson would come down the steps and enter the cage.

Once inside she made distribution of Gloria Swanson powder puffs, which were regular quarter quality, but which De Sales Harrison picked up very cheaply because of the advertisement the distribution would give the makers. Each was enclosed in an envelope which carried the advertisement.

After the feature opened they took the cage to the outer lobby and matched it with another, making these the chief feature of the lobby dress.

SAME OLD IDEA, BUT A PRETTIER WINDOW THAN USUAL

Yes, the card announces the Jackie Coogan impersonation contest, this time for the Butterfly Theatre, Milwaukee. Browning, King & Co. gave the window because they sold the suit which was the prize in the contest. Sure they had the parade.

Sonny Was Busy

More than fifty pasters were used in stores when "Sonny" played the Rivoli Theatre, La Crosse.

Printed strips were prepared reading to the effect that "Sonny eats here," or got his clothes, or bought his groceries or furniture or whatever it was. There were enough to cover all of the La Crosse industries except the undertaker, and virtually every important store was plastered with a strip.

Pretty much the same thing is being done for "Nice People," but First National started it and got the jump.

Clarke's New One

One of the stunts worked by H. B. Clarke, of the Strand Theatre, Memphis, on "While Satan Sleeps," was a pair of urns covered with red tissue paper under which large lamps worked on a rapid flasher circuit. Incense was burned in the urns to help the effect.

Cutout devils on either side of the lobby and a large devil's head, with gleaming eyes, over the box office, helped to put business up several hundred dollars at a cost of only thirty.

MAKING A FASHION SHOW WITH THE GIRL USHERS

The Tivoli, San Francisco, used its own employes for a lobby fashion show, tying up to a local store which co-operated with the house in getting the photographs in the newspapers. The stunt was worked on Norma Talmage in "The Eternal Flame."

Edgar Hart Invents New Waterfall Idea

J. M. Edgar Hart, of the Palace Theatre, El Paso, has been very quiet—for him—of late, and to catch up he blossoms out with a good new idea for a waterfall for a lobby display.

The chief factors are a watertight barrel and a tin tank. The tank rests on the floor and makes a base for a built-up scene. Back of this stands the barrel, with a slit about an inch high and ten or twelve inches wide cut about a third of the way from the top.

Into this slit is tacked a tin chute which leads to the bottom of the tin tank. On this is a bit of white oilcloth (for a snow scene) puffed into rocks.

A small pump, working on the house current, keeps the water in circulation and the slit provides a more even flow than can possibly be obtained from a pipe or a sprinkler.

Hart worked this in a lobby setting for "I Am the Law," and to add the last touch of refinement he put a little laundry blueing in the water, "to make it look colder." Use just enough to kill any suggestion of yellow in the water and you will be surprised at the improvement this will make.

You can build up the scene to suit your title, for it works with both cold and foliage sets. Make one up and have it handy in case you need one in a hurry.

Castilian Shawl on "Blood and Sand"

It's nice when you can borrow lobby displays. Loew's Palace Theatre, Memphis, borrowed a shawl valued at $1,600 for part of its display on "Blood and Sand" in the lobby the week before the play date. When the picture came in this was taken to a show window where it got still more attention.

The banner above the display is cloth of gold, with the lettering cut from red and yellow felt and the bull ring shows a painted background, with miniature cutout figures in the arena. Red and yellow pennants and flowers in tall wicker baskets flanked the display.

The figure of the toreador was taken from the 24-sheet and after the preliminary showing was provided with a gilt sword and set in place on the marquise, the underside of which was hung with red and yellow awning cloth to suggest the entrance to the plaza.

This is the advance lobby work on "Blood and Sand" from Loew's Palace Theatre, Memphis. On the run the cutout was used for the marquise and the miniature was put into a show window, the red and yellow awning effect being used for the lobby display.

Paramount Hustler Dazes Newspaper Man

Here's a little sidelight on hook-up pages and exploitation men.

Petrolia is a town in Ontario which lost its ambition when oil was discovered and the populace settled down to live off its income. They had so much money they did not have to hustle any more.

Came John Myers, who owns houses in Petrolia and Sarnia, with headquarters in the latter place. Came also George A. Smith, Paramounteer. They talked to the editor of the local paper about a hook-up page on "Beyond the Rocks."

The editor was hard boiled until he could break cast iron by dropping on it, but they talked him into giving them the 2,000-line rate on condition the ads were all new business. If they got this, they would get a page write-up.

It was only three hours from show time in Sarnia and Mr. Myers wanted to get back, but he and Smith dusted out and presently returned with a three-page hook-up from advertisers the editor had been trying half heartedly to sell for five years. They brought in fifteen new accounts. That's going some.

Had Willing Victim for Beauty Shop

Charles E. Sasseen, of the Tremont Theatre, Galveston, borrowed a lot of apparatus from a local beauty shop when he came to put over Raymond Hitchcock.

There was an operating chair, in which a wax dummy, borrowed from a drygoods store, was waiting for the ministrations of another wax girl who stood with an electrical massage machine in her hands. The white enamel cabinets and tables were supplied by the shop, and the backing was merely a drape strung across a part of the lobby.

Outside of the fact that the dummy in the chair was not jointed at the hips and suggested rigor mortis, the display was very effective.

Made Blood and Sand Pay Unusual Returns

Walter Irvin, of the Imperial Theatre, Columbia, S. C., did better with "Blood and Sand" than with any picture he has had in the year he has run that theatre, but he did not do it by waiting for people to come in, attracted by the star or title. He went after them—hard.

He started the slides six weeks in advance, and at the same time began to run small dog stories in the paper. Three of these stories were about the large crowds trying to get into the Rivoli, New York, on the first showing, and were intended to pave the way for the trailer which showed the mobs, and which he ran the week before the engagement.

A Paramount Release

THE COLUMBIA LOBBY

The lobby, as shown, was taken from the Paramount suggestion given in this department, and the idea was carried in back of the box office, the red and yellow striped canvas lining the lobby and giving more life to the rather small opening.

Much ado was made of the fact that the Imperial had one of the three prints in the South the first week of the run and that no one could see it sooner than Columbia. This pleased local pride and helped keep the business up.

Put Over Post on His Seattle Favor

Because of the favor he gained on the stage in Seattle, Guy Bates Post ran for nine days at the Coliseum.

Manager Steffy had arranged to open him on a Saturday, but a booking kink gave him the picture to open Thursday, and he put "The Masquerader" in to finish off the week and run until the following Saturday.

To do this, he sold a local paper on the serial publication of the story, getting a full page advertisement to open. This gave him the bannered delivery wagons, and that was about all that was needed to get the star over to unusually good business.

Touted Ballyhoo

Here is a two-way stunt devised by Harry Thornton, of the Princess Theatre, Springfield, Ill. He planned to have heralds distributed for "The Masquerader," and the day before he inserted in the evening paper a teaser reading: "If you should see (here he described his bill peddler), please notify Harry Thornton." The telephone address was added.

Naturally the people kept a lookout for the wanted man, and they took one of his bills. Most of them realized that it was a stunt sting, but a number called up Thornton, which gave him a chance to tell them more about the attraction. This will work on any picture, but should be reserved for a good one.

Just Happened

Guy Bates Post just happened to be wearing a Dunlap hat when he posed for the pictures for "The Masquerader," but an astute press agent for the attraction noticed the brand and hooked the pictures to a display in the Dunlap agency in Los Angeles, and the exploitation staff is gloating over the fact that the pictures are the "straight" poses and can be used for other Post releases.

Keep it in mind and find out what local shop carries that make of headgear against the time you get your chance.

Howard, Atlanta, Uses Displays Two Weeks

Too many managers seem to feel that if they run a couple of "coming" slides on the screen they are doing all they can to make business for the following week. They do not realize the value of selling the pleased patron as he is leaving the house.

The Howard Theatre, Atlanta, is an exception, for De Sales Harrison has a fine foyer and he makes ample use of it. The patron must come down a flight of steps from the auditorium, cross the foyer to the exit doors and pass through the lobby.

The Howard displays are frequently made to be shown in the foyer the preceding week. Take this for "Blood and Sand," as an example.

This was first shown in the foyer, backed with wall wings on which were mounted cutouts. Saturday night the painting was taken over to the lobby after the night show and put up in back of the box office, which had been decorated with red and yellow bunting and supplied with a striped awning in the same colors. Back of the painting was a length of scarlet cloth, and in front was run a string of pennants of red and yellow, which barely show in the reproduction. The foyer frames also became lobby frames, and the walls and massive pillars were draped in bunting, as was the balcony railing above the house. The pictures give only a hint of the effect, but the idea is there for you to study out, and the cash increase which the decorations helped to gain was important even where the large capacity of the house is considered.

For Over the Border

"Over the Border" has not been used for hook-up purposes because the title did not appear to lend itself to that form of advertising, but Bob Gary, Wisconsin Paramounteer, got it into a corner and choked it until it yielded a hook-up line.

Then he went out and sold a merchant's page with such slogans as "Our prices never go over the border of justice and fairness."

It's not as good as it might be, but anything which yields a page of hooks and an editorial mention cannot be called poor.

Too many managers overlook the advertising possibilities of an appeal to the departing patrons who can be coaxed to return.

JUST FOR A CHANGE, THESE ARE NOT THE ORIGINALS

The Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, dressed its ushers in the period of "The Eternal Flame" as a ballyhoo stunt. The store making the gowns reproduced them for a window show to hook up to the popularity of the star.

Blind Man Busted Carnival Chances

When a carnival rolls into town down South it's good night for the picture theatres, for the town spends its money on the carnival attractions. A. L. Snell, of the Imperial Theatre, Gadsden, knew this, but he was not going to quit without a fight, and he fought to such advantage that he at least held his business up instead of making his weekly report nine-tenths minus sign.

He had Gloria Swanson and he sent a gilt cage out with a very pretty girl inside. This drove along the streets leading to the carnival pitch and turned some of the money back.

Then he moved the cage into the lobby, put in a cutout in a ribbon swing and started anew after the sideshows.

He used the blind man stunt, with a card reading "I'd give almost anything if I could see 'Her Gilded Cage,' now playing at the Imperial." Some of the concessionaires wanted to throw him off the lot, but they did not dare, and the "blind" man took in all the shows and drank pink lemonade and cracked peanuts and the ticket sellers frothed at the mouth because they were losing some of their money to the theatre.

Mr. Snell also tied up a music store window with the Harry Sweet statement that no bird in her gilded cage could sing more sweetly than a victrola, and he put out 1,000 rotogravure sections in the papers that came into Gadsden, regardless of where they came from.

Memories

Selling the idea of "Nice People," Raymond Willie, of the Palace Theatre, Dallas, built a large wineglass cutout from compo board with some nice red wine painted in.

On this he pasted cutouts of the characters in the play smoking, drinking and dancing, using the title to give point to the actions.

It cost him $10 and it helped run the business up thirty per cent.

Included Kiddies

O. C. Lam, of the Elite Theatre, Rome, Ga., used the grandmother's matinee for "Grandma's Boy," but he ran it from 11 to 3 and included the grandchildren in the free offer.

He writes that the chief value of the idea lies in newspaper mention and getting into the house a class of persons strange to the picture theatres and who get their best impression from this clever comedy.

With only $4.50 spent in extra advertising, he drew down a fifty per cent increase over the usual business.

This stunt has proven the ace of this Associate Exhibitor's production.

Repeats Old Idea

Some years ago a popular stunt was to present large handkerchiefs to prospective patrons of weepy plays, or to advertise them for sale in the stores.

When "Silver Wings" was presented at the Rowland and Clark Theatres, Pittsburgh, recently, several thousand cheap handkerchiefs were distributed from a float stamped with an advertisement for the picture.

The float contained an old lady at a sewing machine, and the machine agency split the cost in return for the advertisement their machine received.

Lobby Miniature to Warm Up On Rebook

It is not always easy to get interest on a picture announced and then withdrawn, only to be rebooked a few weeks later. Disappointment leaves the prospects cold and they must be steamed up through extra effort.

W. A. Doster, of the Strand Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., did this on "The Valley of Silent Men" by reproducing a lobby miniature, knowing that miniatures are generally more appreciated than a fully decorated space. There is something even more appealing to the average person in small scenes, and this toon up only about a third the width of the lobby. A banner was used to get the big display, and the combined effect permitted Mr. Doster to drop his advertising to about 18 inches to each of three newspapers. It cost around $44 to put the picture over to importantly increased business.

Working the same title with a full show lobby gave an equally good result to B. B. Garner, of the Casino Theatre, Lakeland, Fla. He went to some trouble on the display as the lobby was shown all day Sunday, while the house was closed, and he got by with only 27 inches of advertising.

Unoriginal Gowns An Original Stunt

Just to be different, the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, hooked a store window to a reproduction of the gowns worn by Norma Talmadge in "The Eternal Flame."

The theatre used dresses of a similar period for its ushers, and the store which made up the costumes for the house put a couple in the window along with some advertising for the house and play, to get in on the attention the idea attracted.

But the Kinema has a real original in the coach used in the production. That would cost too much to reproduce, but it obtained the loan of the actual property from the studio, and it made a brave showing on the Los Angeles streets, even against the circus floats some of the players run around in and call automobiles.

THIS LOBBY MINIATURE WAS WHAT CAUGHT THE CROWD

Banners will seldom pull strongly, but this hand-made valley, with cutouts from the one-sheets in a log cabin set, brought a lot of business to the Strand Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., where the stunt was worked by W. A. Doster to overcome a previous disappointment.

Heated the Lobby While Satan Slept

Arthur Swanke, of the Rialto Theatre, El Dorado, Ark., sends in the lobby display he used on "While Satan Sleeps," with the comment that it made a lot of talk and sold tickets.

The chief feature is the reverse of the popular "cold" lobby, for a recessed display, in several planes, shows a vivid collection of flames, with Satan very evidently wide awake. No details are given as to lighting, if there was any, but red and yellow globes back of the opening would have contributed materially to the effect, and chiffon flames instead of card would have given life to the display, a fan inside the box being sufficient to keep the chiffon floating. This appears to be a painted card, and the chiffon can be used later to build up.

The banner carries flaming letters. Here we think that the better effect would have come from the words "while" and "sleeps" with the devil's head in between to tie up. There are enough posters in the lobby to explain the rebus to the thick headed.

It's a good flash display, but it is not characteristic of the nature of the picture. A lot of people may get the wrong impression and come out dissatisfied.

Arthur Swanke, exploiter for the Rialto Theatre, El Dorado, Ark., framed up a flame swept arcade for "While Satan Sleeps" and put painted flames on the banner. He writes that it got a lot of attention and the attention was capitalized into business.

Color Wheel Lighted Gloria's Gilt Cage

Guy A. Kenimer, of the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville, used the gilded cage built for the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, on the run of "Her Gilded Cage," but he set a baby spot into the floor and with a color wheel operated by motor he got a constantly changing play of color.

In the cage a live model appeared five times a day and in the intervals a cutout was set in. She looked not unlike Miss Swanson and made up well enough as a double. The times of her appearance were announced in the newspaper advertising and on a card in the cage, and there was always a waiting audience when she made her entrances.

Kenimer tied a local milliner to the Swanson hat the model wore. This was duplicated for the show window of the store and the manager supplied a couple of photographs to help along. These attracted so much attention that the milliner requested that they be left in a few days following the run.

A jewelry store filled an entire window with framed pictures of the star and a soda fountain featured the Gloria Parfait. Five thousand samples of face powder (obtained without cost) were distributed the week in advance, and fan photos of the star were given out by her impersonator.

Opening to three rainy days, they still went over the top on the week.

Ain't It Nice?

Because the police got 10 per cent. of the takings on "In the Name of the Law" in Augusta, Ga., they not only paraded a platoon, but the three-sheet police cutouts were placed wherever there were no traffic towers and Frank J. Miller, manager of theatres, was permitted to throw two 24-sheets directly across the sidewalk in front of the Modjeska Theatre. Openings were cut in the paper through which the people had to pass. The photograph is too dim to reproduce, but it shows the sidewalk completely blocked, save for a one-man opening in the centre.

Dyed White Bunting for "Blood and Sand"

Just because he could not get red and yellow bunting in town did not prevent Major I. C. Holloway, of the Rialto Theatre, Columbus, Ga., from making a noise for "Blood and Sand."

He recognized the exploitation effect of the colors, so he got white cloth, dyed it himself, and made the flashy panel shown in the cut. The surplus he used to festoon a perambulator which paraded the streets and invaded an open air prize fight a couple of days before his opening.

Five Weeks in Advance

He started work five weeks in advance with slides, came in with a trailer, and used the lost pocketbook ad. He used the advertisement and some teaser slides on the newspaper bulletin announcing the election returns and won several windows for cards and one for a decorative display.

He spent only $25 to win an additional 35 percent of business.

Two Fashion Shows

Because of her reputation for style, Al Freedman, of the Loew houses, Cleveland, put on a Fashion Show for Katherine MacDonald in "Domestic Relations," taking the show from the State to the Park Theatre, when the film made the jump. Twelve girls wore the gowns supplied by a local department store.

When in doubt play a fashion show seems to be coming into favor, but it can be overdone.

Strand Pins Faith to Reverse Design

Allen B. Newhall, of the Strand Theatre, Lynn, Mass., sends in a handful of his advertisements, most of which seem to depend on their reverse effects to get over. We select two in which the artist does not try to make a reverse circle or oval across two look like a four. Out of twenty-five samples sent, just twenty-three pin their entire faith to the reverse, and sometimes that faith is misplaced. The prettiest display is for "The Silent Call," for which a three-column width was used. This permits the dog's head to be worked in to good effect, though this would have been many times as strong had there not been worked in a background of landscape and a clutch from a scene still. Out of more than a hundred displays on this title we have seen, the best were all ones in which the dog's head was shown against a white ground. Just because the house has an artist is no reason why he should be permitted to obscure the design. The other example is a double feature display where the two titles are so nearly even that both are played up. This is a four column; one of the largest of the lot, and one of the most open. Because of the width and the fact that heads alone were used for art material, the type gets more of an opening than it does in most of the displays. Most of the other displays, paricularly those in two columns, are cramped because of an excess of art work, plus the reverse title. They are all obscured with too much ink. It is all like a room in which the sunlight never penetrates and which is dank and musty and mouldy in consequence. The artist does excellent work, as art work goes, but he seems to put his art work before the display value of the space. This is perhaps a natural fault, for each man is apt to regard his own work as more important than that of the other fellow, but some managerial restraint should be imposed. New England generally seems to be the lair of the reverse, and from Boston to Bangor—or Bridgeport, the same style of advertising seems to appeal to most houses. They know and use only the one style and while the Lynn Strand seems to make more intelligent use than most, through the service of a better artist, the result becomes monotonous. Even though the artist stays on the payroll for a week without drawing up an advertising display, it might prove profitable to pay him his salary and try something else for a change. This artist could do remarkably good work if he could only realize that art work does not mean pictures all over the space.

ledo,is virtually all press book stuff except the times and prices, but the house could not do better and had the good sense to use what was available and both good and cheap.

Made Initial Cut from Shop Supply

Mr. Fielding, of the Empress Theatre, Amherst, N. S., sends in a cover proof which shows a clever surmounting of a difficulty. The town is somewhat distant from a type founder and it is not a case of sending down the street for anything wanted. Lately an initial was desired and none could be found kicking around the print shop, so the foreman made one of three 24-point ornaments and a 24-point letter, held in with hairline rule. It is not as good as an ornamental initial would be, but it is plenty better than nothing at all and did much to make important the cover to a herald. The proof is in blue on yellow paper, so it will not reproduce, but your own printer can get the idea. It's a handy thing to remember when material is not available and you want a job in a hurry.

Nicely Proportioned Display from Detroit

Just one detail is at fault in this display for "Burning Sands" from the Temple Theatre, Toledo. The title might have been more boldly displayed. To put it in solid black would have been to throw out of proportion all of the rest of the space, and the artist and agent evidently realized that it would kill a decidedly selling cut. But the letters could have been bendayed

A Paramount Release

A NICELY LAID AD

with decidedly good results, and would have had a far better display value. But this was less important here than where the title has a distinct sales value of its own. "Burning Sands," unlike "The Sheik" is merely the identification and not the chief selling point. The sale is made on the stars, the Arabic atmosphere and the fact that it is a "flaming" reply to "The Sheik," whatever that opulent line may mean. More people will come to see Wanda Hawley in that costume than will be attracted by the title. More will come to see Milton Sills, and the suggestion of the desert conveyed in the underlying sketch will also sell more than the title, while the black has wisely been given to a real selling line and not to a non-selling title. With these facts in mind, it will be seen that the layout is proportioned with intelligent skill to the chief sales points. It might be suggested that the star names could profitably be moved closer to the star portraits, but most fans do not need the identification labels and the others will get the idea from the listed players. The chief point of excellence is that the artist has not intruded upon the space more than is permissible. He has not filled the space with picture and then dared the copy writer to horn in. He has worked, instead, to supplement the selling efforts of the agent, and they have united to produce a very pretty display. It is a six elevens; rather a large space, but it will stand reduction very nicely as low as a four, though the attention value of the larger space will probably be found to be a good investment since the space itself has some selling value. Large space is wasted when it gives added publicity to non-selling lines. Here the advertising workers have provided material which is worthy of the larger space. In passing note the time-table clock face. Two or three years ago we reproduced this as a novelty. It seems to have been in use ever since. It tells at a glance the proper times to come to the house, and does it in the most graphic form.

Landed a Page

Kenneth O. Renaud landed a full page on Paramountown during the recent Paramount Week by tying a bakery to the stars. The company printed pictures of twenty stars and offered a ticket to the Paramountown film to all who brought the correct identifications to their shop. And since the people had to come to the bakery to get the tickets, they were invited to take a trip through the plant and see how well-founded were the baker's claims to purity and cleanliness. They would not have come just to see the bakery, but they would come for tickets, so the bakery profited in excess of the cost of the page, while Paramount and the Regent Theatre, Billings, Mont., profited alike on the full page of publicity, and that full page was counted for Renaud in the proportioning of the reading notices for the issue. Paramount got so much of the photoplay page that it would have been more simple to have marked off what they did not get than to mark what they did obtain.

Ruffner's Open Letter Capitalizes Laughter

Ralph Ruffner, of the Capitol Theatre, Vancouver, offers something new in open letters. Generally the open letter is something terribly serious, and makes a somewhat ponderous appeal to the public, but Ruff believes that the ad with a smile wins and his open letter is brief and amusing and yet it gets over the idea of the laughs in "Grandma's Boy" as nothing else could do as well. The heading is designed to get attention, for it suggests some appeal to labor, and when it is found that it is a sell, the laugh comes, but below that is the conviction that the farce must be really funny or Ruff would not have advertised it in just this form. It is a little late to sell "Grandma's Boy" for that picture has run like wildfire all over the country, but it will work as well on coming Lloyds and can be saved up for his next adventure into feature length, which is said to be as good, if not better. Another typical example of Ruffner stuff is found in a four column display right down the page. This offers a figure of Lloyd nearly fifteen inches high, with a bottom background of a landscape—just a road, some trees and a rustic home. An arrow leads from the white space to the house and above, in type, is the legend "Grandma's in the house, making cookies." It is just a minor detail, but it gets a laugh, and the laugh goes to the credit of the production. Another clever little touch is a small panel headed "Gossip" which runs: "Anticipating your most natural question: The adorable little old lady who plays Grandma is Mrs. Anna Townsend, 79 Summers of motherly activity." It creates a pre-interest in the player of this part which helps to sell.

Hook Up Herald Idea in Increasing Favor

Not so long ago a hook-up herald was regarded as a novelty, but it has grown so steadily in favor that now many managers make regular use of the idea and find that it not only gives them a better advertisement but that it can also be made to yield a profit through selling off the spaces to the merchants. This herald is a one sided 7 by 13 inch sheet from the Maple Leaf Theatre, Mount Dennis, which is not far from Toronto. There is no chance to get into a local paper, so the management hooked eighteen firms to a display for Robinson Crusoe on the idea that these firms could have supplied Crusoe with all he required had he been so fortunate as to be cast away in the vicinity of Mount Dennis instead of a desert island. The hook-ups show decided cleverness in their application. One shoe firm points out that Robbie made his own shoes and suggests the greater comfort of their own makes, while another dealer starts off with "You can easily imagine how Robinson Crusoe would have valued a pair of real shoes." A real estate firm opines that he would have sub-divided his island into bungalow lots and then have bought one from the advertiser and there are the obvious hooks with grocers and meat markets. With eighteen advertisers at only fifty cents apiece the return would have been nine dollars; more than enough to cover the cost, and each firm would have gotten good publicity at small cost. Even such small spaces should have netted at least a dollar, and at that rate there would have been real money in the stunt. The hook-up throwaway promises to become as popular as the hook-up page in the more populous sections, and has the added value of cheapness. No merchant will refuse a dollar for an advertisement where he might hesitate over the usual line or inch rates.

A Universal Release

Star Telegrams Win a Full Page Display

The Universal production of "The Storm" got an unusual display from an unexpected source in Detroit when a fir concern took an entire page to play up its own wares and the Universal big feature. Taking the angle that furs were appropriate to the play dealing with the su-Arctic, the store arranged for wires from House Peters and Virginia Valli expressing their approval of the enterprise of the store in working in on "The Storm" and each carefully referring to the fur fashion show at the Adams Theatre during the run of the picture. The furs were displayed on live models, which gave the Adams an added feature at no cost, and the full page was all velvet.

THE FUR HOOK-UP

The telegrams were sent from the coast by the publicity department to get the proper date line, and this represents about the only cost to the house for a full page smash to supplement their own work. The house was given more than three-fourths of the display in order to get the largest possible number of patrons in to see the fall styles, and yet it paid the Furriers to give the house the best of it.

Spreading Raffles

Using the Raffles stunt in Des Moines at the Des Moines Theatre, the impersonator of The Masquerader also visited the other houses holding First National franchises.

The stunt was hooked up with a willing newspaper, which gave the initial announcement a cross page headline.

Straight from the Shoulder Reports

A Department for the Information of Exhibitors

Edited by A. Van Buren Powell

Sincere exhibitors are sending these tips to help you book your show. Their reports are printed without fear or favor. If a picture is good, bad or ordinary, you will find it out here. Turn about is fair play; let these exhibitors guide your bookings, and in turn let's hear from you.

American Releasing

JAN OF BIG SNOWS. Well, the less said the better. Print in rotten shape. This one looks sick alongside of some Northerns we have shown. Advertising: newspaper, slide, photos, posters. Patronage: general. Attendance: good. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

MOHICAN'S DAUGHTER. Good Indian play, but did not draw for me. Advertising: four ones, one three, set 11x14s. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: poor. Chas. F. Johnson, Plaza Theatre, Punta Gorda, Florida.

Associated Exhibitors

GRANDMA'S BOY. Good, clean comedy. Five reels in length. Some new gags. Lloyd can make the hard-boiled grouches laugh. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

REAL ADVENTURE. Not as good as "Woman, Wake Up," but none the less it was a very good picture. Advertising: twenty-four, photos, slide, newspaper. Patronage: all classes. Attendance: good. J. Kenrick, Strand Theatre, Ithaca, New York.

WOMAN, WAKE UP. A nice picture that pleased a small audience. Advertising: regular programs, newspaper, etc. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. H. S. Stansel, Ruleville Theatre, Ruleville, Mississippi.

F. B. O.

STEALERS. Patrons pronounced this better than "Why Girls Leave Home," which was played night before. Of 1920 vintage but will furnish good entertainment anywhere. Advertising: ones and threes. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. C. C. Johnson, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SNOWSHOE TRAIL. This picture pleased. The cast very good. Jane Novak, Roy Stewart, the principals, did splendid work. The photographs, in fact all the paper, has that "come on in" stuff on that makes a hit. Play it, folks; it will get the money. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

SON OF THE WOLF. Excellent "snow picture" with plenty of action. Easy to play up. Will satisfy almost any audience. Jack London's name brings them in. Advertising: photos, three, ones. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: good. E. W. Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, South Dakota.

SON OF THE WOLF. Unfortunately we did a very good business on this one. It would have been a splendid five-reel scenic if they had left out the characters. Too bad Jack London's name is connected with a picture like this. Advertising: to me, very misleading. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. G. H. Rardin, America Theatre, Longmont, Colorado.

UP AND AT 'EM. For us, a frost. Doris May is rapidly falling. Only better productions will save her. Don't boost this too much. Advertising: newspapers, posters, photos, slides. Patronage: general. Attendance: fair. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

First National

COURAGE. Wonderful attraction, well liked by all my patrons. They like this sort of picture. Make more like it. Advertising: newspapers, ones, threes. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: very good. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

DOMESTIC RELATIONS. Extra good. Audience well pleased. Katherine MacDonald popular star. Acting and story fine. Patronage: family. Attendance: good. Wm. C. McIntire, Rose Theatre, Burlington, North Carolina.

GOLDEN SNARE. Gave good satisfaction and has pulling power. But "Nomads of the North" and "Kazan" are better in my estimation. Advertising: posters and press. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

HAIL THE WOMAN. A real picture with real cast of actors. The kind of picture that helps the business from all angles. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

MOLLY O'. Very good and pleased a very good audience. Good comedy mixed with some very good Irish fun. A. L. Hepp, Idyl Hour Theatre, Greeley, Nebraska.

MY BOY. Picture very good, but I starved to death on account of high rental. Jackie Coogan a wonderful star. Advertising: six, three, ones, lobby, slide. Patronage: all classes. Attendance: poor. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

PENROD. A good "boy" picture, but for me, not one that pleases 100%. Some mothers claimed it teaches mischief, showing this kind of picture. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair to good. H. S. Stansel, Ruleville Theatre, Ruleville, Mississippi.

PERFECT WOMAN. This picture is a little old, but it will please all. If you have not played it, do so. I did not do very much with it on account of rain, but those who did see it were well pleased. Advertising: two ones, one three, 11x14s. Patronage: select. Attendance: poor, account of rain. Chas. F. Johnson, Plaza Theatre, Punta Gorda, Florida.

PRIMITIVE LOVER. Constance Talmadge in one that you can raise your prices on and have no kicks. The best thing she has done in some time; pleased 100%. Advertising: lobby and six sheet. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

ROSE O' THE SEA. It probably is a little better than the previous Stewart pictures. I still think there is room for Miss Stewart's improvement. Patronage: better class. Attendance: good. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

SMILIN' THROUGH. The finest thing Norma Talmadge has ever done. Clean, pretty, interesting; in fact, a gem of a picture. Advertising: large campaign. Patronage: high class. Attendance: good. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

THUNDERBOLT. A very appropriate name, as a "thunderbolt" must have hit it. It was once a good picture, but we received only a part of it. Film in terrible condition, with most cut out. Would advise playing it provided you can secure a good print. Ran this with a Baby Show and did well. Patronage: village and country. Attendance: good. Lindrud & Guettinger, Cochrane Theatre, Cochrane, Wisconsin.

TOL'ABLE DAVID. The best dramatic picture ever produced. Step on it and all of your patrons will be pleased. Better than 75% of the super-specials. Advertising: newspaper, slide, lithos. Patronage: best. Attendance: fair. F. M. Holeman, Grand Theatre, Madisonville, Kentucky.

TROUBLE. Coogan fails to draw here. However, this is as good a picture as he has made. Will stand going after where he draws. Advertising: billboards. Patronage: small town. Attendance: poor. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

WOMAN IN HIS HOUSE. An old picture but a very good one. For some reason it did not draw here, but it was not the fault of the picture—merely an off night. My patrons considered it just as good as "Child Thou Gavest Me." Advertising: two sixes, three, five ones, slide, newspaper. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre, Skamokawa, Washington.

Fox

AFTER YOUR OWN HEART. For action this takes the cake. The last reel is a knockout for speed. Mix is our lifesaver. Advertising: ones, three, slide, heralds, newspaper. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

CHASING THE MOON. Not as good as Mix's previous pictures, but liked by my patrons. Wording in sub-titles very good. Advertising: newspaper, slides and posters. Patronage: mostly men. Attendance: good. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

FAST MAIL. A fast picture. The greatest thriller of them all, but too much similarity to serials. Advertising: posters and papers. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. J. Carbonell, Monroe Theatre, Key West, Florida.

LAST TRAIL. A good picture, but as usual, paid twice too much for it and lost. Advertising: ones, sixes, cards, newspaper. Patronage: country town. Attendance: fair. H. V. Harvey, Palace Theatre, Dixon, California.

LONE STAR RANGER. Corking good picture. Farnum at his best. Use it by all means. Advertising: one and three sheet. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. H. S. Miller, Grady Theatre, Cairo, Georgia.

PARDON MY NERVE. Very good picture of Jones. Pleased patrons. Advertising: five threes, five ones, slides. Attendance: fair. Vincent J. Votolats, Myrtle Theatre, Thornton, Rhode Island.

PARDON MY NERVE. Just one more Western picture with Buck Jones. Nothing new; same old formal type plot. Advertising: usual. Patronage: neighborhood. Attendance: poor. J. A. Emory, Star Theatre, Bar Harbor, Maine.

PERJURY. William Farnum starring in this, is a well fitted star for the story and both surely gave my patrons a pleasing entertainment. For me, absolutely one of Farnum's best. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

PLAY SQUARE. A program picture that should please more small town patrons than "The Sheik," "Four Horsemen" or "Queen of Sheba." Just promise them one of the "humanest" pictures out for the price. Advertising: regular. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

RIDING WITH DEATH. Went over big. Everybody liked it. Buck Jones is one of my best drawing cards. They like action, thrills and romance in this town. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: very good. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glenalum, West Virginia.

ROUGH DIAMOND. Real good Tom Mix picture. Laughs are abundant. Only a few Mix stunts but that doesn't matter, there's plenty of action. Advertising: two three sheets, slide. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

THUNDERCLAP. Mary Carr sure dragged 'em in for this one. Made real money for me. The race was good. Some exhibitors say it is better than "Over the Hill." But it wasn't for me. Had nearly twice the population of the town to see "Over the Hill." Advertising: window cards, six sheet, ones, slide, paper. Patronage: small town. Attendance: excellent. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

UP AND GOING. Very good and seemed to please everyone; but it is not as good as other Mix pictures I have used. Advertising: ones, threes, sixes, mailing list. Patronage: small town. Attendance: fair. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

Goldwyn

ALWAYS THE WOMAN. A reincarnation story and a theory that has many followers. This picture, while sordid at times, puts over a good story. Not the best part in the world for Miss Compson. Ben L. Morris, Elk Grand Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

DANGEROUS CURVE AHEAD. The only thing big about it was the price. For me, lost money. Look out how you bite on it. Advertising: sixes, threes, ones, photos, slides. Patronage: small town Attendance: small. E. E. Stearns, Dew Tell Theatre, South Dayton, New York.

GRAND LARCENY. An exceptionally good society picture that will please above the average. Exceedingly well done. Patronage: high class. Attendance: fair. E. W. Collins. Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

OLD NEST. This picture is very true to life and is one of the best ever shown here. Advertise it heavy; it will make money for you. Advertising: six sheet, window cards, heralds. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: very good. E. Eleazar, Casino Theatre, Kaplan, Louisiana.

OLD NEST. A 100% picture and a 25% film. Never used a poorer film. A shame to spoil so good a picture with such a rotten film. My people liked it but many remarked about condition of the film. A. L. Hepp, Idyl Hour Theatre, Greeley, Nebraska.

YELLOW MEN AND GOLD. A nice little picture that satisfied my patrons well for a program picture. It is very thrilling and pleased about 90%. Advertising: photos, slide, two newspapers. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: fair. Chas. Martin, Family Theatre, Mount Morris, New York.

Hodkinson

KEEPING UP WITH LIZZIE. A good comedy-drama that pleased everyone. Hodkinson is certainly the exhibitor's company. Advertising: posters. Patronage: rural. Attendance: good. D. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown Ohio.

U. P. TRAIL. Very good. Pleased majority. Two weeks' exploitation, lobby display and usual slides. With Zane Grey's "Last Trail" for opposition, we played to largest Wednesday receipts since house opened. A knockout. Patronage: mixed Attendance: S. R. O. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

Metro

FASCINATION. Great, with Mae Murray, went over with a bang! Good picture; you can't go wrong on this. Advertising: sixes, threes, ones, window display, newspaper. Attendance: fair. Liberty Theatre Company, Silver City, New Mexico.

FIVE DOLLAR BABY. Good business all week. Picture pleased the patrons. Viola Dana, a charming star, had a happy, piquant way that took well, and her work was of absorbing interest. William Noble, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

FOURTEENTH LOVER. Viola Dana at her best in an entertaining comedy that greatly pleased our patrons. Jack Mulhall very good in lead. Advertising: regular. Attendance: good. Thos. K. Lancaster, Apollo Theatre, Gloucester, New Jersey.

GLASS HOUSES. A very clever show—as good as they make 'em. Dana exceptionally fine; her dance stuff is good. Supporting cast excellent. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. Marsden and Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

PEACOCK ALLEY. Fine Society picture; one of Mae Murray's best. Pleased the women above all. Went over good in spite of strike and warm weather. Advertising: newspapers and posters. Patronage: mostly ladies. Attendance: very good. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

SHERLOCK BROWN. In this, which is purely a program issue, you have one of the best bets of the year. Bert Lytell is nothing short of great in this and there isn't a member of the cast but what "lives" the part. You can step on the pedal when you exhibit this clever picture; I only wish I'd known it was as good as it proved to be, although I did very nicely with it after the folks had seen it at the matinee. Advertising: usual. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance: excellent. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Between Ourselves

A Get-Together Place Where We Can Talk Things Over

Straight From the Shoulder is run for exhibitors. Naturally, being run by exhibitors, it is a dependable tip department.

Now a tip on what pictures are good and which ones are "weak sisters" is mighty useful dope.

But let's go further and do even more good. Why not say when to step heavy on the advertising and what angle pulled 'em in for you?

Why not wise up the other fellow on how to get the most out of the "weak sisters"—there's a way, as Dave Seymour tips you on another page.

No one knows better than an exhibitor who has played a picture how to get the most out of it—and Straight From the Shoulder can do more good by handing out this wisdom with the tips on the quality of the picture, condition of film and the other items that have made these reports the booking guide for a host of exhibitors. VAN.

Paramount

BEAUTY SHOP. All exhibitors with good sense lay low on this picture. Absolutely the poorest excuse for a feature that Paramount has turned out in a long time. One-third walked out. Attendance: good. K. H. Underwood, Rivola Theatre, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

BLOOD AND SAND. Gave best of satisfaction. Some say it is better than "Four Horsemen." Valentino at his best. Step on it and it will pack your house. Advertising: mailing list, one, three, six sheets, photos, etc. Patronage: general. Attendance: good. E. E. Holmquist, Broadway Theatre, Centerville, South Dakota.

CAPPY RICKS. A first class picture in every respect. Advertising: rather big—one, three, six sheets, etc. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. Bert Jackson, Star Theatre, Tonawanda, New York.

GOOD PROVIDER. Will please most anyone except a fanatic. However, much of the value lost through poor photography With good equipment, a good projectionist and artistic photography, this picture should stand in a class by itself. Advertising: slides, cuts and one sheet. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville California.

HER WINNING WAY. Very good Minter show. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. Wm. E. Tragsdorf, Trags Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

MISTRESS OF THE WORLD. A wonderful and stupendous production that must have required an enormous outlay of time and money to produce. The first of the series is the weakest of the four, but there are plenty of thrills throughout. Photography and accuracy of details are excellent.

It must have pleased the majority, as attendance held up good. The price was right and believe any exhibitor should make good with it. Advertising, threes, ones, extra heralds and newspaper. Patronage, rural. Attendance, very good. L. P. Frisbee, Community Theatre, Meredith, New York.

NICE PEOPLE. Wallace Reid and Bebe Daniels starring. Good sized audiences witnessed the showing at both afternoon and night performances. Feature highly commended by patrons. Patronage: general. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

NORTH OF RIO GRANDE. A pleasing picture, nothing big. Advertising, newspapers, special lobby. Patronage, general. Attendance, fair, S. N. Chambers, Miller Theatre, Wichita, Kansas.

NORTH OF RIO GRANDE. Fair picture, but combination of stars and type of production got business in spite of Chautauqua. Advertising, usual. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

O'MALLEY OF THE MOUNTED. Very good Hart picture, went over strong in this town. Here they eat up the Western stuff. This will be a winner in any small town. Advertising, ones, threes, sixes, heralds, slide, newspaper. Patronage, small town. Attendance, fair. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre, Skamokawa, Washington.

ONE GLORIOUS DAY. A picture that will please because it's different. Advertising: regular paper, photos and newspaper. Patronage: college town. Attendance: good. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

SATURDAY NIGHT. Not up to DeMille standard, although it will satisfy. Well produced, but ending is disappointing. Story below what is expected of producer. Advertising, mailing list, newspaper, etc. Patronage, small town. Attendance, good. P. V. Kunze, Orpheum Theatre, Stoughton, Massachusetts.

SLEEP WALKER. A program offering similar to those we have been receiving on the Realart list: Jack Mulhall in male lead. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

SOUTH OF SUVA. Mary Miles Minter in five thousand feet of very improbable story. This picture did not please. Advertising: usual. Patronage: health seekers and tourists. Attendance: fair. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

TRAVELIN' ON. A typical Hart picture, which is very well done with the exception of too much posing by the star. It also contains a certain amount of padding, which means nothing. Advertising; usual. Patronage; better class. Attendance; fair. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

Pathé

NANOOK OF THE NORTH. A wonderful production from an educational standpoint. Entertainment value not so good. Not a small town picture. Advertising: extra. Patronage: better class. Attendance: fair. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

Playgoers

RUSE OF THE RATTLER. Excellent Western drama. Full of action from very beginning to end. Advertising; usual, posters, photos. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. Dr. J. E. Guibord, National Theatre, Grand Mere, Quebec, Canada.

Making "Weak Sisters" Strong

You can't help getting a "weak sister" once in awhile. You don't have to grin and bear it. Go out and get 'em anyhow—Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre, Saranac Lake, New York, says how:

"The knowledge of this 'weak sister' was formed by what I'd heard and was verified in many instances in your columns. I knew the box-office quality of the picture. I am not going to fill this theatre and have them disappointed—so I put it squarely up to the patrons; told them what the critics had said and left it up to them. In my program I told them the critics had 'panned' the picture but that audiences had found it pleasing. I had requests to play the picture and that's a good alibi."

Tell the patrons the truth about a "weak sister" and rouse their curiosity as to what opinions they will form. Curiosity pulls; and if you've been honest with them they won't chase you out of town.

Selznick

GREATER THAN FAME. A very good picture. Miss Hammerstein always draws well in Oklahoma City and I personally like her pictures. Patronage: general. William Noble, Orpheum Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

HANDCUFFS OR KISSES. Look out, Elaine! Somebody will get you and make you believe you must earn a lotta money for them and we'll have to cut your pictures out on account of price. Better continue where you are. Patronage: small town. Attendance: good. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, De Queen, Arkansas.

United Artists

LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY. As fine a picture as we have ever had the pleasure of showing. The type of picture that will build up the business and prevent Blue Laws. Advertising: all kinds. Patronage: rural. Attendance: good. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

Universal

CAUGHT BLUFFING. Another good Mayo picture that will please and draw. Didn't have a single kick on it. Universal is improving for me and they are not asking a thousand per cent. increase on their pictures. I don't see how any exhibitor can get along without this service and co-operation. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

CONFLICT. A good picture. Somewhat draggy; could have been made in five reels instead of seven. Second run on this; business not much. Wm. Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

MOONLIGHT FOLLIES. A good, clean comedy drama. This little girl should have had opportunity to continue starring. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Arkansas.

ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN. Did nothing for me with extra exploitation. Title did not draw. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN. A good program picture; pleased everybody, but I had a poor print. Advertising; three, one, slide. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

THE SCRAPPER. Everybody was well satisfied. Poor house as it was first showing of this star. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. Leslie Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, California.

THE SCRAPPER. Rawlinson is a real star. This is his first with us but not his last as he pleased my audience. Attendance; good. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Oklahoma.

THE STORM. Fine! As good a picture as Universal has ever made. Fire scene and storm wonderful. Advertising; lobby, ones, threes, sixes, window cards, streamers, newspaper, cuts. Patronage; every one. Attendance; good; two days, 25c and 50c. J. S. Wadsworth, Republic Theatre, Great Falls, South Carolina.

TOP OF THE MORNING. A fair picture; not as good as her pictures are in general. Advertising; ones, three, six, photos. Patronage; family. Attendance; fair. T. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

Vitagraph

SHEIK'S WIFE. Very good foreign picture but I could not get my people out to see it. It was as clean as a picture could be made. A picture for educated people. E. T. Dunlap, Dunlap Theatre, Hawarden, Iowa.

TRUMPET ISLAND. If you want the best Vitagraph, pick this. Not a weak spot in the seven reels. Arthur G. Pearson, Auditorium. Theatre, Melrose, Massachusetts.

Comedies

LITTLE EVA ASCENDS (Metro). One of the best comedies we have run here. Boost it to the limit. It will please 100%. Title a little against it. E. T. Dunlap, Auditorium Theatre, Hawarden, Iowa.

PAY DAY (First Natl). Chaplin in this is just fair. There are some novelties in the fun line, but the laughs, as far as my audience was concerned, were far from continuous. This doesn't mean the comedy is poor; it's not. Nor is it to be compared with "Shoulder Arms" or "Dog's Life," although it takes a king's ransom in rental. Play it; but if you're not contracted at a certain figure, get it reasonable, for it is two reels and you must supply either a feature or good short stuff and that will make your day's exhibit very costly. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

PLAYHOUSE (First Natl). Some good double photography in this and as a novelty it is good but consider it only an average comedy with too high a rental. H. G. Frisbee, Community Theatre, Meredith, New York.

THE SHOW (Vitagraph). This is a fairly good Semon comedy and since Vitagraph is pricing its pictures right no one can feel but that Semon comedies are a bargain. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

TOONERVILLE TANGLE (First Natl). A very good comedy and was accepted by pleased audiences. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Serials

ADVENTURES OF BUFFALO BILL (Univ.). Positively the best serial I have ever run. Had them standing in line waiting to get in. Paper great! Record business. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

Short Subjects

LEATHER PUSHERS (Univ.). Have run four of these and they are there; with one fault—poor light. They draw in fine shape. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

PATHE REVIEW NO 155. These third year series Reviews are excellent. J. Kenrick, Strand Theatre, Ithaca, New York.

State Rights

BLACK PANTHER'S CUB (Equity). Not the kind of picture that pleases my audience; too long drawn out and a complete box office failure. John D. Jones, Crystal Theatre, San Angelo, Texas.

BLAZE AWAY (Di Lorenzo). A good Western picture. All patrons like a Western. D. D. Purcell, Muse-U Theatre, Cortez, Colorado.

Worth While

"I enclose some reports for Straight From the Shoulder. As I have made it a habit to consult these reports myself before booking any picture, and have found these reports to be correct, I consider it a duty, and a pleasant one, to help others by sending in some myself." Dr. J. E. Guibord, National Theatre, Grand Mere, Quebec, Canada.

An exhibitor of Dr. Guibord's type is getting the utmost out of the department—TAKING AND GIVING.

DEMPSY-CARPENTIER FIGHT (Rickard). Here is one that will give you a big surprise. Raised prices and advertised it extra big and got people into my house that hardly ever come. Played to a big business one day. It should give good satisfaction. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

JACK RIDER (Federated). This is a dandy Western. Something different. Comedy and action. Pleased all. They went out telling me how good it was. Big Boy Williams O. K. Picture was somewhat rainy, outside of that it was good. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

OH, MABEL, BEHAVE! (Photocraft). The worst picture, without exception, that we have ever played. Over half of the people walked out. Would gladly have given $25.00 not to have played it. And—am thinking seriously of giving this amount to square myself. Thought we were getting something big with such stars as Mabel Normand, Owen Moore, Mack Sennett and Ford Stirling; it was but a poor Sennett comedy stretched to five reels. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

LIGHTNING BRYCE (Arrow). For me, the biggest piece of cheese ever; there is not enough of it to tell what they are doing; at that it would be better if it was all gone, as it is in such condition that it is one breakdown after another. Brother, if you have booked it—leave town! R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Oklahoma.

THE RAIDERS (Canyon). Lots of action in this one; holds interest to the end. It was a sensational ending, most unexpected. Pleased every one. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

PASSING OKLAHOMA OUTLAWS. Ran this picture two days to a big business for a hundred and eight in the shade. It's an old picture but in good shape. New print. Played it on percentage. It will please about 80 per cent. If you play it, don't advance your price. Put a good two-reed comedy with it. The lobby display of guns and photos will bring you big business. Greatest lobby display I've ever seen. This picture is not for the better class house; will go in middle class houses. Would advise small towns as well as large to show it. Should get you good money. I had no kicks on the picture; it got by fine. If you play it, be sure to get the lobby display. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

Consensus of Published Reviews

The Girl Who Ran Wild

(Gladys Walton—Universal—4,506 feet)

M. P. W.—One of Bret Harte's character studies of the West in the days of '49 and developed it into a picture that will be enjoyed by many.

N.—In playing up the star and trimming the drama from the story the picture doesn't carry much value. It appears rather slight and episodic.

E. H.—It furnishes Miss Walton with an excellent vehicle and throughout it is well acted. A cheerful, brisk screen play that will hold the interest.

F. D.—Gladys Walton in rather uninteresting version of "M'Liss."

T. R.—Contains some good interest and makes a pleasing little story.

Hound of the Baskervilles

(Featured Cast—F. B. O.—4,900 feet)

M. P. W.—Here is a picture that should please hundreds of thousands of picture patrons who like the Sherlock Holmes stories, and bring in good, hard cash of the realm to exhibitors.

T. R.—The picture should please any type of audience.

F. D.—Perfectly good entertainment for those who like deep mystery stories.

E. H.—A first-rate adaptation of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's thrilling mystery story.

N.—A film calculated to make anyone sit up and take notice.

The Long Chance

(Henry B. Walthall—Universal—4,331 feet)

M. P. W.—It develops into a melodramatic thriller in the later reels, with plenty of action and considerable suspense and should prove satisfactory to audiences liking this type of picture.

F. D.—For those who like dramatic stories, Peter B. Kyne's "The Long Chance," offers a good entertainment.

N.—A better type of western is "The Long Chance."

T. R.—Western melodrama developing good interest and some exciting moments.

E. H.—An original, interesting story that should please those seeking Western stories with a punch.

The Man Who Played God

(George Arliss—United Artists—5,855 feet)

M. P. W.—Here is a picture that should please any type of audience and cause them to feel better for having seen it.

T. R.—It will be difficult to convince the public that this is not the best screen work Arliss has done.

E. H.—Will doubtless rank as one of the year's greatest pictures.

N.—Here is a picture that carries the message of the Yuletide season—give to others that you may be happy yourself.

F. D.—Even Arliss' ability and artistry hardly saves very poor story.

Rags To Riches

(Wesley Barry—Warner Bros.—6 reels)

M. P. W.—Warners offer a human interest knockout that promises gold mine for exhibitors.

F. D.—It is a fine picture, delightful entertainment and a wholly amusing feature.

N.—Here is a photoplay combining all the elements which build smashing returns at the box-office.

T. R.—It's a wholesome story, a story for the whole blessed family, filled with laughs and many alternating chokes.

E. H.—As light entertainment, all it professes to be, it will well serve its purpose and more than please the average audience.

Under Two Flags

(Priscilla Dean—Universal—7,407 feet)

M. P. W.—The picture provides excellent screen entertainment and should prove a hit with the majority of audiences, especially those liking stirring, thrilling melodrama.

E. H.—Capital melodramatic entertainment.

N.—All the spirit of Ouida's book and play is brought forth in terms which exact the utmost interest.

F. D.—Star does good work. Story is very slow moving except for climax.

T. R.—There is no lack of action and spectacular situations.

The Yosemite Trial

(Dustin Farnum—Fox—4,735 feet)

M. P. W.—Beauty of setting and good cast are features of Fox pictures with Dustin Farnum.

N.—Dustin Farnum is deserving of better things than this old school melodrama which takes him and the spectators back to the early days of the nickelodeon.

F. D.—If the story was intended to give Dustin Farnum a hero role it certainly missed out.

E. H.—A thin story of love and treachery. The beautiful scenery is its principal appeal.

T. R.—Admirers of melodrama dealing with "the great out-doors" will find this an extremely entertaining picture.

"My Friend the Devil"

Millarde Scores Another Triumph for Fox with Screen Version of Celebrated Novel

Reviewed by Charles M. Inman

Score one more triumph for Fox in its latest release, "My Friend the Devil." Rarely on the screen is one given opportunity to see a picture with so general an appeal, or one in which there is so much dramatic action, so many intense scenes, or the presentation of such an array of vital and gripping lessons that reach the heart and soul.

"My Friend the Devil," is an adaptation from Georges Ohnet's celebrated novel, "Doctor Rameau," and this screen version contains not only a novel theme and a powerful plot, but a story into which has been woven plenty of thrills, romance, and a tale of devotion that has as its climax one of the most powerful and dramatic scenes ever portrayed on the silver screen.

It is an unusually brilliant pictorial sermon against atheism, pointing a moral and directing the steps in ways of righteousness, a story of faith restored after a battle of good and evil in a man's heart, and the regeneration of the man who has placed science above the God of his mother.

Credit must be given to Harry Millarde for the creation of another masterpiece. With the possible exception of the prologue, the photography is superb, the story sequences follow with dramatic intensity and without a rift, and the acting throughout is exceptionally excellent. Charles Richman as Dr. George Dryden gives a brilliant performance, as does Barbara Castleton, as Anna Ryder, who later becomes the doctor's wife. Peggy Shaw, as Dryden's daughter, is most effective in an unusually difficult part, and the other members of the cast are very excellent in their several roles. The exhibitor is going to make no mistake in showing this big Fox feature and it has many angles that make it unusual for exploitation purposes.

Adapted from Georges Ohnet's "Doctor Rameau."
Scenario by Paul H. Sloane.
Directed by Harry Millarde.
Length, 9,555 Feet.

The Story.

Dr. Dryden is an athiest having lost his faith in God when his mother was killed by lightning while struggling with his brutal step-father. Anna Ryder urged by her mother, marries Dryden, but he afterwards finds her in the arms of an artist who is painting her portrait. Infuriated, he drives him away. Later he find the artist on the roadside, injured, and takes him home, but refuses to call a priest. Dryden's wife becomes hysterical and dies of heart disease.

Years later, when his daughter is about to be married, Dryden, going to his wife's room, finds the old love letters from the artist. Angered, he wrecks the portrait and drives his daughter away. Later she is brought to him ill and mentally unbalanced, but he refuses to treat her. Other doctors fail and finally his wife's spirit appears and leads him to the sick girl's room. Finding that his daughter is dying he calls on God to help him. Slowly the shadow of death lifts and Dryden realizes that there is a God.

"Robin Hood"

Newest Picture for United Artists is Douglas Fairbanks' Greatest Characterization

Reviewed by Marguerite Kemp

"Robin Hood" is the greatest impersonation Douglas Fairbanks has given to the screen and it will go down in film history as one of the screen's most fascinating characterizations. It is the Robin Hood famed in song and story that Fairbanks gives us, with the merry band of outlaws gathered under the leadership of the merriest outlaw of them all, yet with interpretations and interpolations that only Fairbanks could give.

The first portion of the picture seemed to drag a trifle due possibly to the machine or to the masses of scenery and of such ranks of slow moving horsemen that the eye is inclined to weary of the waving banners, glitering fabrics and gleaming armor. But when the action shifts to Robin Hood with his band in Sherwood Forest it provides a laugh and a thrill for every graceful leap of the merry outlaw and he appears to be leaping constantly.

Douglas Fairbanks' screen portrayal of this character will furnish a thrill of admiration to young and old, with the avenging of the evil deeds of the king's wicked brother, his befriending the oppressed poor, championing the prince's warriors, and then with two companions capturing a fortified town while the troops were searching for him.

The picture represents the last word in fine photography. The light and shade in the forest scenes are exquisite and the tall frowning castle walls offer abundant opportunity for the play of lights and shadows. Wonders have been worked in lighting the huge masses of people, the settings and trappings in the crusade scenes and tournaments so that there is a gleam of light from the armor of the furthermost knight in the long ranks of moving horsemen.

The love story is well woven into the film and the lover portrayed by Douglas may start a new type to replace the "sheik." For the gallant outlaw, victor in tournament and joust and vanquisher of wicked princes, is a shy modest lover, confessedly afraid of women, bashfully kissing the hem of his lady's sleeves. The lovemaking scenes are exquisite bits, particularly the parting scenes on the castle walls and the reuniting of the lovers in the priory garden.

The familiar characters of "Robin Hood" are all present; jovial Friar Tuck, brave Alan-a-Dale and Will Scarlet, and the singing, drinking characters of the band. Wallace Beery makes an understanding, generous King Richard, whose humanness is made more vivid by his relish for plump roasts and dripping flagons of ale, and Sam DeGrasse does nobly as the wicked brother John, a role where a sneer too many would make a burlesque of the character.

The sets are massive castle walls, with sturdy oaken doors and huge keys, high turrets and ancient drawbridge. The quaint trappings of the horses, the knights in chain armor, women with graceful gowns and flowing hair, make the picture seem like a page from a beloved classic. So faithfully has every part of it been portrayed and so well enacted that "Robin Hood" gives an intimate slice from the lives of people of long ago, and makes them real human beings.

Directed by Allan Dwan.
Photography by Arthur Edeson
Length, 10,000 Feet.

The Story.

The Earl of Huntingdon, a favorite of King Richard, defeats Sir Guy, the favorite knight of Prince John, who is plotting against the king. A band of knights start on a Holy Crusade and in return for the promise of the hand of Lady Marian, who is Huntingdon's betrothed, Sir Guy promises Prince John that neither the king or Huntingdon will return alive.

Huntingdon receives word from Lady Marian that John is oppressing England and in attempting to return, he is shot by Sir Guy, and left to die. He does return to England as Robin Hood, assembles a band of outlaws, befriends the oppressed and helps the poor. He discovers that Marian has been carried to a castle by John's henchmen, and with the aid of two companions he captures the castle, but in freeing her he is himself captured and doomed to die. He is protected by a mysterious stranger who turns out to be King Richard, and all ends happily.

"The Headless Horseman"

Eccentric Characterization the Greatest Appeal in Hodkinson Release Starring Will Rogers

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Washington Irving's whimsical "Legend of Sleepy Hollow," has been conscientiously produced for the screen by C. S. Clancy, as a Hodkinson release. With Will Rogers in the famous character of Ichabod Crane, the visualization seems as near perfect, and the mood of the author as intimately reflected as it is possible to conceive. Eccentric characterization, quiet humor and a touch of the fantastic color the screen version

Drama is not an important consideration in the picture. The chief interest lies in a simple unfoldment of the tale without particular regard for sequence. The spotlight is on the singular personality of the schoolmaster, and the reactions of the community to his presence. At times the descriptions seem too long. The film could stand cutting in a number of places with the beneficial effect of speeding up the action.

Will Rogers has achieved the unusual in picturing the loveless Ichabod. The characterization is one that presents extreme difficulties, in understanding the type of man who is not likeable enough to win your entire sympathy, yet preserving something that keeps him from being at all times ludicrous. Mr. Rogers has avoided burlesque even though there seems to be plenty of temptation. He is funny in a natural consistent way, as one can imagine the author intended.

The ride of the headless horseman is the dramatic triumph of the picture. It is comic and weird by turns. These scenes have been vivified by skillful lighting and shading, and some spectacular shots of the sky at night. The whole production shows great care, an unusual regard for detail and a faithfulness in the characters and settings that bespeaks fine directing.

Length, 6,000 feet.

The Story.

Ichabod Crane, the new school teacher from New York, arrives in Sleepy Hollow. His unique personality makes people hesitate about accepting him. Katrina Van Tassel, however, cannot resist flirting with him to hold up her reputation as belle of the community. Ichabod takes this seriously, and so does her sweetheart, Brom Bones. Ichabod is too severe in punishing one of his pupils and when they can find an excuse, his enemies plan to tar and feather him. Just in time it is proved a frame-up. Brom Bones, still jealous, decides to play upon Ichabod's superstitious tendencies and disguising himself as "the headless horseman" rides out one night and frightens the poor schoolmaster into permanent retirement. He is never seen by the community again.

Metro Offers Billie Dove in a Thoroughly Satisfying Romantic Comedy Drama

Reviewed by D. M. Bain

Metro's winsome new star, Billie Dove, will make many pleasant introductions among movie patrons through the medium of her first starring vehicle, "Youth to Youth." She possesses the happy combination of both "looks" and real acting ability and, although supported by a mighty strong cast, carries the lead all the way through the seven reels of this satisfying screen production.

The production is a delightful comedy drama of theatrical life. It portrays magnificently scenes in a New York hotel, in a metropolitan playhouse and then shifts to the unusual background of a barnstorming boat, and is probably the first screen production to treat seriously this little known about branch of theatrical endeavor. A love-story that is not altogether new, but is thoroughly pleasing and satisfying permeates the piece and the comedy element is not overlooked, Emile Chautard, the director, having a happy faculty of intermingling the lighter touches without your knowledge, until you ease right up on a good hearty chuckle before you know it.

The cast is satisfying and efficient and can safely be billed as an all-star cast, Cullen Landis playing the male lead in more than his usual fascinating style. Wallace Beery also does good work.

The production as a whole can safely be promised as mighty entertaining.

The Story

Eve Allinson, after achieving success on the stage, learns she is accused of being the mistress of Tawney, her backer. She disappears and takes a job with a traveling theatrical company that uses a river boat as a theatre, going from place to place. At one landing Page Brooklins, a farmer, witnesses the show and falls in love with Eve. Horry, a conceited fellow townsman, causes considerable trouble, but is thrashed by Page, who writes to a friend in New York lauding Eve's beauty and ability. Tawney gets the news that Eve has been found and tries to get her to return to New York but she refuses the offer, as she loves Page. Tawney gives the story of discovering Eve to the newspapers. Page reads it and believes the accusation that she has been Tawney's mistress and breaks off with her. Tawney arrives on his yacht and starts to take Eve back. Page becomes convinced of his error, gets a skiff and rows to the yacht. The lovers are reconciled and Tawney knows he is beaten as Youth goes to Youth.

"The Kentucky Derby"

If your sporting blood runs high you will like "The Kentucky Derby." Thrills come too fast to count in this Universal-Jewel melodrama of the race track.

Suspense, fast action and a new star (in the department of features) keep the interest at high pitch. Reginald Denny fulfills what he promised as an actor in "The Leather Pushers"—and more besides.—M. K.

Universal-Jewel Production Starring Reginald Denny is a Splendid Melodrama

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

The underworld, the sea and the race track set off some exceedingly swift action and thrilling melodrama in this Universal-Jewel attraction, "The Kentucky Derby." It will have an irresistible appeal to the many who like exciting entertainment.

Preparation for the final thrill, the horse race, is so cleverly managed that the suspense begins with the opening of the picture, continuing and accumulating until the dashing climax. The shots of the race and the grandstand crowds are vastly impressive. The conspiracy against Duke Charles, the favorite horse, will recall other pictures of the race track, but this does not lessen its appeal to the masses as the way in which the performance has been directed keeps the interest at high pitch. When he wins the race it is a big moment, and anyone with any emotional response at all will catch the spirit of the scene.

For another reason the picture should interest the fans. It introduces Reginald Denny in his first feature. His first success was as the boxing champion in a chapter-picture, "The Leather Pushers." In "The Kentucky Derby" he gives much fuller promise. In fact, it is his convincing manner and attractive personality that adds the crowning touch to the scenes. There are a number of excellent performers in his support. Wilfred Lucas, Walter McGrail, Emmett King, Lionel Belmore and Harry Carter are among the vivid personalities.

The scenes of the underworld frame-up, the shanghai and those on board ship are highly realistic. Director King Baggot has shown an unfailing dramatic instinct.

In the theatre where old-fashioned melodrama is in favor, "The Kentucky Derby" should be a striking success. It will justify enthusiastic exploitation.

The Story

Duke Charles and Twilight are two prize colts belonging to neighbors, Col. Gordon and Col. Woolrich, both Kentucky gentlemen. Years before they are old enough to race, the men bet each other $10,000. Col. Gordon drives his son from home in a rage after learning of his marriage to Alice, his stableman's daughter. His son, Donald, arrives in New York and is the victim of a frame-up through the treachery of his cousin, Ralph. He is shanghaied aboard Capt. Wolf's vessel, and is kept prisoner and abused for three years. Meanwhile Ralph, who has stolen money from Col. Gordon and blamed it onto Donald, plots to win in the coming horse race, by insuring Twilight's victory. Donald gets back home in ime to bring his enemies to justice and save the race for his father.

"If I Were Queen"

Ethel Clayton's First Starring Vehicle for F. B. O. Is Romantic Drama of a Mythical Kingdom

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Ethel Clayton's initial starring vehicle for F. B. O. release, "If I Were Queen," is a romantic drama. A majority of the scenes are located in mythical Balkan principalities, but notwithstanding this fact and the suggestion contained in the title, it is not a costume production in the strict sense of the term, as the leading characters appear in royal robes in only one big scene.

Miss Clayton's work in this production is uniformly high class and she holds the interest and sympathy of the audience at all times. She is aided by a cast which satisfactorily portray their respective roles but who present no particularly striking characterizations.

The massive sets used in the castle scenes are one of the striking features of the production. They make an admirable background for the romantic action.

On the whole, this picture should prove attractive to the average audience particularly those who like this type of story. While there are some thrilling scenes, it would seem that the director has not made them play as vital a part in the story as he might. The production runs along smoothly but at no time does it cause you to grip the arms of your chair. Aside from the sets and the prominence of the star it is a production of only average appeal.

Length, 5,955 Feet.

The Story

Princess Oluf, ruler of Kosnia, during her school days in Paris, forms a warm friendship for Ruth Townley, an American girl, and gives her a locket with the Kosnian coat-of-arms and her own (Oluf's) name on the back. While on a balcony, Ruth drops the locket and it is picked up by a young man who returns it and falls in love with her. Returning to her country, Oluf meets difficulty in wedding the man of her choice, due to the opposition of Valdemir, ruler of a neighboring principality. She sends for Ruth, but the train is wrecked en route and in an encounter with a peasant Ruth is injured. She is found by Valdemir and taken to his castle. Recovering consciousness she finds that Valdemir is the man she met in Paris. Despite her protestations that she is Ruth Townley, Valdemir refuses to believe her, and thinking she is Oluf, he keeps her in the castle. Ruth finally falls in love with him, but believes he is Oluf's sweetheart. Valdemir arranges a royal wedding, but at the altar Ruth, who has believed it is only a court function, demurs and leaves him. He apologizes and allows her to go to Oluf. Later finding out his error, he follows her and a reconciliation takes place after mutual explanations.

"Clarence"

William deMille Version of Stage Play a Thoroughly Enjoyable Comedy with Three-Star Cast

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

William deMille has taken Booth Tarkington's stage success, "Clarence," and transferred it to the screen as a Paramount feature. He has made of it a thoroughly enjoyable comedy that should find a welcome from practically all classes of theatregoers. It is the kind of a picture that gets you almost immediately and keeps you entertained and in good humor throughout.

The humor in this picture lies largely in the characterization of the title role. The author succeeded in making Clarence quite different from the usual run of comedy roles. It is not an exaggerated character and there is no broad comedy which will bring loud laughs but rather it is of the type which causes you to continually smile or chuckle to yourself.

Clarence is an eccentric sort of person in the picture, and in his easy going way he is able to rise to any emergency and handle extremely delicate situations. Nobody knows much about him but everybody likes him. His humor is of the dry, droll type, and to offset it there is a lot of good human stuff in the domestic troubles of the temperamental and wealthy family with whom he is thrown. It is all very real.

Aside from the merit of the picture itself, it has an unusual cast headed by three stars which gives it fine exploitation value, Wallace Reid, Agnes Ayres and May McAvoy. All of these stars are admirably cast and contribute largely to the success of the picture. Naturally, Wallace Reid is "Clarence" and although the role is the exact opposite of his characterizations in his auto stories, he gives a fine performance. Agnes Ayres and May McAvoy are also excellent. In fact, the entire cast does unusually good work and is finely balanced.

Despite his easy going way, Clarence puts up a good fight when the occasion requires and there is considerable pep and action. There are a lot of clever touches in this production which are very pleasing and highly amusing. In fact, it is an unusually enjoyable screen play.

Score another hit for Paramount and William deMille with "Clarence," adapted from Booth Tarkington's successful stage play. It is a thoroughly enjoyable comedy drama that will keep you in good humor throughout. Probably you won't laugh out loud many times, but it will keep you chuckling to yourself.

And such a cast, three stars, Wallace Reid, Agnes Ayres and May McAvoy, and don't forget Kathlyn Williams, Ed Martindel and Robert Agnew, they are all very fine. It is a "different" kind of comedy, clean and amusing, and should please your audiences.—C. S. S.

Length, 6,146 Feet.

The Story

Returning from the A. E. F. and looking for a job, Clarence goes to the office of Mr. Wheeler, who has a temperamental family. Finding out that Clarence drove mules in the Army he says he can make use of him. Clarence becomes a member of the Wheeler household, and though his position is indefinite he is continually making himself useful in all sorts of ways. He is a general peacemaker between the different factions, and is always easy-going and calm. His big chance comes when, with the assistance of Miss Pinney, the governess, he succeeds in breaking up the infatuation that Wheeler's daughter has for an adventurer. This chap, to get even, tries to make Wheeler believe that Clarence is a deserter. Everything turns out all right. "Wolf Law"

Universal Melodrama Based on Hugh Pendexter's Story Stars Frank Mayo

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Highly seasoned melodrama with Frank Mayo in a romantic he-man role is the appeal in "Wolf Law," a Universal adaptation of a story by Hugh Pendexter. In some wild country where the laws are made by human wolves and every man is looking for a chance to double cross his neighbor, most of the action takes place. The story is so far removed from facts that it will not be apt to be criticized for implausibility. It will be regarded as intense melodrama. In places it has great force and at all times it is entertaining.

Frank Mayo is ideally cast. He has been featured with an appreciation of his most popular qualities. In the matter of appearance he has observed the details so indispensable to feminine approval, and in his direct fighting methods he will be quite as sure to interest men.

Action starts with a horse race, a favorable fore-runner of the thrills that are to follow. The hero's retreat, after this, to the Ozark Hills is picturesquely shown before impressive scenic backgrounds. The scene of the final reckoning where he forces a confession from the man who is the real embezzler is a novel third-degree, not convincing, even absurd. It is depicted in continued close-ups of the two men glaring at each other, until one wilts. Harry Carter's characterization of Dandy Dawson is excellent.

The Cast

Jefferson De Croteau.....Frank Mayo
Francine Kedney .....Sylvia Breamer
Etienne De Croteau.....Tom Guise

Simon Santey.....William Quinn
Samson Bender.....Nick De Ruiz
"Dandy" Dawson.....Harry Carter
Mountaineer.....Paul Wismer

Adapted from the story by Hugh Pendexter.
Direction by Stuart Paton.
Length, 4,463 feet.

The Story

Mayo impersonates Jefferson de Croteau, scion of a hot-headed family. He thought he murdered a man in a Missouri town and dashed over the border into the deeps of Arkansas. He became an involuntary citizen of a lawless domain and the unwilling servant of a man who ruled violent men in this little mountain kingdom by the sheer strength of brutality.

What a mistake the outlaws made in taking this young outsider for a likely candidate. So he proves in the exciting scenes which follow, leading eventually to a happy ending.

"Shylock of Wall Street"

Burton King Production A Wonderful Study In Ghetto Life And Types—A Picture Of Surprises.

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

Burton King's latest production, "The Shylock of Wall Street," is a revelation of surprises, for it shows Dore Davidson in a role that makes him feel thoroughly at home, and Maurice Costello, the once famous star, perform in such a manner that leaves no doubt as to his ability to repeat the refreshing histrionic exhibitions he gave years back. It is a "meaty" production that will appeal to the masses, for it is human in every respect, dealing with a grudge borne by a good-hearted Jewish philanthropist for years with the thought of revenge on the man who ruined the life of his daughter uppermost in his mind. The theme is big in message and purpose and both are carefully vizualized to the extent that the production will stand out as the best made by Mr. King and certainly the most notable achievement of Dore Davidson, whose acting is one of the outstanding lights of the picture.

"The Shylock of Wall Street" is an interesting study in Ghetto life and characters, the latter being realistically depicted by a worthy cast, which gives Davidson consistently praiseworthy support. Exhibitors will not want for heart-interest situations or "punches," both being unusually conspicuous in this one. It has production value, which, when given more forceful titles than those viewed when the picture was seen by this writer, should be such to warrant booking in the best houses.

Aside from the surprise sprung by Costello in his "comeback," Zena Keefe both as the deserted wife and later as her daughter is splendid. Edward Earle, too, is good and makes an interesting leading man opposite Miss Keefe. The rest of the cast does equally as good.

To Burton King must go the bulk of credit for the value of the production which should be a good money-maker, for it touches on a new human character—grand-daddy, doing the latter every justice. It deals with men and women of Jewish and Christian beliefs, but the theme is so carefully handled that it is at no time offensive. It is interesting, entertaining, clean, wholesome and exciting with good photography and satisfactory lighting.

"Sure-Fire Flint"

A Cyclonic Comedy Drama That Is Genuine Knockout And Ranks As Best Of Its Kind.

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

Johnny Hines, besides being a clean-cut, likeable and human comedian, is equally at home when it comes to performing fearless acrobatic feats, smashing into fast moving trains, and also a terpsichorean expert who would make even the illustrious Maurice blush. But that's another way of saying that Johnny Hines is as versatile an artist as there is on the screen and certainly he has created a lovable character with an individualism that puts him in a class by himself. It is an original characterization that is a mixture of Wallace Reid and Harold Lloyd.

And in his latest vehicle, "Sure-Fire Flint," Johnny Hines not only exceeds the expectations of his most liberal friends, but through it will add many, many thousand more admirers to his list, for this comedy drama is a genuine knockout, so chockful of laughs that your sides fairly ache when it is all over. But it also has pathos, thrills and romance. All of which testifies to the high calibre showmanship of all those who in any way contributed to the production of the picture, which is good enough for the very best theatres in this or other lands.

Charles C. Burr made a lot of promises when he selected this story for Johnny. But he didn't go far enough in these. "Sure-Fire Flint" is Hines' masterpiece and will make Burr a richer producer-distributor. Taken from any angle, the picture stands out like a powerful lighthouse on a dark night. Direction, production, photography, lighting and last, but far from the least in value, titling—all of these are of the first water, flawless, and contribute to make a superlatively refreshing attraction.

This writer "caught" the picture at the wi Olympia in Boston and on Wednesday night
nat the Biltmore Hotel we allowed ourselves a to be pushed, shoved, elbowed, pressed and stepped on by seeminly hundreds who stood through the hour and 22 minutes consumed in projecting the picture—and still we enjoyed it, even more so than in Boston, for on the second occasion there was Jimmy Bradford and his learned musicians who raised the entertainment value of the feature with their timely renditions. "Sure Fire Flint" is so enjoyable that you want to see it over and over again, for every title, conceived by Ralph Spence, is a treat in comedy, pathos and general dramatic construction.

Ralph Spence has contributed materially to the success of many pictures, but in this instance he had a really big comedy drama with which to work. His work couldn't have been difficult for the "meat" or "material" was there. The action was rapid-fire from beginning to end. The story was novelly romantic and with an appeal that reaches out to every type of "fan." The action inspired the masterful titles that Mr. Spence conceived. But in justice to the latter, it must be said that the titles are the best of their kind, full of good-hearted laughs and with a punch in every sentence, phrase and word.

The direction by Dell Henderson is something that that gentlemen should feel proud of. He had a series of difficult tasks on his hands, but he handled them all capably with the result that the production is jamful of thrillers enough to make a 10-episode serial. There are "gags" some typical of "Torchy," but for the most part extremely interesting and amusing as only Hines can make them amusing in his inimitable fashion.

Billy Bitzer photographed the picture, which is graced with a cast of names with which exhibitors can not go wrong, for the picture, production, direction, cast, and story will substantiate his every promise. You can not say too much good for this high-class, fast-moving human-interest comedy drama, that is a tribute to Johnny Hines and his efforts. Doris Kenyon is charming with Edmund Breese, Robert Edeson, Effie Shannon, J. Barney Sherry and Charles Gerrard all giving meritorious support and contributing materially to the histrionic value of the feature.

The Story

"Sure Fire Flint" is the type of the story that must be read in its entirety or seen in its screen adaptation to be fully appreciated, for it deals with the adventures of Flint overseas, on Broadway, as a taxicab driver, business man, and extreme daredevil, jumping from one moving train onto another, crashing full into a locomotive and what not. But he finally triumphs in love, business and adventure. But in attaining this success is unfolded in a human-interest story of "Nanette and Rintintin" that is beautiful.

"The Secrets of Paris"

C. C. Burr-Whitman Bennett Feature Replete With Splendid Settings Plus Cast of Names.

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

A little more attention to logical continuity would in all probability have made this picture a superlative vehicle of entertainment, but as it stands now it can rank only as an average program feature: "The Secrets Of Paris," an exploitable title, should have been a truly great attraction, for Producer Whitman Bennett acquired the services of a wonderful cast, emphasizing his determination to give the exhibitor a box office knockout by assigning Kenneth Webb to assume the directorial task and then surrounding himself with a staff of technical experts. But while with photography succeeded in furnishing a good production, the story is not consistent with the attraction value of the feature as a high class entertainment vehicle. Whether it be the fault of the continuity writer or lack of "punch" titles is problematical, but in the opinion of the writer, Whitman Bennett and Kenneth Webb, overlooked a golden opportunity to give the independent market a truly big picture, for certainly the material was there.

The outstanding feature of the picture—the production that the feature itself is backed with being the one commercial value that will bear careful attention from the shrewdest showmen—is a realistic fistic, knock-about battle between a renegade and a youth toward the end of the affair. Earlier in the evening there was another equally exciting set-to, but this, though a blood-boiling incident, was brutal. There are exciting moments, to be sure, plus a mother scene that gets over. But that was one scene that should have made "The Secrets of Paris" something that would have established the picture firmly with the fans. However, while the scene registers—it could have been stretched a trifle and close-upped, with a little more motherly emotion on the part of Effie Shannon. This, in our humble opinion, would have increased the value of the outstanding human interest sequence.

However, "The Secrets of Paris" should have no trouble catching on, for while the producers seemingly lost their one chance to give the market the big picture that had been expected and that the press agents' notices promised was in the making, moving picture theatre goers will welcome the return of many of their favorites to the screen in this vehicle. In the point of acting, this picture is superb, for this writer cannot recall having seen Lew Cody do better work than that he unfolds as the Prince and later King. He is the type of lover the hardest-boiled he-man will admire and the women folks will idolize.

Rose Coghlan as "The Owl," an underworld character, is wonderful in a role that could have easily been overdone. She, however, handles it with a mastery that is most satisfying. Montague Love as the villainous "schoolmaster," a crook, is equally forceful. Gladys Hulette as Mayflower is beautifully real and could not have been better done. William (Buster) Collier, Jr., as Francois was boyishly human in human-interest character. Others whose work deserves mention includes Dolores Cassinelli, Harry Sothern, Effie Shannon, J. Barney Sherry, James Thomas, and Walter James.

Whoever conceived the sets did a masterful job, for they constitute a box office asset for this picture. Certainly, Mr. Bennett did not neglect to spend lavishly in getting the proper production background. Had the story been given a little more consideration and audience emotions borne in mind at every sequence this picture might have made many sit up and take notice, but as it stands it is just a program affair.

The Story

There was a charming prince many years ago who fell in love with a peasant girl. The girl was forced to marry the man of her parents' choice. Death called both man and wife, an orphan being entrusted to a friend, an underworld character. The girl is brought up in ignorance of her own parentage. At the "Rat Hole" she chums with Francois, a young man who is in love with her and whose father, the schoolmaster, had vowed would be a thief. Years pass and the prince, now king, resolves to ascertain the whereabouts of the girl of his heart. He goes to Paris incognito and there visits the "Rat Hole" where his real adventure starts and ends with a marriage to the daughter of his peasant girl sweetheart, and the reconciliation of Francois and his long lost mother who turns out to be the ex-prince's former nurse.

News and Reviews of Short Subjects and Serials

Educational to Handle "Hodge Podge" Lyman Howe's Novelty Single Reelers

Educational, which released Lyman H. Howe's "Ride on a Runaway Train," which proved to be a big box-office winner and one of the greatest novelty single reels ever shown, announces arrangements have been made with Mr. Howe for a series of twelve single-reel pictures to be known as Lyman H. Howe's Hodge Podge.

The first will be "King Winter," and as the name indicates, each reel will consist of several subjects, including unique scenic shots, animation and trick photography. In "King Winter" will be unique views of Niagara Falls, but it is stated that this series will not consist of "scenic pictures," but each item will be a big novelty in itself.

The material used in this series was gathered by Mr. Howe on his extended trips through many lands in search for material for lectures and unique pictures. Prints of the first subject are now in Educational branch exchanges and ready for showing to exhibitors.

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, states that it was in response to the criticism that there is too much sameness in motion pictures and that the public hungers for novelty that arrangement was made for this series which, it is promised, will fill the bill.

Will Rogers "The Ropin' Fool" Heads Pathe Release List for October 29

First position on Pathe's schedule for week of October 29 is given to a special, Will Rogers in "The Ropin' Fool." This picture was shown at the Capitol Theatre, New York, several months ago, when it won high praise from the newspaper reviewers. It is a decided novelty, containing both comedy and drama woven into two reels, which show remarkable pictures of lariat throwing. Rogers makes his rope do almost unbelievable stunts, and these are shown by slow-motion photography, by which you follow every move of the lariat. The picture is a decided novelty.

Another of the Range Rider series, starring Leo Maloney, is included in the week's releases. It is titled "The Cross Bar War" and deals in a thrilling way, with plenty of punch and action, of a row between cattlemen and sheep herders. There is also a Hal Roach comedy, "The Golf Bug," in which Paul Parrott indulges in a highly amusing burlesque of a golf game.

The new Charles Hutchison serial, "Speed," reaches its second episode in which, after jumping overboard the star is attacked by a huge shark which he fights under water. There is also a Harold Lloyd re-issue, "At the Old Stage Door," in which he enacts the role of a "Johnny."

The Aesop Film Fable for the week is "Henpecked Harry," which shows what happens to a hero when he gets home to his wife, pointing the moral that "no man is a hero in his own home."

Universal's "The Radio King" Serial Endorsed by Prominent Radio Monthly

Universal's new serial "The Radio King" is the recipient of an unusual compliment. After being viewed in its entirety by the complete editorial staff of one of the leading Radio publications. The Radio News, with a circulation said to be 235,000, it has received the endorsement of that publication as to its scientific merit and usefulness and praise as a thrilling chapter play.

In a letter to Mr. Laemmle, H. Gernsbeck, editor of Radio News, calls attention to his editorial announcement that this is probably the first time a radio publication has identified with a motion picture and that before tieing up with it, in justice to the readers he had his entire staff view this serial. Suggestions and criticisms were offered and he compliments Mr. Laemmle on the fact that they were all acted upon, making the picture in its portrayal of radio activities and tendencies absolutely scientific and accurate. In this connection Mr. Gernsbeck calls atention to the fact that his paper has had occasion to poke fun editorially at the serious scientific mistakes which have been made in certain radio films in the past and states that this is the first atempt of any producer to really turn out a creditable film that can be viewed by the radio fraternity without misgivings. He also praises the fact that high grade equipment which was not all of one manufacture, was used.

In addition to its approval of the scientific aspects of this serial, Radio News will in its November and December issues run a novelization of the story which is by Edward Dillon. This has been prepared by the famous novelist, George Bronson Howard, now a member of Universal's scenario staff.

Laurel in a Travesty

Tinseled costumes, bull fights and cheering crowds are features of Stan Laurel's third two-reel comedy for Metro, titled "Mud and Sand." It deals with the rise and fall of a Spanish Matador. Gil Pratt directed the production, which is a burlesque on "Blood and Sand."

The star appears in the role of Rhubard Vaselino. The supporting cast includes Mae Laurel as LaPaloma, Julia Leonard as Carmel, Leone Anderson as Filet of Sole, Sam Kaufman as Humidor and Wheeler Dryden as Cuspidor.

Garsson Will Not Sell "Sight Unseen"

Murray W. Garsson announces the distribution on the state right market of a series of twelve new Nick Carter two-reel productions, and in connection with the statement contained in his advertisement published in last week's issue to the effect that none of these films would be offered state right buyers "sight unseen," Mr. Garsson says, "I know what I have in this series and when I advertise that prospective buyers must see a screening before sales propositions are entertained, I mean just that. I have every confidence in the product. It is a short-sighted policy for a producer to attempt to harvest money by misrepresentation. If the exchanges prosper, so do I, that is why I aim to let the buyer see my pictures first and talk business afterward."

Montreal Stores Boost Century Comedies

Another indication of the increasing importance of short subjects is shown in the number of tieups they are getting with prominent business houses. For instance, in Montreal alone, not counting a department store tieup for Baby Peggy's Fairy Tale series, Century comedies secured displays in the windows of seven radio shops, three tailors and two drug stores on "The Radio Hound."

The radio shops showed Brownie equipped with his radio set, the tailors showed pictures of him selecting the tuxedo he wears and the drug stores used photos of Brownie in connection with advertising a soap. In addition two florists tied up pictures of Baby Peggy with the slogan, "Say it with flowers."

New F. B. O. Comedy

"Pop Tuttle's Pole Cat Plot," the newest of the Plum Center comedies made by the Paul Gerson studios and distributed by F. B. O. was given a preview at the Strand Theatre in San Francisco with highly gratifying results. The story deals with the way Pop finally gets the best of a rival who starts a competitive bus line. He does it with the aid of a little colored boy and a skunk.

In addition to Dan Mason, the cast includes Gilna Hervey, Eddie Harris, Edward O'Brien, Selby Roach, Charles Gerson and Helen Howell.

Pathe Has Thriller

Describing it as "thrillingly different" Pathe announces the release in November of "The Price of Progress," a two-reeler made by Kiser Studios in Portland, Oregon. It is a drama of the big timber country showing how men and machinery triumph over natural obstacles in felling and transporting the giants of the forests. It is one of a series of short subjects to be known as the "Oregon Trail" series.

Eight Series of Short Subjects Offered by Fox

The greatest array of short subjects ever offered by Fox Film Corporation is announced for release during the Fall and Winter season. There will be eight brands, which include Fox Educational Entertainments, five individual series of comedy productions, Mutt and Jeff cartoons and Fox News.

Heading the list is the comedy start of two continents, Lupino Lane, whose initial comedy, "The Reporter," is scoring a hit throughout the country and which received high praise from the newspapers on its showing at the New York Strand. His second production, "The Pirate," is also said to be going over big. His third production, "My Hero," will be released within a short time. Mr. Lane is one of the best known and most popular comedians in Great Britain and he also achieved a big success on the stage.

Another popular series of Fox comedies are the Clyde Cook laugh producers. "High and Dry" is the current release; it is a story of the desert and one newspaper critic said it should get a laugh from a sphinx. With the forthcoming production, "Lazy Bones," a new mark will be set for this type of comedy production.

Al St. John, who has been a favorite of the Fox force of funmakers for several seasons, has completed three of his Fall and Winter releases. They are "The City Chap," which has already been released. "Out of Place" is scheduled for next month and "False Alarm" for the first of the year. It is announced that "All Wet," released last month, is proving an exceptional forerunner for the series.

Another series is the William Fox Sunshine Comedies, which are released every two weeks. The schedule beginning with October 1 includes "Dandy Dan," "Step Lively, Please," "The Haunted House," "The Ranch Romeo," "Cupid's Elephant," "The Fresh Heir," and "A Poor Fish." These productions, which feature a bevy of beautiful girls, are said to be the only comedies of their type now being offered to exhibitors.

It is announced that the new series of Bud Fisher's Mutt and Jeff comedy cartoons are heralded as being even better than those of last year due to improvements in the creating of animated cartoons. There are scheduled for release prior to January 1, "Red Hot," "Fallen Archers," "Cold Turkey," "The Wishing Duck," "Bumps and Thumps" and "Nearing the End."

The first six of the Fox Educational Entertainments, William Fox's newest offering, are now being released and receiving high praise from the press and prominent persons, including leading exhibitors. Made from a showman's angle they combine knowledge and entertainment and are said to be already proving patronage builders. They include "Alligator Hunting and Farming," "Thrills and Spills," "Volcanoes of the World," "Water Sports," "A Story of Ice" and "Ancient Rome." They are being filmed by cameramen stationed throughout the world, and will be released one each week. The second series of six is about ready.

Then there is Fox News, which is issued twice each week. It is announced that there are now one thousand and eight cameramen supplying news and feature subjects and providing a service which is winning commendation from exhibitors.

"A Punctured Prince"

(Metro—Comedy—Two Reels)

Here is an exceptionally fast-moving knockabout comedy, it is so full of gags and stunts that they almost overlap each other. It is a Hunt Stromberg production and the second of the series which Metro is distributing, with "Bull" Montana as the star. Not only do laughs follow each other in rapid succession in this offering, but there are a number of clever subtitles. It should prove a winner with audiences that like comedies of this type. The leading role suits "Bull" to a T.—C. S. S.

"The Electric House"

(First National—Comedy—2,231 Feet)

To the long list of Buster Keaton's comedy successes add "The Electric House," a First National picture. It is undoubtedly one of his best pictures. There are laughs galore, and besides, this comedy contains some of the most ingenious mechanical contrivances ever seen on the screen, and Keaton and Eddie Cline, who directed the production, have used them all with excellent comedy results. This is an unusually clever comedy with a lot of new and refreshing business and should produce a lot laughs in any class of theatre. Buster graduates from a correspondence school as a botanist but in a mix-up receives a diploma as an electrican and is immediately engaged to wire a house with all modern conveniences. With a book of instruction he starts out and achieves startling results.—C. S. S.

"Ocean Swells"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Here is a clever comedy, absolutely clean, which should please the majority of audiences. The main idea, that of the wife's family planting themselves on hubby with the intention of staying all summer, is not new, but the handling of the subject is. Charlotte Merriam and Neal Burns have the leading roles, and there is an unusually clever little girl of about four, Bebe Blackburn, who is a fine swimmer and a real little actress as well. There is something doing every minute in this Christie comedy and the action brings a lot of laughs. The manner in which Neal seeks to elude his "in laws" by loading his bungalow on a scow and sailing away, how they catch up with him and his unsuccessful attempts to get rid of them is ingeniously handled.—C. S. S.

"Wedding Pumps"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Brownie, Universal's famous dog, endows this comedy with an appeal that few will be able to resist. His performance is unusually entertaining and the director has given him numerous opportunities to show his marked intelligence. The first part of the comedy has a shoe store for a setting and Brownie proves a valuable assistant to Jackie Morgan, the clerk. They sell a pair of wedding slippers to a prospective bride, and pumps to the groom, and in delivering them get deeply involved in the wedding celebration, especially in the wedding cake. The comedy offers clean amusement of a type that is in constant demand.—M. K.

"The Bar-Cross War"

(Pathe—Western—Two Reels)

As with the preceding offerings of this series starring Leo Maloney and distributed by Pathe, there is a wealth of incident and action in this two-reel western. It is one of the best of the series. The story deals with cattlemen's aversion to sheep herders. Through a combination of circumstances, the brother of the owner of the ranch is mistaken for a sheep herder. Maloney befriends him and a violent gun battle that is exceptionally well handled with a good climax, ends in everything being satisfactorily straightened out. There is a pretty little romance between Maloney and the ranch owner's daughter.—C. S. S.

"Double Trouble"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

This is one of the brightest of the Lee Kids comedies. Some of the most successful parts of the original subjects of feature length have been used. The result is two reels of compact entertainment. Jane and Katherine are so clever in this number that they should be able to enliven any program. They go to a movie and watch themselves on the screen. Their performance on the screen vies with their performance while watching it in amusement value. An exceptionally good number—M. K.

"The Golf Bug"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

Paul Parrott is the star of this single-reel comedy distributed by Pathe. As implied by the title, it deals with golf and is an amusing burlesque on that popular game. Considerable cleverness has been shown in the handling of the situations so that many laughs will result. It ranks well up in the list of Paul Parrott comedies and should please his fans. Lovers of golf will find the star's stunts highly amusing, for they never saw just such a game.—C. S. S.

"The Ropin' Fool"

(Pathe—Special—Two Reels)

This two-reel special distributed by Pathe, starring Will Rogers, is a clever offering combining comedy with some really remarkable rope-throwing stunts which are shown in slow motion. It was reviewed at considerable length in issue of Moving Picture World dated November 19, 1921, page 335, at time of pre-release showing at the Capitol Theatre, New York. It is a pleasing novelty with which to round out a program.—C. S. S.

"The First Flivver"

(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

This is one of the cleverest of the series of Tony Sarg subjects, and it should highly amuse the average spectator. Considerable ingenuity has been shown in the manner in which the hero, way back in the days when the world was young, succeeded in building a "flivver" which was operated by "goat power," and thereby outwitted his rivals for the affections of a fair lady. The subject is highly amusing and has been well handled.—C. S. S.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Biggest Question

The question, propounded by a San Francisco projectionist some while ago is:

If you were called upon to design and equip a 2-projector projection room in a high class, straight motion picture theatre, and to advise as to the location and construction of same, and to advise as to the selection of a screen, what would you do with regard to every one of the items concerned, and why would you do it?

Installments of my reply have appeared in August 5, 12 and 19, September 2 and 30, and October 14 and 21 issues.

We have now considered and discussed the location, construction and ventilation of the room. Next we come to its equipment, which is a matter in which many factors are involved, and which may be viewed from several angles.

First of all, I hold that no man should enter the business of exhibiting motion pictures unless he have sufficient capital to do the job right, and "do the job right" means securing and equipping a theatre in such a way that the motion picture may be shown the public under conditions which will not compel them to "make good" against uncomfortable and unsatisfactory surroundings.

A bare, dingy-walled auditorium, equipped with seats more or less uncomfortable, with dirty floors and roystering rowdies, or with any one of these objectionable things, compels the photoplay to "make good" by pleasing audiences under conditions which make pleasing very difficult. Such conditions are not only unfair to the audience itself, but to the motion picture.

Also a theatre equipped with a badly located, too-small projection room, which is badly ventilated and uncomfortable, is a heavy brake placed upon success. The same is true if the projection equipment be poor or unsuited to the work.

First of all comes the current, because upon what kind and voltage it may be will depend the selection of the best equipment for delivering it to the projection arc.

Examining the ordinary condition we find direct current at 220 or 110, A. C. at 220 or 110 and usually at 60 cycles. Our first care will be to see to it that the supply wires to the theatre are amply large enough to carry the load. Unless this be so we may find lots of difficulty later on. If it be 110 volt direct current we will select one of the new type resistance described and illustrated on pages 437 to 441, inclusive, of the handbook.

If the supply be 220, then we will, after very carefully investigating the various D. C. to D. C. motor generators made for projection work, the types of which may be examined very well by referring to your new handbook, and select the one we believe to be best, remembering that the efficiency of the machine is something we must demand detailed data on from the manufacturer, because it is important. I would inform the seller that any efficiency claims made must be proven by actual tests, made by him after the installation is complete. It might be well to remark that some manufacturers claim that they can produce efficiency results which justify the installation of D. C. to D. C. sets where the current supply is 110, but I would want them to produce pretty conclusive proof that such an installation will justify its cost.

Are You Working by "Guess" or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens chart (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) is in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

"Don't guess." Do your work RIGHT. Price, fifty cents, stamps.

Address Moving Picture World, either 516 Fifth Avenue, New York City, or 28 East Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, Ill.

If the current be A. C., then I would by all means install a motor generator set, selecting that one, after very careful investigation, which seemed best fitted to the work, remembering that the constant potential machine, which doubles its amperage without changing its voltage when the second arc is cut in at change-over has much to commend it for projection work. Again I would demand an efficiency test AFTER installation.

Mercury arc rectifiers I would not consider, not because they are not an efficient and a good machine, for they are both, but because they are not mobile enough for projection work. By "mobile" I mean that they will not stand any overload to speak of, even for a short while, hence their range is very limited, and change-over presents difficulties.

Every company putting out mercury arc rectifiers also put out excellent motor generator sets, which are much better for projection work than the rectifier. The rectifier is cheaper in first cost, yes, but when you have said that you have told the whole story.

I would not consider any location for the motor generator except immediately adjacent to, but not directly in the projection room. Under no conceivable circumstances would I locate a set in the basement.

I would set the machine on thick cork pads to absorb vibration. Five or six inches of heavy felt will do, but cork is best. Rubber also is excellent, but hard to get of the right kind.

In addition to a motor generator, if the current be A. C. I would install a projection transformer, by all means, for emergency use, connecting it so that I could instantly switch from motor generator to transformer. This is a very necessary emergency equipment.

In selecting the motor generator I would make up my mind as to what amperage I wanted to use, since a motor generator operates at greatest efficiency only when at full load.

On the front wall to the right of each projector I would mount a panel board carrying an ammeter and voltmeter.

In the matter of projectors I would be very certain that the ratio of intermittent movement be as fast as is practical without undue strain on the film; that there is a well designed, practical aperture tension spring adjustment; that the speed control is efficient and that its control handle is conveniently reached from normal working position; that the rotating shutter can be gotten out far enough to reach the aerial image, and that the lamphouse can be gotten back as far as is necessary under the conditions the projector optical train must work under.

Design, material and workmanship of course all cut a figure, but after all it is what can be put on the screen, and how efficiently it can be put on, that counts, rather than a few dollars more or less in repairs.

In this connection I would add that all present leading American projectors are good projectors. Each has points of superior excellence and each has a counterbalance of points "not so good."

Not a Butcher

A. L. Fell, Projectionist Collingwood Theatre, Collingwood, New Jersey, has his new handbook and likes it. He says:

Handbook received O. K. Have had it but a short time, but it has already done me a world of good. No projectionist, or near-projectionist should have the slightest doubt as to its value. It is my opinion that it is a truly wonderful book, financially within the reach of us all and not one of us should be without it.

But above all things I sincerely hope that every man in and around this district will get one for one reason alone, and that is PUNCH MARKS. I have received shows lately directly from the exchange in every reel of which were holes 5-16 inch in diameter. These holes have occurred right in the middle of the picture and appear from ten to fifteen feet from the end of each reel.

No, I am not and do not claim to be perfect—not by a long shot, but I am NOT a butcher and don't think much of the man who is.

In closing let me wish much and continued success both to yourself and the department.

Every decent, self-respecting projectionist will heartily agree with you in giving the punch artist the title "BUTCHER."

It is a matter primarily up to exchanges. Until they, the exchanges, really inspect their films and are themselves in position to know who does the damage and MAKE THEM PAY FOR IT, reform will be a slow process.

It would be quite possible, however, for unions to educate their members along the lines of reform in this respect, and certainly it is a duty the union owes the industry and the employer to do all in its power to prevent its members committing such outrages on the property intrusted to their care, and on their fellow projectionists by compelling them to either perform a lot of labor cutting out the holes, or else discredit themselves by projecting them to the screen.

Has Trouble

Have just stepped into this job and have trouble getting a clear field on the screen. Neither the handbook nor the lens chart seem to have what I need in this case.

Here is the dope: Have two Simplexes, in a "booth" five and one-half feet deep, with a switchboard a foot thick on the rear wall. From this you will see that I must have my lamphouse slam bang up against the mechanism, and therein lies the trouble. I must get my condenser combination center at least twelve or thirteen inches from the aperture, which, because the condenser is inside the lamphouse, gives me room back of it.

My line-up is as follows: crater 3½ inches from face of collector lens. Condenser 6½-7½, spaced 1-16 inch apart. Distance center of condenser to film thirteen inches. Projection lens five-inch E. F.; working distance 4½ inches; free diameter 1⅝ inches. Picture approximately 17 feet at 95 feet projection distance.

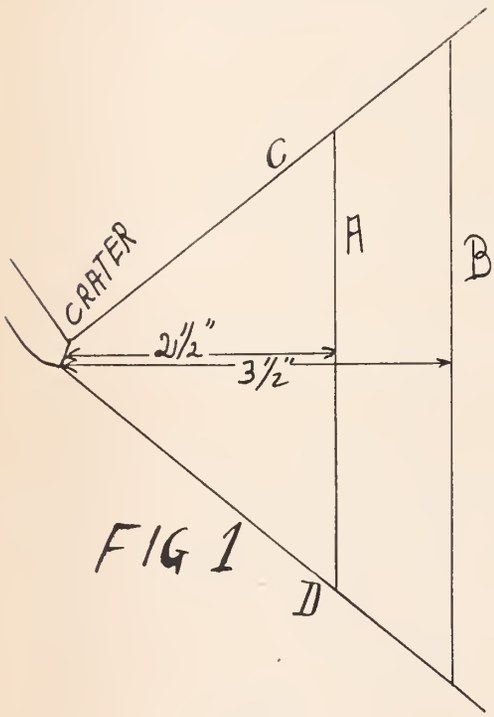

FIGURE 1
The Result of 3½-inch Distance of Crater.

Yellowish Spot

Use ⅝ upper and ½ inch Silvertip negative carbons; 35 amperes D. C. Have tried every conceivable angle of carbon set, but get a yellowish spot, surrounded by a slight blue ghost.

Am forced to carry a very small spot and any slight adjustment of crater up or down causes brown top or bottom to picture. Have tried two 6½, two 7½ and a 7½-8½, as far as I can remember.

Have tried all manner of spacings, distances and differences, but just simply cannot get a clear field. I enclose stamps for immediate reply. If you feel that your reply will help some one else who is cramped for space, then publish same.

Incidentally, what do you think of the so-called "Anti Misframe League," whose members solemnly pledge themselves to work for nothing inspecting and repairing JUNK? I note that one of its members tells us he is going to "experiment with the aerial image and see what happens!"

I have been a reader of the department for many years, also a student of the handbook. Needless to say that both have helped materially in the salary climb.

True, brother, neither the lens chart or handbook give instructions as to what to do under impossible conditions. This is because nothing much CAN be done, and because it is not good policy to encourage exhibitors in the "patch work" necessary to PARTLY overcome faults in projection room construction.

I know of no possible means by which you can get a decent result from 35 amperes with your condenser center thirteen inches from the aperture and the crater 3½ inches from face of collector lens. The distance from center of condenser to film should be almost twenty inches, with two 6½-inch plano convex lenses. You are losing light enormously, both by having your crater something like an inch too far from the face of the collector lens and by having your condenser too close to the aperture.

Just pull on your thinking cap, sit down and examine figures 1 and 2 carefully. It would then be well to have your employer examine them prayerfully. If he then cares to further continue a condition which is not only making high grade reproduction of photoplays upon his screen entirely impossible, hence is hitting his box office a wollop every day you run, but is also wasting about half the electric energy you send through your arc—wasting fully half the resultant light, I mean—why that, of course, is up to him.

In Figure 1 you will see the result of having the crater 3½ inches from the face of the collector lens visualized. A represents the 4¼-inch opening your collector lens should have, and lines C and D the outline of the cone of light it will "pick up." If your lens be in position A, 2½ inches from the crater, it will pick up as much light as would a lens 6½ inches in diameter located at B, 3½ inches from the crater. In other words, in order to be as effective and efficient in the position you are obliged to work in as it would be at 2½ inches from the crater, your collector lens would have to be six inches in diameter, and as I think you could, with your lamphouse ventilation open and free, carry your crater pretty nearly 2½ inches from the face of the lens, you are wasting just that amount of light. You can measure between lines C and D at any point and determine exactly what collecting power, as compared to the 2½-inch distance, your lens would have at any distance.

In examining Figure 2 you will see that with your condenser jammed up against the aperture that way, you are wasting a huge proportion of the light you do succeed in getting through your condenser. See Figures 52 to 57 of new handbook. More than that, you have your screen unevenly illuminated. It takes but a glance at Figure 2 to determine that only space A of the projection lens is "in sight" of the entire condenser, and a further examination shows that only point B of the film can possibly be sent forward through the lens at 100 per cent illumination. This is fully explained and illustrated on page 183 of the new handbook, and the condenser proposition as shown in Figure 1 will be found fully and clearly explained and illustrated on page 162 and in Figure 36H.

If you wish to change to Mazda, then there would be room to give the projector proper adjustment, because Mazda requires a very short distance (using prizma condensers) from condenser to film. It might be added that once you have mastered Mazda, if you get the new aspherical condenser you can get fully as good results as can be had with a 35-ampere arc, but I think it requires a longer distance condenser to film that prizma. There probably will, taking everything together (cost of lamp replacements, etc.), not be any very large difference in operating cost, but what there is will be in favor of Mazda, and the general results would, under your present condition, be decidedly better. You will find Mazda equipment and operation fully dealt with in the new handbook, pages 815 to 869, inclusive.

As to the "Anti Misframe League," your comment in itself tells the story, hence is sufficient. Oh, yes, the blue margin of spot is evidence that you have the crater focused very far ahead of the aperture. You are working your condenser too close to spot and the spot is "back of the point of focus—on the back focus."

Fox Building Has Two New Projection Rooms; Use Power's Machines Exclusively

THE rapid strides and expansion experienced by Fox Film Corporation during the past few years, have necessitated an elaborate reconstruction of many features of the $3,000,000 building housing the New York studios and offices of the organization.

Several thousands of dollars have been devoted to the new additions and decorations which are being installed in the Fifty-fifth Street edifice.

The reconstruction began with an enlarged entrance on the Tenth Avenue side. New tile walls, mural fixtures, and pretentious woodwork form the embellishments here. The reception room has been similarly redecorated and a large oil-finished walnut standard case stationed in full view of all who enter the building.

Two new projection rooms have been erected, one to be used by officials of the corporation and the other for trade and private showings. These projection rooms possess all the latest features, and present the aspect more of a section of a private residence than that of a studio building. Power's projectors are used exclusively. The construction is such as to permit full ventilation and perfect view for each of the thirty possible visitors. The 54th Street Annex has also been the object of many improvements.

Buys Ground That Theatre Stands on

Harry M. Crandall, who for the past two years has controlled the Apollo Theatre, on H street, northeast, Washington, D. C., has purchased the ground occupied by the house, paying approximately $65,000, it has been announced. The site has a frontage of 150 feet on H street and a depth of 225 feet.

In addition to the theatre, there is an open-air picture garden for summer use, the ground and improvements representing a total value of approximately $200,000.

The theatre was originally owned and operated by the Apollo Amusement Company, which occupied the ground on a lease. About two years ago Mr. Crandall purchased all of the stock of the company and continued the ground lease then in operation. Recent remodeling of the theatre and the installation of a balcony that greatly increased the seating capacity emphasized the need of owning the ground on which the building stands.

Mr. Crandall in all probability will close the summer garden permanently, to be replaced by stores on the H street front and garages in the rear.

More Companies Go Into Film Business

While small capitalization seemed to be the rule with companies entering the motion picture business during the past week, according to records filed in the Secretary of State's office, Albany, N. Y., the total included one concern, the Colonial Theatre of Jamaica, Inc., capitalized at $230,000, and having for its directors William G. Willman, Suffern; C. G. Stewart, New York City, and Stanley Sharpe, Bayside, L. I. The company will be located in Jamaica. Other motion picture companies filing papers in the Secretary of State's office were:

Zeus Amusement Co., Inc., $7,000, Louis Lempel, New York; Grace Shapiro, Andrew Bellanca, Brooklyn; Martino's Building Corporation, $10,000, C. S. Martino, Guisseppe Giugliano, Brooklyn; Play Finance Corporation, $5000, James L. Robinson, Montclair, N. J.; Mercedes von Bredow, Henrietta Smith, New York; Independent Pictures Corporation, $1,000, B. W. and J. H. Rosenblum, J. J. Goldburg, New York; May Waterson Vaudeville Attractions, Inc., $5,000, Herman Snyder, May Waterson, Jack Snyder, New York; Carlson Film Co., Inc., $5,000, John Carlson, Joseph J. Myers, R. F. O'Keefe, New York; Cosmopolitan Corporation, $10,000, L. I. Fink, M. L. Elkin, Etta London, New York City.

Takoma Park House to Cost $130,000

Construction of a moving picture theatre to seat 1,000 has been started in Takoma Park, a suburb of Washington, D. C. The new building will cost approximately $130,000. It will be known as the Takoma Park Theatre, and is backed by prominent residents of the suburb, who have formed the Takoma Theatre Corporation.

The interior of the theatre will be of the Grecian Doric type. The vestibule will have Caen stone walls, with a marble base and tile floor. On one side of the foyer, also to be of Caen stone, will be a restroom for ladies, and on the other side a lounge and smoking room for men. The auditorium will be paneled in an original decorative design, and will have an artistic center dome ceiling. A modern heating and ventilating plant, and an indirect lighting system will be installed.

A feature of the house will be numerous emergency switches throughout the auditorium, by means of any one of which, in the event of emergency, any one in the audience may instantly flood the house with light. As Takoma Park is a town largely given over to community theatricals, the new theatre will be so constructed as to permit not only the showing of moving pictures but large community and civic gatherings.

Fox Corporation uses twenty-nine Power's machines. Pictured above are fourteen machines for laboratory projection. Eight others are in the projection rooms for the viewing of pictures by the directors of the company, six are used in the private projection rooms and the exhibitors' rooms and one is used for special laboratory work.

Latchis to Build Big Keene Theatre

A real estate deal, the biggest pulled off in Keene, N. H., in forty years, was put through last week when D. Latchis, of the Latchis Theatre, Brattleboro, Vt., bought the Lamson block, the land back of the block and the Ashuelot Shoe Factory, owned by the Keene Glue Company.

Mr. Latchis will put up a four-story fireproof building, one story of which will house a 1,000-seat theatre that it is planned to make up-to-date in every particular.

Peter Latchis, who is the manager of the Brattleboro Theatre, will also manage the new enterprise.

The company will, in the future, distribute its products, the Ohio Tuec Electric Cleaner, the Tuec Stationary Electric Cleaner and the Tuec Swimming Pool Cleaner direct through distributors.

New Stanley House For Atlantic City

The Stanley Company of America, Jules E. Mastbaum, president, has completed negotiations whereby that organization acquires a site for a new motion picture theatre in Atlantic City, to be located at the corner of Kentucky Avenue and the Boardwalk.

Mr. Mastbaum has ordered plans prepared and work to be begun upon the new theatre immediately. The structure is to be modeled upon the same lines as the Stanley Theatre, the Stanley Company's $2,000,000 theatre in Philadelphia.

Are Your Pictures Recommended?

How many people recommend to their friends what they see in your theatre?

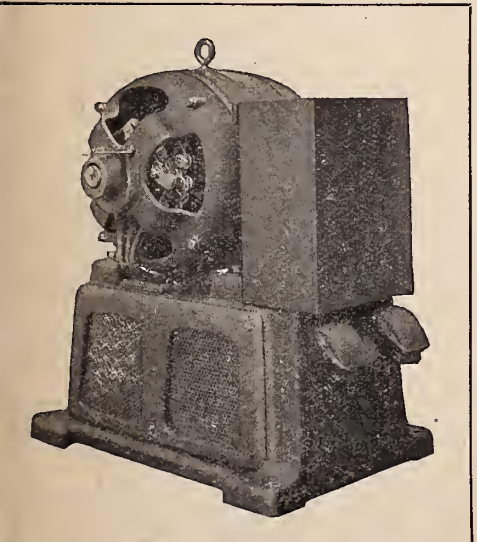
That is the test of your entertainment—the word of mouth advertising you get. And your entertainment depends on two main things: the selection of the program and the way you display it. Are your pictures white, clear and steady?

Good pictures merit good projection. Indifferent pictures require good projection. In the early days of motion pictures, any kind of light for projection was accepted as long as it was constant, or nearly constant. Now defects in the projection are reflected in the attendance.

Fortunately it is possible to meet the demands of an exacting public. Good light for projection is the purpose of the Wagner White-Light Converter which converts the ordinary alternating current into the far more desirable direct. The light is white—powerful—steady—easily controlled and perfectly dissolving at change over.

Equipped with it you have gone half way toward making satisfied patrons. Your pictures will be given every advantage to make them successful.

While light is relatively a minor item in the operating expenses of the theatre, its importance is great. If you have a copy of our book entitled LIGHT FOR MOTION PICTURE PROJECTION you will see graphically why direct current arc light is superior to any other form of light. You will also learn the advantages of the Wagner White-Light Converter. The book is written in plain language with just enough of the technical to answer satisfactorily any questions that may arise. Shall we send you a copy? If so, simply fill in the coupon and foward it to us.



Wagner White-Light Converter, Type S. C. Includes converter, transformer element and starting switch. Ballast resistance, polarity switch and ammeter are included as part of the equipment and furnished in separate units.

Twice the light on the screen with the same current consumption

The G-E High Intensity Projection Arc gives twice the illumination on the screen that can be obtained by use of the older styles of low intensity lamps, with no increase in current consumption. Also the quality of the light is almost the same as daylight lessening eye-strain and giving, in the case of colored films, full color values. After the arc is struck, operation is automatic, there being only two hand adjustments (for regulating size of spot). The focus is fixed making adjustments when changing carbons unnecessary; carbons are merely slipped into place without requiring any clamping or fastening of nuts.

All these features are embodied in this lamp which is offered to motion picture exhibitors only after two and a half years of successful operation in actual service. You get the finest films for your theatre—show them to best advantage.

As Comfortable in the Theatre As You Would Be at Home

THAT seems like a rash statement—but it's the literal truth.

In fact, few homes have as comfortable chairs as the Mov-Ezy, the chair that means "Ease at the Movies," and which marks an epoch in theatre seating evolution.

Every Mov-Ezy is an individual chair of comfortable proportions, upholstered in accordance with your specifications, not attached in any way to neighboring chairs, and having two arm rests. Yet no seating capacity is lost in the theatre.

MOV-EZY

(Means "Ease at the Movies")

Added to this, the Mov-Ezy is the world's only theatre chair that will turn to either side to allow ample passage space between rows.

Send for handsomely illustrated catalogue—just out.

VOLUME LVIII SEPTEMBER—OCTOBER 1922

Index to Photoplays

Herewith is a list of motion pictures announced for release during September and October. On a large majority of these pictures, reviews, and in the case of feature productions the consensus of trade paper criticisms, have been published, dates of the issues being shown. Where reference is omitted Reviews and Consensus will probably be published in the next volume.

Great care has been used to make this list accurate. If errors are detected we would appreciate having our attention called to them so that our card index may be corrected. Serials are indexed under the general title of such serial or series. Unless otherwise specified, all subjects listed are five-reel dramas.

Short Subject Reviews, Cont'n'd from page 804.

"The Solitary Cyclist"

(Educational—Drama—Two Reels)

The standard of entertainment value set in the previous Sherlock Holmes' two-reel dramas distributed by Educational is maintained in this one. It is interesting and entertaining though there is not quite such a baffling mystery as in some of the others. The story involves a plot on the part of three men to marry a girl who is the sole heir of a very wealthy uncle. One of them, who proves to be the solitary cyclist who followed her to protect her, really falls in love with her, and with the timely aid of Sherlock Holmes, who is working on the case, saves her from the others and finally wins her love. This picture shows the great detective is as good in a fight as he is in solving mysteries, and there is a lot of punch in this scene.—C. S. S.

"The Graphic"

(Educational—Magazine—One Reel)

The excellent impression produced in the first three issues of Educational's new screen magazine is maintained in this issue. There is both instruction and entertainment of a varied nature, and much good humor. The subjects include "Lunch Time in Manhattan," showing the many varied ways that the New Yorker lunches; another quite unusual and interesting section shows a moonshine plant running at full blast. Ollendorff contributes clever drawings of animals which are then changed into their human counterparts. Many are remarkable but some are a little far fetched. Miss Adeline Gehrin, champion woman fencer in also shown, her work repeated in slow motion.—C. S. S.

"Henpecked Harry"

(Pathe—Cartoon—one Reel)

In this cartoon comedy distributed by Pathe, Cartoonist Terry has taken as his theme the adage that no man is a hero in his own home. The manner in which he works this out by having a henpecked dog prove a hero when he joins the police force and overcomes a notorious bully, only to be ignominiously defeated when he returns home and challenged his wife, is cleverly shown. There is a lot of clever and humorous touches and it is well up to the standard set by the previous issues in this series.—C. S. S.

"Pathe Review 179"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

It seems as if the series of "Photographic Gems" which has been running in recent issues of Pathe Review gets even finer with each issue. The ones in this number are exquisite. They depict early autumn and are indeed correctly described by the title. There is also an instructive demonstration of specific gravity of salt and fresh water by means of an egg. The color section shows beautiful Alpine scenery along the French-Italian border.—C. S. S.

"Doing 'em Good"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

Slapstick comedy with a moral is the unique combination in this Neely Edwards' subject. The comedy has a point which is achieved definitely and entertainingly. Illustrating the difference between doing good and doing one's friends in burlesque style, it shows that after many attempts in which the hero is "crowned" with success, he finally does something good for himself instead of being "done" good, by others. Violet Joy as the bathing beauty is one reason why the comedy should do well.—M. K.
